Ver. 9. Their defence is departed.—Hebrew, (literally,) "Their shadow;" a metaphor highly expressive of protection and support in the sultry Eastern countries. (See Psalm xc. 1; cxxi. 5; Isaiah xxx. 2.) The Arabs and Persians have the same word (zeel or zail) to denote the same thing, using these expressions: "May the shadow of thy prosperity be extended;" "May the shadow of thy prosperity be spread over the heads of thy well-wishers;" "At court, when mention is made of the sultan, his loftiest title, and the most esteemed, (because given to him by the kings of Persia,) is Zill-ullah, shadow of God."—Thornton's Present State of Turkey are bread for us: their defence is departed from them, and the LORD is with us: fear them not.

10 But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the LORD appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation before all the children of Israel.

11 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have showed among them?

12 I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they.

13 ¶ And Moses said unto the LORD, Then the Egyptians shall hear it, (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them;)

14 And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou LORD art among this people, that thou LORD art seen face to face, and that thy cloud standeth over them, and that thou goest before them, by day-time in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night.

15 Now if thou shalt kill all this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying,

16 Because the LORD was not able to bring this people into the land which he swore unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness.

17 And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my LORD be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, 18 The LORD is long-suffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

19 Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt even until now.

20 And the LORD said, I have pardoned according to thy word:

21 But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD.

22 Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles, which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice;

23 Surely they shall not see the land which

I swore unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that provoke me see it:

24 But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit with him, and hath followed me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his seed shall possess it.

25 (Now the Amalekites and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley.) To-morrow turn you, and get you into the wilderness by the way of the Red sea.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

27 How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against me.

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the LORD, as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you:

29 Your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me,

30 Doubtless ye shall not come into the land concerning which I swore to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

31 But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have despised.

32 But as for you, your carcasses, they shall fall in this wilderness.

33 And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness.

34 After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days (each day for a year) shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye shall know my breach of promise.

35 I the LORD have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

36 And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land, 37 Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the LORD.

It is in vain, however, to reason with a people whose "heart was fully set in them to do evil." (Eccles. viii. 11.) Their only reply to this conciliating advice, is to threaten to stone the advisers. Moses and Aaron fall, therefore, on their faces before the LORD, who threatens not only to disinherit, but also to destroy the rebels. Moses, as often before, pleads for them before the LORD—not for any merit on their part, but for his name's sake, and for the greatness of his mercy; and he pleads not in vain; they are spared, but debarred from ever entering the promised land. Joshua and Caleb, however, are excepted, and their fidelity thereby rewarded. The name of the latter, which signifies all heart, seems to have been given him for his zeal and courage. "Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the LORD." (Ps. xxxi. 24.)

Ver. 26—45. The sentence pronounced of exclusion from Canaan.—It was now, as the apostle states, that the LORD swore in his wrath, "They shall not enter into my rest;" and to whom did this refer, "but to them that believed not? Let us therefore fear," lest we also should "come short through unbelief." (Heb. iii. 11, 18.; iv. 1.) The proper improvement of melan-

Ver. 13. Moses said, &c.—(From this verse to ver. 19. inclusive, we have the words of the earnest intercession of Moses: they need no explanation; they are full of simplicity and energy. His arguments with God, for he did reason and argue with his Maker, are pointed, cogent, and respectful; and while they show a heart full of humanity, they evidence the deepest concern for the glory of God. The argumentum ad hominem is here used in the most unexceptionable manner, and with the fullest effect. He does not in the least excuse the sin of Israel, or object to the justice of the awful sentence, or argue that such conduct would not consist with the divine truth or goodness; but he pleads the appearance which it would have, and the construction which the Egyptians and other neighbouring nations would put upon it; and he further pleads the name of the LORD, and the example of his former forgiveness.)—Bagster.

Ver. 22. All those men which have seen . . . my miracles.—It should seem that the moral effect of miraculous evidence was much less than might have been expected. The people that murmured against Moses, had seen the miracles which he wrought; and our Lord himself tells us, those who believed not Moses and the prophets, would not have been "persuaded, though one had risen from the dead." Luke xvi. 31. The obduracy of the human heart can be subdued only by the grace of God.

Ver. 24. Caleb . . . hath followed me fully.—(Caleb had another spirit; not only a bold, generous, courageous, noble, and heroic spirit, but the Spirit and influence of God, which thus raised him above human ignitudes and earthly fears. Therefore he followed God fully,—literally, "and he filled after me;" God showed him the way he was to take and the line of the will of his Maker.)—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Now the Amalekites, &c.—It is difficult here to trace the connection of these words. Scott would read without the parenthesis; "The Amalekites, &c. dwell in the valley; to-morrow (therefore) turn you,"—and go back into the wilderness toward the Red sea.

Ver. 34. Breach of promise.—[Altering of my purpose.—Tenooathi, rather, my failure, or disannulling, from noo, to fail, disannul; for as they had broken their engagements, God was no longer held by his covenant.]—Bagster.

Ver. 37. Died by the plague.—That is, by a pestilence, of which we have no particulars. (Thus ten of the twelve who searched out the land were struck dead by the justice of God, on the spot. In commemoration of this event, the Jews, to this day, celebrate a fast, on the seventh day of the month Elul.)—Bagster.

38 But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, <sup>a</sup> lived still.

39 And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people <sup>b</sup> mourned greatly.

40 ¶ And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the LORD hath promised: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said, Wherefore now do ye transgress the <sup>c</sup> commandment of the LORD? but it shall not prosper.

42 Go not up, for the LORD is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies.

43 For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: <sup>d</sup> because ye are turned away from the LORD, therefore the LORD will not be with you.

44 But they presumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheless the <sup>e</sup> ark of the covenant of the LORD, and Moses, departed not out of the camp.

45 Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto <sup>f</sup> Hormah.

a drink-offering shalt thou prepare with the burnt-offering or sacrifice, for one lamb.

6 Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meat-offering two tenth-deals of flour mingled with the third part of a hin of oil.

7 And for a drink-offering thou shalt offer the third part of a hin of wine, for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

8 And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a sacrifice in performing a vow, or <sup>b</sup> peace-offerings unto the LORD:

9 Then shall he <sup>i</sup> bring with a bullock a meat-offering of three tenth-deals of flour mingled with half a hin of oil.

10 And thou shalt bring for a drink-offering half a hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD:

11 Thus <sup>j</sup> shall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid.

12 According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one according to their number.

13 All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD; as ye do, so he shall do.

15 One <sup>k</sup> ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the LORD.

16 One law and one manner shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When <sup>l</sup> ye come into the land whither I bring you,

19 Then it shall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the <sup>m</sup> land, ye shall offer up a heave-offering unto the LORD.

choly events like these, is to take heed that we fall not into the same error and the same judgment. But how perverse is human nature! though neither Moses nor Aaron, Joshua nor Caleb, could prevail upon them to go up to attack the Canaanites, no sooner are they forbidden to go, and ordered to turn back, than the next morning they rise up early to the assault; and though Moses conjures them not to go, because the Lord had left them, they persevered, and were overthrown.

But there is one expression in this part of the chapter which seems to require some explanation. We read, (ver. 34.) "Ye shall know my breach of promise," which appears to us a very improper rendering, for there is no word in the original answering to the word "promise." The text is literally, "Ye shall know my failure." In ver. 3, the rebellious Israelites had charged Jehovah with bringing them into the borders of Canaan for their destruction; the Lord says, they shall wander in the wilderness to the end of their days—some of them for forty years, reckoning from their leaving Egypt; and he says, "Ye shall bear your iniquities forty years, and ye shall know," that is, experience shall teach you the cause of my failure, that it originated with yourselves: the promise was conditional, and your conduct has released me from it. Such seems the most natural sense, and is most generally received: but it is proper to add, all the ancient versions read, "Ye shall know my indignation." Whichever sense we adopt, we may make this general remark, that the promises of God are faithful; but if we assume them to ourselves unwarrantably, and without due attention to their import, we shall find a failure, and that failure will rest invariably with ourselves. "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering: He is faithful that (hath) promised." (Heb. x. 23.)

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—41. Various offerings.—The punishment of a sabbath-breaker, and the use of fringes.—This chapter seems to have no connexion either with the preceding or following; and the different subjects, as just named, seem almost as distinct. In the former part of the chapter, little occurs but what we have in Leviticus, particularly in the 1st, 2d, and 7th chapters; only we may remark, that, the meat-offering was to be increased in quantity, in proportion to the sacrifice with which it was accompanied. The introductory remark here, however,

Ver. 44. But presumed to go up unto.—[This miserable people, a short time ago, thought that, though Omnipotency was with them, they could not conquer and possess the land! Now they imagine, that though God himself go not with them, yet they shall be sufficient to drive out the inhabitants, and take possession of their country! Man is ever supposing he can do all things, or do nothing: he is therefore sometimes presumptuous, and at other times in despair.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 3. A burnt-offering, or a sacrifice.—Most of these laws occur before, but are repeated with some additional circumstances. The reader may turn back to the law of burnt-offerings, Levit. i. 3, &c.; of vows, Levit. xxviii. 1, &c.; of free-will offerings, Levit. vii. 16; of meat-offerings, Levit. vi. 14—18; of peace-offerings, Levit. vii. 11—15; and of the heave-offerings, Exod. xxix. 27; Levit. xxiii. 15—21. Drink-offerings seem here first mentioned; but the subject is repeated, chap. xxviii.—Of the herd.—[Under the term beast, are comprehended the ox, heifer, &c.; and under beast, are included sheep and goats. The animals enjoined in the Levitical law are the very same which God commanded Abraham to offer. (Ge. xv. 9.) Hence it is evident, that God delivered to the Patriarchs an epitome of that law which was afterwards given in detail to Moses, the essence of which consisted in its sacrifices; and these sacrifices were of clean animals, the most perfect, useful, and healthy, of all that are brought under the immediate government of man. Gross feeding and ferocious animals were all excluded, as well as all birds of prey. In the Pagan worship, it was widely different; for although the ox was esteemed among them, according to Liby, as the major hostia, and, according to Pliny, the chief sacrifice, and the most availing offering which could be made to the gods,—victima optima et laudatissima decorum placito, yet obscene fowls, and ravenous beasts, according to the nature of their duties, were frequently offered in sacrifice. But in the worship of JEHOVAH, all such were declared unclean, and consequently unfit for sacrifice.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. So he shall do.—[Though an uncircumcised person might not eat the passover, they might offer other sacrifices in the appointed way, if they were so disposed. These regulations referred to sacrifices and ordinances only; not to public offices, nor to marriages.]—Scott.

Ver. 19. When ye eat.—[The obligation before prescribed seems to have been a general acknowledgment from the people at large; but this was an oblation from every one that reaped a harvest: who was required, previously to tasting it himself, to offer a portion of dough as a heave-offering to the Lord. This is supposed to have been given to the priests in their several cities, and not carried to the tabernacle.]—Bagster.

20 Ye shall offer up a cake of the <sup>a</sup> first of your dough for a heave-offering: as ye do the <sup>a</sup> heave-offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the LORD a heave-offering in your generations.

22 ¶ And if ye have <sup>a</sup> erred, and not observed all these commandments which the LORD hath spoken unto Moses,

23 Even all that the LORD hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the LORD commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations;

25 And the priest shall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and it shall be forgiven them; for it is <sup>a</sup> ignorance: and they shall bring their offering, a sacrifice made by fire unto the LORD, and their sin-offering before the LORD, for their ignorance:

26 And it shall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; seeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 ¶ And if <sup>a</sup> any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year for a sin-offering.

28 And <sup>a</sup> the priest shall make an atonement for the soul that sinneth ignorantly, when he sinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it shall be forgiven him.

29 Ye shall have one law for him that <sup>a</sup> sinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born among the children of Israel, and for the <sup>a</sup> stranger that sojourneth among them.

30 ¶ But the soul that doeth <sup>a</sup> ought <sup>a</sup> presumptuously, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

31 Because he hath <sup>b</sup> despised the word of the LORD, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off; his <sup>c</sup> iniquity shall be upon him.

32 ¶ And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered <sup>d</sup> sticks upon the sabbath-day.

33 And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.

34 And they put him in <sup>e</sup> ward, because it was not declared what should be done to him.

35 And the LORD said unto Moses, The <sup>f</sup> man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall <sup>g</sup> stone him with stones without the camp.

36 And <sup>h</sup> all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the LORD commanded Moses.

37 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

38 Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make <sup>i</sup> them fringes in the borders of their garments throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a riband of blue:

39 And it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the LORD, and do them; and that ye seek not after your <sup>j</sup> own heart and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a <sup>k</sup> whoring:

40 That ye may remember, and <sup>l</sup> do all my

(ver. 2.) is of great importance, as it applied to other offerings and regulations enjoined in this and the preceding books of Moses. It is, thus and thus shall ye do, "WHEN ye be come into the land of your habitations." (See also Levit. xiv. 34; xxiii. 10; xxv. 2.) And it answers an objection often urged against the possibility of observing rites, of which they had not the means; as for instance, the offering of wine when they had no vineyards, or first-fruits when they had no corn-fields. The LORD requires not to reap without sowing; nor could this be supplied by purchase, since the first-fruits were always to be of their own produce. The sins of ignorance here specified, and the offerings for them, are differently stated from those in Leviticus, and, perhaps, to be partly accounted for in the above way; but the law being altogether abolished, critical inquiries into its minute circumstances would now be both irksome and useless. We know the general fact, that all the sacrifices pointed to the doctrine of atonement by substitution, and so referred to that of Jesus Christ; and that all the other oblations were to inculcate another grand and important truth, that we owe all our temporal enjoyments to the goodness and mercy of God through him.

But the law respecting presumptuous sins, though obscurely hinted at, was not distinctly stated until now; and seems here introduced to preface the following history of a daring and presumptuous sinner; and his presumption, perhaps, grounded on not thinking he was guilty of violating the letter of the law; for though the law forbade to kindle fire, (Exod. xxxv. 2.) it did not expressly forbid to gather sticks. But this evasion aggravated his offence, and the open manner in which he acted, indicated contempt both of the law and the lawgiver: he was, therefore, condemned by a divine decree; and as it proceeded from him that searcheth the heart, we are well assured that it was founded in justice and in equity.

The law of fringes seems to us very extraordinary. Doth God care for fringes? certainly not. Some moral lesson must, therefore, be intended. The original term here signifies flowers, and that used in Deut. xxii. 12, cones; whence Parkhurst concludes, that they were in the form of conical flowers: perhaps the fringe was composed of threads of wool or flax tied in bunches, so as to give them that form, by a blue riband or thread of the same stuff, (for they must not wear a mixture of stuffs, Lev. xix. 19.) so as to assume the conic form. The modern Jews do not generally wear fringes; but the males wear a small under garment, (called talleth), with four tassels; and, in their public worship, a larger piece of cloth, like a shawl, made of white wool, (sometimes of camels' hair,) with a fringe or tassel at each corner, which is called by the name here used in the original Hebrew: but women, servants, or young children, are not required to use them. To form the tassels, four threads doubled are passed through an eyelet-hole, of which one must be blue, and long enough to tie five knots, and to hang even with the rest. From the number of these threads,

Ver. 22. If ye have erred.—[This law concerning sins of ignorance, being entirely diverse from one before considered, occasions considerable difficulty. (Le. iv.) Some explain that law as relating to sins of commission, this to sins of omission: others explain the one of inadvertent violations of the moral law, and the other of the transgressions of the ceremonial law: and some think that related to the whole nation, this to any one tribe; or that to the bulk of the nation, this to the rulers and elders. The Jews say, that the former law referred to such national transgressions through heedlessness, as consisted with the maintenance of the prescribed worship in the main; but that this especially respected the case of the nation, when through inattention, and the example and authority of wicked rulers, they had turned aside and committed idolatry, or conducted their worship directly contrary to law; yet through a culpable ignorance, and not in presumption. This was evidently the case under several of their kings; and the explanation seems well grounded.]

Ver. 30. Presumptuously.—[Hebrew, with a high hand: That is, bold, daring, deliberate acts of transgression against the fullest evidence, and in despite of the Divine authority. Such conduct "reproacheth the Lord," as if his commands were needless, unreasonable, and inimical to the happiness of man; his authority were only fit to be trampled under foot; his favour were not desirable, or his wrath not to be feared; in short, as if it were more advantageous to rebel against him than to serve him. Such acts admitted of no atonement: the person was condemned to bear his own iniquity, and to be cut off.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32.—While . . . in the wilderness.—This shows that little regard was paid to the order of time in these ancient records. The fact probably occurred about the time that these laws were given, and therefore preserved among them: their care was to preserve, not to arrange.—[This example seems to have been evidently introduced to illustrate the foregoing law. The man despised the word of the LORD, presumptuously broke his commandment, and, on this ground, was punished with death.]—Bagster.

Ver. 38. Make them fringes.—[The word tzitzith, properly denotes an ornament resembling a flower. From ver. 39, we learn that these were emblematical of the commands of God. That there is any analogy between a fringe and a precept, it would be bold to assert; but when a thing is appointed to represent another, no matter how different, that first object becomes the legitimate representative or sign of the other.]—Bagster.—The references to the Rabbinical customs in the Exposition, are partly from Ainsworth's Annotations, and partly from Allen's Modern Judaism. Parkhurst considers these conic fringes as emblems of light; and, secondarily, of Christ, who is the true light; but we have no evidence that the Jews considered them in that view, nor have we any such allusion, with reference to them, in the New Testament.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. 41 Fourteen thousand and seven hundred are slain by a plague for murmuring against Moses and Aaron: 46 Aaron stayeth in the plague.

NOW <sup>a</sup> Korah, the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi; and Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab; and On, the son of Peleth, sons of Reuben, took <sup>m</sup> men;

2 And they rose up before Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, <sup>b</sup> famous in the congregation, men of renown:

3 And <sup>c</sup> they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto <sup>d</sup> them, Ye take too much upon you, seeing <sup>e</sup> all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the <sup>f</sup> LORD is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the LORD?

4 And when Moses heard <sup>it</sup>, he <sup>g</sup> fell upon his face:

5 And he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, saying, Even to-morrow the LORD will show who <sup>are</sup> his, and who <sup>is</sup> <sup>h</sup> holy; and will cause <sup>him</sup> <sup>i</sup> to come near unto him: even <sup>him</sup> whom he hath chosen will <sup>j</sup> he cause to come <sup>k</sup> near unto him.

6 This do; Take you censers, Korah, and all his company;

7 And put fire therein, and put incense in them before the LORD to-morrow: and it shall be that the man whom the LORD doth choose, he shall be <sup>l</sup> holy: ye take too much upon <sup>m</sup> you, ye sons of Levi.

8 And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi:

9 Seemeth it but a small <sup>n</sup> thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath <sup>o</sup> separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself to do the service of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to <sup>him</sup>, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: and seek ye the priesthood also?

11 For which cause <sup>both</sup> thou and all thy company are gathered together against the LORD: and <sup>p</sup> what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

12 ¶ And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab: which said, We will not come up:

13 Is <sup>q</sup> it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thyself altogether a <sup>r</sup> prince over us?

14 Moreover, thou hast not brought us into a land that <sup>s</sup> floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou <sup>t</sup> put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up.

15 And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD, <sup>u</sup> Respect not thou their offering: <sup>v</sup> I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the LORD, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow:

17 And take every man his censer, and put incense in them, and bring ye <sup>w</sup> before the LORD every man his censer, two hundred and fifty censers; thou also and Aaron each of <sup>x</sup> you his censer.

18 And they took every man his censer, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moses and Aaron.

19 And Korah gathered all the congregation against them unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and <sup>y</sup> the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

and from the letters of the Hebrew word, as numerals, they form the number 613; which, they say, is "the exact number of the precepts of the law," and which apply to all the occupations and circumstances of human life. Thus these tassels, or fringes, reminded them of all the precepts of the Mosaic law. But it is probable that the original design was much more simple; it might, however, embrace the following moral points:—That the commands of God extend to the minutest circumstances of our lives; and do often include particulars, for which we see not the reason, nor have a right to demand one. It is enough that our heavenly Father commands, and that we are his children. "Seek not after your own heart or your own eyes." This was of particular importance under the Jewish economy, in which many things are even to us inexplicable; and many more, probably, were so before the period of the Gospel dispensation.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—22. The rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.—Korah, who was related to Moses and Aaron, was of the family of the Kohathites, which encamped on the south side of the tabernacle; Dathan, and Abiram, and On, were all of the tribe of Reuben, which encamped behind the family of Kohath: but as On is only mentioned in the opening of the narrative, we may hope he repented and escaped; as did also, by some unknown means, the sons of Korah, as we read ch. xxvi. 11: and their descendants became famous, as singers, in the time of David, for several of his Psalms are particularly addressed to them. The ground of this insurrection was evidently envy at the superior honour of Moses the legislator, and Aaron the high priest. They pretended that, as the people were all holy, they were all equally entitled to act as priests, and to take a share in the government. By this palatable doctrine of equality, they persuaded 250 of the princes, leading men, famous in the congregation, to join them, and a great number of the lower classes sided with them. The 250 principal persons here referred to were evidently of different tribes, (perhaps chiefly Reubenites,) who had excited popularity by their levelling principles, claiming equal rights with the house of Aaron; they fill their censers from the sacred altar in defiance of the divine prohibition, and in sight of the miraculous cloud by which it was guarded, challenge the awful issue.

The reasoning of Moses on this occasion is temperate and affectionate: "Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi;" and then he represents to them the privileges which they enjoyed in waiting upon God in the tabernacle, and the folly of aspiring to the priests' office, which had been assigned to the house of Aaron. It is by performing the duties assigned to us, and not by aspiring to those of others, that we may hope to receive the approbation of our divine Master. The conduct of Dathan and Abiram was, however, particularly insulting, not only to Moses, but to the LORD. They characterize Egypt, instead of Canaan, as the land "flowing with milk and honey;" and charge the Hebrew legislator with acting from motives of ambition and private interest, from which no man was ever more free. At this, therefore, Moses was very wroth, protested his innocence before God, and,

Ver. 14. Wilt thou put out (Hebrew, "bore out") the eyes of these men?—The meaning is, wilt thou blind these men by thine artful pretensions; thus denying the divine mission of Moses.

Ver. 15. Not taken one ass.—(Though Moses was their ruler, under God, yet, so far from oppressing them, he had not imposed the smallest tax, nor taken, as a present, so much as an ass from one of them. The common present that is now made to the great, in these countries, is a horse; but there is reason to believe, that an ass might formerly have answered the same purpose. "If it is a visit of ceremony from a bashaw," says Dr. Russell, "or other person in power, a fine horse, sometimes with furniture, or some such valuable present, is made to him at his departure." As asses were esteemed no dishonourable beasts for the saddle, Sir J. Chardin, in his MS., supposes, that when Samuel disclaimed having taken the ass of any one, (1 Sa. xii. 8.) he is to be understood of not having taken any ass for his riding. In the same light, he considers this similar declaration of Moses. His reason is, "asses being then congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1, 2. Now Korah, &c.—[As the word men is not in the text, some read "counsel;" and some, "took courage." Houbigant renders yiklach, "they rebelled;" which scarcely any rule of criticism can ever justify. Dr. Geddes' translation is, "Another insurrection was raised against Moses by Korah," &c. Others think that it may mean, "behaved with insolence." But, as Dr. A. Clarke observes, the verb yiklach, "and he took," which, though at the end of the sentence in English, is the first word in Hebrew, is not in the plural, but the singular; and hence cannot be applied to the acts of all these chiefs. In every part of the Scripture, where this rebellion is referred to, it is attributed to Korah; therefore, the verb belongs to him; and the whole verse should be translated: "Now Korah, the son of Izhar, son of Kohath, son of Levi, he took even Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, and On, son of Peleth, son of Reuben, and they rose up," &c.; reading with some MSS., the Samaritan, and Septuagint, ben, son, instead of beney, sons.]—Bagster.

22 And they <sup>a</sup> fell upon their faces, and said, O God, the <sup>b</sup> God of the spirits of all flesh, shall <sup>c</sup> one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 24 Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moses rose up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel followed him.

26 And he spake unto the congregation, saying, <sup>a</sup> Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.

28 And Moses said, Hereby <sup>a</sup> ye shall know that the LORD hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own mind.

29 If these men <sup>a</sup> die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the <sup>b</sup> visitation of all men; then the LORD hath not sent me.

30 But if the LORD <sup>a</sup> make a <sup>b</sup> new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the <sup>a</sup> pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the LORD.

31 ¶ And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them:

32 And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods.

33 They, and all that appertained to them, without imprecating any personal curse upon them, prays only that, by the rejection of their offerings, his honour and integrity might be vindicated.

The awful appeal is now made: Korah gathers his party round the door of the congregation, while the 250 daring chiefs light the censers from the sacred altar. The glory of the Lord now appears in awful splendour, and Moses and Aaron are commanded to withdraw, that the whole congregation may be consumed: but they fall upon their faces, and, like the great anti-type of Moses, plead for mercy to their enemies.

The address is here made to "the God of spirits," a plain indication that they did not consider man as composed of flesh only; and when they call him "the God of the spirits of all flesh," they also intimate that he was the God of all men, and "not of the Jews only," as St. Paul expresses it, Rom. iii. 29. This appeal to God, as the father of spirits, to pity his own offspring, and not to punish the innocent with the guilty, had the desired effect. The congregation are ordered to withdraw from the tents of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; whilst they, to show their hardihood and presumption, come and stand boldly in the door of their tents, till the earth opens and swallows them in a moment; while, at the same time, fire "from the Lord," that is, from the cloud of glory, destroys the 250 men who were offering incense within the courts.—"O God! how terrible art thou in thy works! Through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies submit themselves unto thee!" (Ps. lxi. 3.)

Ver. 23—50. The punishment of the insurgents.—On this awful event, the late learned editor of Camel very sensibly remarks:—"The history of the punishment of Korah is among the most striking instances of the divine power, exerted to esteem very honourable creatures for riding on, (ch. xxii. 21, 30. Ju. v. 10. 1 Sa. xvi. 2.) as they are at this very time in Persia, being rode with saddles."

See Harmer, Observations 1.—Bagster. Ver. 22. Spirits of all flesh.—We have a striking instance of the manner in which the Jews distinguished between flesh and spirit, in the prophecy of Isaiah, chap. xxxi. 3. "The Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses are flesh, and not spirit."

Ver. 26. Depart, &c.—[The rebels, with all that belonged to them, were, as an accursed thing, devoted to utter destruction. (Le. xxvii. 28, 29. Jos. vii. 13—15. 23—25.) The people therefore were forbidden to touch any thing belonging to them; that they might enter a solemn protest against their wickedness, acknowledge the justice of their punishment, and express their fear of being involved in it.]—Bagster went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them: and they perished from among the congregation.

34 And all Israel that were round about them, fled at the cry of them: for they said, Lest the earth swallow us up also.

35 And there came out a <sup>a</sup> fire from the LORD, and consumed the two hundred and fifty <sup>a</sup> men that offered incense.

36 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

37 Speak unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, that he take up the censers out of the burning, and scatter thou the fire yonder; for <sup>a</sup> they are hallowed.

38 The censers of these <sup>a</sup> sinners against their own souls, let them make them broad plates for a covering of the altar: for they offered them before the LORD, therefore they are hallowed: and they shall be a <sup>a</sup> sign unto the children of Israel.

39 And Eleazar the priest took the brazen censers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered; and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar:

40 To be a memorial unto the children of Israel, that <sup>a</sup> no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to offer incense before the LORD; that he be not as Korah, and as his company: as the LORD said to him by the hand of Moses.

41 ¶ But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of <sup>a</sup> Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the LORD.

42 And it came to pass when the congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation: and behold, the cloud <sup>a</sup> covered it, and the <sup>a</sup> glory of the LORD appeared.

43 And Moses and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation.

44 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, vindicate his appointments, and to destroy profligate offenders. Let the earth swallow men and their dwellings, when it opens its abysses; there is nothing in that beyond the powers of nature. When the earth trembles, those countries which are the seat of this disturbance must crumble into dust by the shock. Sicily and Italy furnish innumerable instances in proof of these assertions; yet even in these instances, though not miraculous, it is God who produces such commotions. All the works of nature are works of God. But here, while the earth is composed and tranquil, the man of God foretells the time, the place, the persons concerned, and the manner in which this prodigy should happen; and this not in Sicily, not in Italy, not in a country undermined by subterranean fires, but in the sandy desert of Arabia, where rocks probably form the general under strata, and sand the upper; where earthquakes are little known, except by report; and where little expectation of this threat's fulfilment could arise in the minds of the hearers, from general appearances, or from supposable natural causes. Yet here, at the time appointed, the earth opens her mouth, and swallows down into her profound abysses the whole company of rebels: leaving no trace of them remaining, but by the void where they had been. . . . It is good to remark here, in passing, that the greater part of the miracles wrought to establish the Jewish religion were of a terrific nature, and often involved the ruin of a multitude of transgressors: witness, this destruction of Korah and his accomplices. On the contrary, the miracles wrought in establishing the truth of the Gospel were salutary and benevolent, as well to the enemies as to the friends of religion."

After this awful catastrophe, we might very naturally expect to hear of no more insurrections in the camp; but how obdu-

Ver. 30. Make a new thing.—Hebrew, "Create a creation." It is probable this was the first earthquake, at least the first the Israelites had heard of.

Ver. 33. Went down alive into the pit.—The Hebrew reads, into Shoel, commonly rendered hell, and sometimes the grave. But we are not hence to infer the eternal perdition of all their wives and children, though little hope is to be entertained of the principal transgressors.

Ver. 41. On the morrow.—It is not unlikely, that the people persuaded themselves that Moses and Aaron had used some  cunning in this business and that the  earthquakes and  fire were artificial; for, had they discerned the hand of God in the punishment, they would scarcely have dared the anger of the Lord in the very face of his justice. And while they thus absurdly imputed this judgment to Moses and Aaron, they impiously called the persons, thus perishing in their rebellion, "the people of the Lord!"—Bagster.

45 Get <sup>v</sup> you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them as in a moment. <sup>w</sup> And <sup>v</sup> they fell upon their faces.

46 ¶ And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is <sup>v</sup> wrath gone out from the LORD; the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and behold, the <sup>v</sup> plague was begun among the people: he put on <sup>v</sup> incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he stood <sup>a</sup> between the dead and the living; and the plague was <sup>b</sup> stayed.

49 Now they that died in the plague were fourteen thousand and seven hundred, besides them that died about the matter of Korah.

50 And Aaron returned unto Moses unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the plague was stayed.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Aaron's rod flourisheth: 10 it is left for a monument against the rebels.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a <sup>a</sup> rod according to the house of their fathers, of all their princes according to the house of their fathers, twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod.

3 And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers.

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the taberna-

rate is the human heart! Not more hardened was the heart of Pharaoh himself than that of these desperate rebels. On the morrow, still persisting to lay all their calamities on Moses and Aaron, "all the congregation murmured" against them, saying, "Ye have killed the people of the Lord!" And they all gathered together against Moses and Aaron, determined, no doubt, to put down their authority, and most likely, to stone them, as they before threatened: but turning to look toward the tabernacle, they are suddenly appalled by the awful appearance of the cloud of glory.

We may note here, by the way, that when an insurrection arises on popular grounds, as was here pretended, the whole multitude appear in general to side with it; partly from the enthusiasm of the moment, and partly from the fear of singularity. Hence Moses speaks of but "one man" as the primary offender, whose eloquence and pretended patriotism had led away the multitude. We should not, however, "follow a multitude to do evil." They who unite in crime must expect to share in punishment. Wrath was now gone forth from the Lord—"the plague (whatever was its nature) was begun." And Moses, who first perceived it, directed Aaron to take a censer, to offer an atonement for the rebels. Aaron, whose life was but just now in danger from them, runs hastily into the midst of the congregation, and stands "between the living and the dead," to intercede for them. How beautiful a representation this of the conduct of our great High Priest above, who "ever liveth to make intercession for us."

"Kind Intercessor! there he stands,
And loves, and pleads, and prays."

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—13. The priesthood confirmed by miracle to Aaron. The custom of writing on rods or staves, mentioned here and in Ezek. xxxvii. 16—20, was once very common in various countries, even among our ancestors. The rods here named were the staves or sceptres of the different tribes, and were probably all cut from the almond tree: but as none of these could again bud or blossom without a miracle, the budding

Ver. 46. Plague is begun.—[God now punished them by a secret blast, so as to put the matter beyond dispute—his hand, and his alone, was seen, not only in the plague, but in the manner in which the mortality was arrested. It was necessary that these men who had perished were not "the people of the Lord," and that God, not Moses and Aaron, had destroyed them.]—Bagster.

Ver. 48. The plague was stayed.—What this plague was is not said; most likely a pestilential disease, communicated by a blast of air, and which was spreading so rapidly, that in the short time it raged, 14,700 died, beside those who had suffered the day before, by fire and earthquake.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 2. It should be done in this way. a rod.—[Metteh] a staff of office. See Gen. xlix. 10. and Note. Dr. E. Clarke, when in Sweden, saw several staves made like flat straight swords, with Runic inscriptions on both sides; and by several such as these, they formed an almanack. The ancient Britons wrote verses on their staves, which were made triangular or square, according to the metre. Similar to this was the mode of keeping accounts by tallies, (still used for milk,) and it is curious to observe, that they were used, and (it is said) still are, in the Court of Exchequer, London: the teller of the Exchequer was, in fact, the tally-keeper.

cle of the congregation before the testimony, <sup>b</sup> where I will meet with you.

5 And it shall come to pass, that the man's rod whom I shall <sup>c</sup> choose shall blossom: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, <sup>d</sup> whereby they murmur against you.

6 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, and every one of their princes gave <sup>e</sup> him a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods.

7 And Moses laid up the rods before the LORD in the <sup>f</sup> tabernacle of witness.

8 And it came to pass, that on the morrow Moses went into the tabernacle of witness; and behold, the <sup>g</sup> rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds.

9 And Moses brought out all the rods from before the LORD unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod.

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony, to be <sup>h</sup> kept for a token against the <sup>i</sup> rebels; and thou shalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.

11 And Moses did so: as the LORD commanded him, so did he.

12 And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we die, we <sup>j</sup> perish, we all perish.

of Aaron's rod gave a miraculous testimony to his claim, and so satisfactorily settled it, that it does not appear ever afterwards to have been disputed; his rod being laid up in the ark of testimony as a memorial. The effect which this had was, indeed, singular and striking. This rod being there deposited, they imagined would be fatal to them, in case any future rebellion or disturbance should arise. "Behold, we die, (say they,) we perish!—we ALL perish! Whosoever cometh any thing near the tabernacle of the Lord shall die:" but it is added, "Shall we be consumed with dying?"

On this strange alteration in the feelings and sentiments of the people, Boothroyd has the following practical observation:—"We here see the weakness and folly of this people again displayed. They lately maintained, that all the Lord's people were holy, and ought to have a right to approach the sanctuary, even the most holy place! Now, no one can come near the tabernacle, without being consumed! They are terrified, and expect to perish, if they do but draw near. Thus are men at one time guilty of rashness and presumption, and at another, of fear and trembling. Let us learn to make God our fear, so as not to offend him; but to avoid that dread, which implies a want of confidence in his mercy and kindness. Alas! what unbelief, ingratitude, murmuring, and disobedience, are we guilty of!"

But the last clause seems to us not to be sufficiently noticed by any commentators we have examined. "Shall we be consumed with dying?" The words seem to imply two distinct questions: 1. Shall we all die? They had seen Korah and his company swallowed by an earthquake, the 250 chiefs destroyed by fire from the Lord, and, subsequently, between fourteen and fifteen thousand destroyed by plague: will the Lord go on till the nation is utterly extinct? Or, 2. If we die, "Shall we be utterly consumed?"—consumed as smoke that vanisheth for ever?—Is there not here an anticipation of an hereafter. So Job, (chap. xiv. 10.) "Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" A question that should

Ver. 8. The rod of Aaron.—It has been thought, that Aaron's staff, and perhaps the staves of all the tribes, were made out of the amgdalus communis, or common almond tree. A sceptre or staff of office resuming its vegetative life, was considered an absolute impossibility among the ancients; and, as they were accustomed to swear by their sceptres, this circumstance was added to establish and confirm the oath. A remarkable instance of this we have in Homer, where Achilles, in his rage against Agamemnon, thus speaks:

"But harken: I shall swear a solemn oath:
By this same sceptre, which shall never bud;
Nor boughs bring forth, as once: which having left
Its parent on the mountain top, what time
The woodman's axe lopp'd off its foliage green,
And stripp'd its bark, shall never grow again."—Cooper's Homer

Ver. 12. We die.—[Gavano. "we expire:" it signifies not so much to die simply, as to feel an extreme difficulty of breathing, which producing asphyxiation, ends at last in death. See the folly and extravagance of this sinful people, in thus rebelling against the authority of those whom Jehovah had appointed to be their rulers.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 The charge of the priests and Levites. 8 The priests' portion; 21 the Levites' portion.
25 The heave-offering to the priests.

AND the LORD said unto Aaron, Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house with thee, shall <sup>a</sup> bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood.

2 And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou with thee, that they may be <sup>b</sup> joined unto thee, and <sup>c</sup> minister unto thee: but thou and <sup>d</sup> thy sons with thee shall minister before the tabernacle of witness.

3 And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle: only <sup>e</sup> they shall not come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary and the altar, that neither they, nor ye also, die.

4 And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the service of the tabernacle; and a stranger shall not come nigh unto you.

5 And ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the <sup>f</sup> altar; that there be no <sup>g</sup> wrath any more upon the children of Israel.

6 And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel: to you <sup>h</sup> they are <sup>i</sup> given as a gift for the LORD, to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 Therefore <sup>j</sup> thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for every thing of the altar, and <sup>k</sup> within the vail; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office <sup>l</sup> unto you as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, Be- hold, I also have given thee the charge of my <sup>m</sup> heave-offerings of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; unto thee have I given <sup>n</sup> them by reason of the <sup>o</sup> anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—32. Support of the ministry.—The office of a minister is a good work, and an important charge; and to be employed and trusted in it, to be approved faithful and made useful, is the greatest honour and favour which God ever confers upon mortal man. But it is weighty and perilous: "the iniquity of the priesthood," and "of the sanctuary" forms the most aggravated guilt, and will sink the mercenary, the careless, and the profligate minister, into the deepest condemnation; besides occasioning wrath upon the people, and dragging them down with him into destruction. All, therefore, who are thus employed, should "rejoice with trembling," and "take heed to themselves, and to their doctrine," not "entangling themselves in the affairs of this life," but considering the LORD as their Portion, the interests of godliness as their interests, and the glory of God in the salvation of souls, as their grand, their sole object. They who desire this good work should look to it, that their motives, dispositions, and qualifications are such,

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. Aaron shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary.—To counterbalance the high honour conferred on Aaron and his family, and to allay the fears and abate the envy of the people, it is here declared, that the priests must bear the blame of every thing which was not properly conducted in the sanctuary.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Joined.—[There is a fine paronomasia in the original. Levi is derived from la'ach, to join, couple, associate; hence Moses says, the Levites, gilladoo, "shall be joined," or associated, with the priests: they shall conjointly perform the sacred office, but the priests shall be principal, the Levites their associates or assistants.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. I have given the charge of mine heave-offerings.—In this and the following verses, we have the means by which the priesthood was to be supported, and its priests maintained: partly, by a certain portion of the various offerings, and partly by the first-fruits and tithes. These have been repeatedly stated in the two preceding books; and they are here reminded, that by these means, though they had no possession in the land, they had a portion of the best of every thing possessed by the other tribes.

Ver. 10. In the most holy place.—The term "most holy," is here extended to the courts of the tabernacle. See Lev. vi. 16. Ne. xiii. 5, 9. Eze. xlii. 13.

Ver. 11. The heave-offering.—Comp. Lev. ii. 1—14; vii. 29—34; xxiii. 15—21.

as may give them a reasonable ground to hope, that they will "be approved of God, as workmen that need not be ashamed;" and that the maintenance which they receive, may be indeed "for their service in the sanctuary."—On the other hand, it is the LORD's pleasure, "that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel," and be preserved from the anxieties and temptations of pinching poverty; that they may have no occasion to engage in secular business, or inducement to flatter the rich, or to be silent out of pecuniary considerations. Nay, it is his will, that they should not only have enough to maintain their families, and punctually to discharge their debts; but that they should have a surplus for pious and charitable uses, and that they should thus employ it: not luxuriously spending, or covetously hoarding it, but living themselves, and leaving their families to live, in dependance on Providence. It is therefore criminal not only to defraud, but to be niggardly, to the ministers of God, and their maintenance must not be considered as an alms or an imposition, but their just due, as the LORD's portion out of men's estates, which being withheld will pollute the enjoyment of all the rest.—Whatsoever is offered to the LORD

Ver. 16. From a month old shalt thou redeem.—[Redemption of the first-born is one of the rites, which is still practised among the Jews. According to Leo of Modena, it is performed in the following manner: When the child is thirty days old, the father sends for one of the descendants of Aaron: several persons being assembled on the occasion, the father brings a cup, containing several pieces of gold and silver coin. The priest then takes the child into his arms, and addressing himself to the mother, he says, "Is this thy son?" Mother. "Yes." Priest. "Hast thou never had another child, male or female, a miscarriage, or untimely birth?" Mother. "No." Priest. "This being the case, this child, as first-born, belongs to me." Then turning to the father, he says, "If it be thy desire to have this child, thou must redeem it." Father. "I present thee with this gold and silver for this purpose." Priest. "Thou dost wish therefore to redeem the child for this purpose." With so to do. The priest then turning himself to the assembly, says, "Very well: this child, as first-born, is mine; as it is written in Bemidbar, (ch. xvii. 16.) Thou shalt redeem the first-born of a month old for five shekels; but I shall content myself with this in exchange." He then takes two gold crowns, or thereabouts, and returns the child to his parents.]—Bagster. A feast generally follows this ceremony.

Ver. 19. It is a covenant of salt.—Salt is the great preservative from putrefaction, and therefore was made the emblem of peace and friendship. See Levit. ii. 13. and note.

' covenant of salt for ever before the LORD unto thee and to thy seed with thee.

20 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I <sup>am</sup> thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 And behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they bear sin, and <sup>die</sup>.

23 But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance.

24 But the <sup>tithe</sup> of the children of Israel, which they offer as a heave-offering unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites to inherit: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up a heave-offering of it for the LORD, even a tenth <sup>part</sup> of the tithe.

27 And this your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you, as <sup>though it were</sup> the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press.

28 Thus ye also shall offer a heave-offering unto the LORD of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; and ye shall give thereof the LORD's heave-offering to Aaron the priest.

must be of the best; and they who have him for their inheritance, will be well provided for in this world and in the next, without the embarrassments and cares which perplex others.—Let us then endeavour to know and do our own work diligently; to be contented with our daily bread, and thankful for it; to seek our inheritance and our treasure in heaven; to "set our affections on things above;" to have our conversation heavenly; to consider ourselves as "strangers and pilgrims upon earth;" and to leave the eager pursuit of earthly things to those who know no better treasures to be desired or enjoyed.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XIX. Verse 1—22. The sacrifice of the red heifer.—This sacrifice differed from all the others, in that, not only was the body burned, but the animal was slain without the camp; and the most part of the blood, with all the skin and filth, were burned with the carcass: fragrant wood, &c. being cast upon the flames. These circumstances are all calculated to suggest the idea, that this sacrifice was of a most polluted and polluting nature, and yet from the ashes of this animal is prepared the water of separation. The Jews perceive a mystery in this sa-

Ver. 20. Have no inheritance.—[The principal part of what was offered to God was the portion of the priests; who had no inheritance of land in Israel.—The Rabbin says, 24 gifts were given to the priests; all of which are expressed in the law. Eight were only ate in the sanctuary: 1. The flesh of the sin-offering, (Le. vi. 25, 26.) 2. The flesh of the trespass-offering, (Le. vii. 1, 6.) 3. The peace-offering of the congregation, (Le. xiii. 19, 20.) 4. The remainder of the sheaf, (Le. xxiii. 10.) 5. The remnants of the meat-offering, (Le. vi. 16.) 6. The two loaves, (Le. xxiii. 17.) 7. The sheave-bread, (Le. xxiv. 9.) 8. The loaf of oil offered by the leper, (Le. xiv. 10.) Five they ate only at Jerusalem: 1. The breast and shoulder of the peace-offering, (Le. vii. 31, 34.) 2. The heave-offering of confession, (Le. vii. 12—14.) 3. The heave-offering of the Nazarete's ram, (Le. vi. 17—20.) 4. The firstling, (ch. xviii. 15.) 5. The first-fruits, (ch. xviii. 13.) Five were due to them only in the land of Israel: 1. The heave-offering of first-fruits, (v. 12.) 2. Of the tithe, (ver. 28.) 3. The cake, (ch. xv. 20.) 4. The first of the fleece, (De. xviii. 4.) 5. The loaf of oil, (ch. xxv.) Five were due both within and without the land: 1. The gifts of clean beasts, (De. xviii. 3.) 2. The redemption of the first-born, (ver. 15.) 3. The lamb for a firstling, (Ex. iv. 20.) 4. That taken by violence from a stranger, (ch. v. 8.) 5. All devoted things. One was from the sanctuary, the skins, &c. (Le. vii. 8.)—Bagster.

Ver. 26. A tenth part of your tithe.—By this it appears, that the Levites, who received tithes of the people, paid tithes of their tithes unto the priests. CHAP. XIX. Ver. 2. Bring thee a red heifer.—[The following curious particulars have been remarked in this ordinance: 1. A heifer was appointed for sacrifice in opposition to the Egyptian superstition, which held these sacred, and worshipped their goddess Isis under this form; and this appears the

CHAPTER XIX.

1 The water of separation; 11 the law for the use of it.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 This is the ordinance of the law which the LORD hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, <sup>wherein is</sup> no blemish, and upon which <sup>never</sup> came yoke:

3 And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, that he may bring her forth <sup>without</sup> the camp, and one shall slay her before his face:

5 And one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her <sup>skin</sup>, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn:

6 And the priest shall take <sup>cedar-wood</sup>, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer.

7 Then the priest shall wash <sup>his</sup> clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even.

8 And he that burneth her shall wash his crifice, so deep, that, as they say, Solomon, with all his wisdom, could not penetrate it. The Gospel, however, explains this mystery: and the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews gives us a key to it in the following words; (chap. xiii. 11, 12.) "For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the High Priest for sin, are burned without the camp. Wherefore Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate." There is no doubt but this passage refers, first and principally, to the sacrifices offered on the great day of atonement, (for which see chap. xxix. 7.) but as the object of all the sacrifices was the same, and the atonement of the Gospel is one only, we are warranted to apply the sacrifice of the heifer on this occasion, in the same manner as the others.—We may remark, then, 1. That Jesus was led to be crucified loaded with the vilest charges and bitterest execrations of his enemies; and he was led without the city, (which was the same as without the camp, while in the wilderness,) even to the common place of execution for the vilest malefactors. 2. That, notwithstanding, he more likely, because males only were chosen for sacrifice. So Herodotus says, they sacrifice males, both old and young, but it is not lawful for them to offer females. 2. It was to be a red heifer, because the Egyptians sacrificed red bulls to the evil demon Typhon. 3. It was to be without spot, having no admixture of any other colour. Plutarch says, the Egyptians sacrifice red bulls, and select them with such scrupulous attention, that if the animal has a single black or white hair, they reckon it unfit to be sacrificed. 4. Without blemish. (See note on Le. xxii. 21.) 5. On which never came yoke: because an animal which had been used for a common purpose was deemed improper for sacrifice. None of the heathen would offer an animal in sacrifice which had been employed in agricultural purposes. Diomedes and Nestor vow to offer to Pallas, a yearling heifer, "which no man had yet brought under the yoke."—Bagster. Dr. Ainsworth says, the Jews have a tradition that God has descended nine times to this earth, and that he will descend a tenth time "in the age to come," i. e. the time of the Messiah. In harmony with this notion, Maimonides mentions a tradition, that nine red heifers have been sacrificed between the original delivering of this precept and the desolation of the second temple. "Our master Moses, (says he,) sacrificed the first; Ezra offered up the second; and seven more were sacrificed during the period which elapsed from the time of Ezra to the destruction of the temple; the tenth King Messiah himself will sacrifice."—Orient. Cust. No. 731.

In other sacrifices, the learned Ainsworth says, the Jews were not particular as to this circumstance; in the colour, however, they were most exact. The Rabbin says, if it had but two hairs, black or white, close together, it was rejected.

clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even.

9 And a man that is clean shall gather up the <sup>h</sup> ashes of the heifer, and lay them up with-out the camp in a clean place, and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel for <sup>i</sup> a water of separation: it is a purification for sin.

10 And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that so-journeth among them, for a statute for ever.

11 ¶ He <sup>j</sup> that toucheth the dead body of <sup>k</sup> any man shall be unclean seven days.

12 He <sup>l</sup> shall purify himself with it on the third day, and on the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean.

CHAPTER XX.

1 The children of Israel murmur for want of water. 7 Moses smiting the rock bringeth forth water at Meribah. 14 A passage through Edom is denied him. 22 Aaron resigneth his place to Eleazar, and dieth.

THEN <sup>y</sup> came the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, into the desert of Zin in the first month: and the people abode in Kadesh; and <sup>z</sup> Miriam died there, and was buried there.

2 And <sup>a</sup> there was no water for the congregation: and <sup>b</sup> they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron.

3 And the people chode with Moses, and spake, saying, Would <sup>c</sup> God that we had died when our brethren died before the LORD!

4 And why have ye brought up the congregation of the LORD into this wilderness, that we and our cattle should die there?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? <sup>d</sup> it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink.

6 And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they fell upon their faces: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.

7 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

8 Take the rod, and gather thou the assembly together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and

"All over glorious is my Lord,

Must be below'd and yet ador'd:

His world, if all the nations knew, was "without blemish," pure and undefiled. Many ingenious reasons, of a mystical nature, are given for the colour of this heifer; but, probably, the true reason was the difficulty of procuring such an animal, without a spot of white or black upon some part of it; and notwithstanding the number of red cows we have seen, perhaps we never saw one qualified for such a sacrifice. This may, therefore, point out the extraordinary, and even unique or unparalleled character of the Son of God.—3. We may remark, that execrated and abhorred as our Saviour was, from him alone can be derived either our pardon or sanctification; for it was evidently in consequence of his death, that the Holy Spirit was given for the purification and consolation of believers. Thus said Jesus to his apostles, "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." (John xvi. 7, 8.) Lastly, we may add, that since so many mysterious traits of character met in the person of Christ, we may well explore every type of the Mosaic economy with reference to him; and, after all, we shall find they fall short of fully depicting his merits or his perfections.

Ver. 9. For a water of separation.—[That is, water prepared by being mixed with the ashes of the heifer, and set apart for the special purpose of being sprinkled on those who had contracted any legal defilement. To this rite the apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, (ch. ix. 13, 14.) pointedly alludes: "For if," says he, "the blood of bulls and of goats," alluding, probably, to the sin-offerings and the scape-goat, "and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot unto God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God."—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Toucheth the dead.—[He who touched a dead beast was only unclean for one day, (Le. xi. 12, 27, 39.) but he who touches a dead man is unclean seven days. This was certainly designed to show the peculiar impurity and sinfulness of man, and the hatefulness of sin—seven times worse than the vilest animal.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. He shall purify himself.—The Hebrew literally reads, "He shall wash himself," i. e. put away sin: so, as Dr. Clarke remarks, we use the words to fleece, and to skin, for divesting an animal of its fleece or skin. We have before remarked, that the same word is also used in the original for sin, and a sin-offering, because the sin was imputed to the sacrifice.

Ver. 17. And running water.—Hebrew, "Living waters shall be given" to mix with the ashes. By living waters, the Hebrew always means, spring or river water, in distinction from rain or stagnant water.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1. Kadesh.—[Kadesh is described in ver. 16. as being on the uttermost border of the land of Edom; and Eusebius informs us, that the tomb of Miriam, in his time, was to be seen at Kadesh, near the city Petra, which was near mount Hor, on the borders of the desert of Zin.]—Bagster. This place must be distinguished from Kadesh-barnea, from whence the spies were sent, chap. xiii. 26. Kadesh means holy, and this place was so called, because here the Lord was "sanctified in them," i. e. in the children of Israel: for though Moses and Aaron dishonoured God by their want of faith and confidence, yet when the people saw the waters flow, they doubt less honoured, or "sanctified" him by their praises. Ainsworth calculates their residence here about five months.

speaking ye unto the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from before the LORD, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

12 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the LORD, and he was sanctified in them.

14 ¶ And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travail that hath befallen us:

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us, and our fathers:

16 And when we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt: and behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border:

17 Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's high-way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

18 And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword.

19 And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go by the highway: and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it: I will only, without doing any thing else, go through on my feet.

20 And he said, Thou shalt not go through And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 ¶ And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadesh, and came unto mount Hor.

23 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coast of the land of Edom, saying, 24 Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my word at the water of Meribah.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor:

26 And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there.

27 And Moses did as the LORD commanded: and they went up into mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation.

28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

terference. 3. The scene was so completely monotonous, (if we may so speak,) without variety of situation or of circumstances, that nothing called for special record. 4. As this seems to have been the period during which Moses had the most leisure; and as his mind had been schooled with affliction, and his judgment matured by experience, it is not probable that a great part of the Pentateuch was now written? The fact, however, is certain, that the history is here resumed, in the first month of the fortieth year from their coming out of Egypt. (See ch. xxxiii. 38.)

The first event to be here noted, is the station in which Israel now encamped, at Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin, which must be carefully distinguished from the wilderness of Sin, (or Seem,) in which they encamped soon after leaving Egypt. (See chap. xiii. 21., and note.)

2. The death of Miriam, who must have been now nearly 130 years of age, if not more, as she was a girl, partly grown up, when Moses was born; (Exod. ii. 4, 7, 8.), and her death is recorded in a manner as brief as that of the first patriarchs of mankind.—She “died there, and was buried.”

3. We have the renewed murmurings of the people. From the repeated commendations passed in Scripture on the children of that generation which came out of Egypt, Pres. Edwards considers them as eminently pious and obedient; (Jer. ii. 2, 3, Deut. viii. 2, 3, 15, 26.) and the silence of so many years respecting them seems to agree with this idea, since we seldom hear of Israel but either in affliction or rebellion. If, therefore,

Ver. 9. And Moses took the rod from before the Lord.—A query here arises, was the rod of Moses the same with that of Aaron, which budded? and which was laid upon the ark? Or was the rod of Moses also deposited in the most holy place? Happily the question is not important, as it does not admit of any certain resolution.

Ver. 12. Because ye believed not.—(Though the people were rebels, and Moses called them so at other times without offence, yet he evidently spoke at this time with an angry spirit. He also assumed the honour to himself and Aaron, instead of ascribing it to God: “Must we fetch you water out of this rock?” He also seems not firmly to have believed that water would be given, and did not think it sufficient simply to speak to the rock, as he was commanded; and he therefore hastily smote it twice. Thus it appears, that they neither properly believed in God, nor did him honour in the sight of the people.)—Bagster.

Ver. 17. By the king's highway.—This is the first time this phrase occurs: public roads were generally made by the military, under the supreme authority.

Ver. 18. And Edom said, &c.—This is a case by no means singular. The following occurred in modern times in the same country: “We now sent a message to Abou Zeitun, with a proposal, that if he would allow us to pass, we would not touch their water; but he returned for answer, that we should neither pass through their lands, nor drink of their water.”—Macmichel's Journey from Moscow to Constantinople. See also Orient. Customs, No. 62. Of the price of water, see Taylor's Fragments to Calmet, No. cxvii. This they were innocent, it is probable also that they were in no great trouble, since we no sooner read of their wanting water again, then we hear also of their murmuring. The great divine above quoted seems disposed to refer this, however, to the elders of the former generation, and it is certain they were always active in exciting such discontents, though we have no authority for confining the blame to them alone, of whom but few now survived.

The want of water in travelling, especially with flocks and herds, is a much more serious evil than we can well conceive of; and we must confess, that the best of us are often excited to murmuring and discontent by afflictions, or inconveniences, of far less magnitude. But if the rock (or rather water from the rock) followed them through the wilderness, how came they now at such a loss for water? Dr. Wall seems to have satisfactorily explained this. He supposes the water followed them, while the country continued on a gradual descent, through a great part of their encampments; but having now come to higher ground on the borders of Caanan, they felt the same want of water as before; and, unfortunately, had again recourse to murmuring instead of prayer.

Moses and Aaron were equally unhappy in their course: for, instead of resting the matter with the Lord, and adhering simply to their orders, they, and particularly Moses, fell into a rage with the people, and, as it should seem, with the rock too; for he called them rebels, and struck the rock repeatedly; instead censure on Edom applies only to the inhabitants about Kadesh; those of mount Seir, it seems, acted more liberally. See Deut. ii. 29.

Ver. 22. Mount Hor.—[Mount Hor was situated in Arabia Petraea, on the confines of Edom. It is described by Burckhardt (in a letter to the Secretary of the African Institution, and Travels in Syria,) as being situated on the western side of a valley called Wady Mousa; in which are found the ruins of the ancient Petra, and which is two long days' journey north-east of Accaba, (on the northern point of the Eilat Gulf of the Red sea,) in the Djebel Spera, or mount Seir, and on the east side of the Arabia, the valley which forms the continuation of that of the Jordan. On the summit of the mountain is the tomb of Hazezon, or Aaron, which is held in great veneration by the Arabs; which agrees with the testimonies of Josephus, Eusebius, and Jerome, all persons well acquainted with these countries, who agree in proving that the sepulchre of Aaron, in mount Hor, was near Petra. When visited by Legh, it was attended by a crippled Arab hermit, about 80 years of age, who conducted them into a small white building, crowned by a cupola, that contains the tomb of Aaron. The monument is of stone, about three feet high; and round the chamber where it stood were suspended beads, &c. the votive offerings of the devotees.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Against my word.—Hebrew, “my mouth.” It is used properly for a verbal command, as Gen. xiv. 21. Exod. xvii. 1, &c.

Ver. 26. And strip Aaron.—Eleazar was ordained by being invested with his father's sacerdotal robes.

29 And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Israel destroys the Canaanites at Hormah. 4 The people murmuring are plagued with fiery serpents. 7 They repenting are healed by a brazen serpent. 10 Sundry journeys of the Israelites. 21 Sihon is overcome, 33 and Og.

AND when king <sup>a</sup>Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, heard tell that Israel came by the <sup>b</sup>way of the spies; then he fought against Israel, and took some of them prisoners.

2 And Israel <sup>c</sup>vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will <sup>d</sup>utterly destroy their cities.

3 And the Lord <sup>e</sup>hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities: and he called the name of the place <sup>f</sup>Hormah.

5 And the people <sup>j</sup>spake against God, and against Moses, Wherefore <sup>k</sup>have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither <sup>l</sup>is there any water; and our soul loatheth this light bread.

6 And <sup>m</sup>the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died.

7 ¶ Therefore <sup>n</sup>the people came to Moses, and said, We have sinned, for we have <sup>o</sup>spoken against the Lord, and against thee; <sup>p</sup>pray unto the Lord, that he take away the serpents from us. And Moses <sup>q</sup>prayed for the people.

8 And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live.

9 And Moses made a <sup>r</sup>serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

10 ¶ And the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in <sup>s</sup>Oboth.

12 From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of <sup>u</sup>Zared.

of speaking to it, as he was commanded. Besides this, he is thought to have arrogated too much to himself and to Aaron, when he said, "Ye rebels, must ye fetch you water out of this rock?" This may seem a little thing for the Lord to have been offended with; but the fact is, we have no right to mix up our corrupt passions with our religious duties. Preachers are not authorized to scold their hearers, but to "exhort with all meekness;" and Moses especially, as he acted in the twofold character of prophet and mediator, ought certainly to have preserved his accustomed meekness. In the former instance, he was commanded to smite the rock, "and he did so:" (Exod. xvii. 6.) but in this he was commanded to speak to the rock, instead of which he smote it twice; evidently discovering great perturbation of mind, for which both he and Aaron (who evidently acted in concert with him) were excluded from the earthly Canaan, though certainly not from the better country which that typified. From the like contention with the people having occurred here as at the rock of Horeb, the place received the same name, Meribah; but to distinguish it from the former, it is sometimes called Meribah Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin. (Deut. xxxii. 51.)

4. Another incident which occurs in this chapter relates to Edom, (the country of Esau,) to the king of whom Moses sent a very respectful message, requesting leave to pass through his land, and engaging neither to injure their fields or vineyards, nor even to drink of their wells; but he was refused with haughtiness, and with threats of destruction, if Israel dared to touch their borders; a conduct very different from that of their great ancestor, who, in the latter part of his life, treated their father, Israel, with great courtesy and hospitality. (Gen. xxxiii.)

5. The last incident we have here to notice is the death of Aaron, who was forbidden to enter the land of promise, but was privileged to see his son appointed his successor; and, at a good old age, to lie down and die in peace: he was also honoured with a general mourning.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1-15. The Canaanites devoted—The fiery and brazen serpents.—A rumour respecting their land being given by Jehovah to the Israelites, and also of the errand of the spies to search it out, having been circulated among the Canaanites, one of their princes, the king of Arad, (see Note) determined to attack them first, and so far succeeded as to take some prisoners. On this, the people made a solemn vow, (founded on the law in Levit. xxviii. 29.) that they would devote both them and their cities to utter destruction, according to the divine decree; and therefore called the name of the place Hormah, which means a place thus devoted. It does not appear, however, that their destruction was at this time accomplished, for the kings of Arad and of Hormah are both reckoned among those destroyed by Joshua and his army. (Josh. xii. 14.) At present, it should seem, the Israelites were content with repelling the aggression, and, perhaps, recovering their prisoners, and then marched on to compass the land of Edom. But here, we are told, the people were much "discouraged," or "grieved," on account of the way. They perhaps had thought that, by passing straight through Edom, they should come immediately to the land of promise; but this being refused them, by going round that country their journey was much lengthened, and at the same time, probably, very rugged. But this was not the worst; they were also again straitened for bread and water, and their soul loathed the manna from heaven, which they contemptuously denominated "light bread;" that is, unnutritive and unsubstantial food.

This, of course, offended their heavenly benefactor, and provoked him to deliver them up to the serpents of the wilderness, which are stated by respectable travellers to be both numerous and very fatal. They are said to be fiery serpents, but whether this alludes to their brilliant fiery colour, or to the inflammatory consequences of their bite, interpreters are not agreed; both may very consistently be included. By these means many of the people died, and the rest were brought to repentance. But the remedy appointed for the disease hereby inflicted, more immediately calls for our attention. A serpent of brass is directed to be made, in form and colour similar to the animals by which they had been stung; this is ordered to be elevated to a considerable height, upon a pole; and the remedy is by an earnest, repentant, and believing view of this harmless and inoffensive serpent, to heal the effects occasioned by the sting of the fiery ones.

Ver. 5. This light bread.—Ha-kalkal, "a word of excessive scorn."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 6. Fiery serpents.—The Hebrew is, "The serpents, the seraphim," or seraphim serpents. The root seraphim (or seraph) certainly signifies to burn, or glow, like fire: and hence that word is applied to "the burning spirits which surround the throne" of Deity. These serpents might receive that name, either from the burning inflammation which they occasioned, or from their fiery colour and appearance; and it is not improbable that both qualities may unite in the same serpent. From these animals being called seraphs, and being described with wings, (Isa. vi. 2.) it has also been concluded that they were flying serpents; for this, however, we have no authority in the text, and the present existence of such animals seems doubtful; those which have been so considered, according to Rosenmüller, are a kind of lizards, with wings like bats. Herodotus, however, mentions creatures of this kind, which he says, were destroyed in multitudes by the Ibis. See Harris' Nat. History of the Bible.

Ver. 9. A serpent—literally, a seraph—of brass.—This image was, no doubt, made in the form of the fiery serpents, and erected on one of the long poles used for standards. That the serpent in itself could possess no healing power, is sufficiently obvious; and is well expressed by the author of the apocryphal book Wisdom, who remarks, chap. xvi. 7. "He that turned himself towards it was not healed by the thing which he saw; but by thee, who art the Saviour of all."

Ver. 11. Oboth.—[Probably Oboda, a city of Arabia Petraea, mentioned by Ptolemy. Pliny assigns it to the Helmodians; but Stephanus to the Nabatheans. —Bagster.—Ije-abarim.—Margin, "The heaps of Abarim;" either

9 And God came unto Balaam, and said, What men are these with thee?

10 And Balaam said unto God, Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me, saying, 11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: come now, curse me them; peradventure I shall be able to overcome them, and drive them out.

12 And God said unto Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed.

13 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land: for the Lord * refuseth to give me leave to go with you.

14 And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said, Balaam refuseth to come with us.

15 ¶ And Balak sent yet again princes, more, and more honourable than they.

16 And they came to Balaam, and said to him, Thus saith Balak the son of Zippor, Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me:

17 For I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: <sup>m</sup> come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people.

18 And Balaam answered and said unto the sent, as was before sent, to Edom, requesting leave to pass through their country; and no other answer appears to have been returned than the sending out an army to attack the Israelites: the Lord gave the victory to the latter, who defeated these Amorites, and took possession of their land. It appears, however, that Sihon, who was thus defeated and dispossessed, had taken this land from a former king of Moab. Thus have we here a striking instance of the righteous retribution of Providence; the violence which he had offered to the Moabites is here returned upon his own head; and that which he had plundered from Moab is now taken by Israel. Great and mysterious are the ways of Providence; but the Scriptures sometimes, as in this instance, admit us, as it were, behind the scenes, and, by such discoveries, "vindicate the ways of God to man."

Another piece of ancient poetry is here inserted, which was probably composed by some Moabitish patriot, one who spoke in proverbs, that is, a poet, lamenting the misfortunes of his country, and is here cited to prove the fact referred to. So St. Paul quotes the heathen poets against idolatry. (Acts xvii. 28.) On the character of Og, king of Bashan, and the signal victory obtained over him, we shall have farther occasion to advert. As to the ferocious character of these wars, which were generally wars of extirpation, and the employment of Israel as agents in the hand of Jehovah, and messengers of the divine justice, particularly on the Canaanites, we shall reserve our observations on this subject to our introduction of the following book, Deuteronomy. At present we shall only quote the song of angels on a like occasion: "Thou art righteous, O Lord, because thou hast judged thus:—even so, Lord God Almighty! true and righteous are thy judgments." (Rev. xvi. 6, 8.)

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1–21. Balak sends for Balaam, who is allowed to go to him conditionally.—It is very natural that Balak should be alarmed at the progress of the Israelites, and in perfect consistence with his character, as a pagan prince, that he should send for a prophet, like Balaam, to curse his enemies, for it is certain, that it was common with the heathen, before attacking a hostile nation, to invoke their supposed protecting deities, and to imprecate on their enemies all manner of evils. Balaam, too, seems exactly the character Balak might be expected to apply to. Being originally a prophet of Jehovah, he had acquired celebrity by the accomplishment of his predictions; but being ambitious of wealth, as well as fame, he had united to this the very inconsistent profession of a necromancer, or diviner; and had, probably, been previously employed by other kings to anathematize their enemies.

In Balaam himself, we have a striking instance of the conflict between knowledge and principle, on the one hand, and the master passions of ambition and avarice on the other. He must know that Israel were the descendants of Abraham, "the friend of God;" he knew, also, it was in vain for him to curse whom God had blessed: and that if he attempted it, he was in danger of being struck dead in a moment: he knew, farther, that if he did not curse Israel, he was in danger of exasperating Balak to destroy him; and yet, in the face of all these dangers, such was his love to the "wages of iniquity," that he had a strong propensity to go. Perhaps he might not be required to bless Israel; perhaps he might be allowed to deliver some equivocal oracle, which might not offend the Lord, and yet flatter Balak; perhaps his evident desire to please the king might procure promotion, though he was not able to go the length required; perhaps, even, though he did bless Israel, he might be able to introduce a curse into their camp more potent than his anathemas: this last proved to be the case. It cost the lives of 24,000 Israelites, and afterwards the life of the wicked prophet himself, as we shall see in a following chapter.

But how does it appear that Balaam wished to go? Did he not, in the first instance, refuse to go? He did; till the king sent more honourable messengers, with promises of greater reward: then, though he knew he had been forbidden, and that the design was in opposition to the divine will, yet he entreats them to stop a night with him, that he might try to obtain permission. But did he not obtain leave before he went? He did so; but mark the condition: "If the men come to call thee, CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1. The plains of Moab.—"They had taken no part of the country that at present appertained to the Moabites, only what had been taken from them by the Amorites.—On this side Jordan, by Jericho."—That is, opposite to it. Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 5. Pethor.—[Dr. Kennicott justly remarks, that "the description now given of Balaam's residence, instead of being particular, agrees with any place, in any country where there is a river—for he lived by Pethor, which is by the river of the land of his people." But was Pethor, then, near the Nile in Egypt? Or in Canaan, near Jordan? Or, in Mesopotamia, near the Euphrates, and belonging to the Ammonites? This last was in fact the case; and therefore, it is well that twelve Hebrew MSS. (with two of De Rossi's) confirm the Samaritan text here, in reading, instead of ammo, "his people," Ammon, with the Syriac and Vulgate versions." Howbanti justly contends for this reading; and necessarily urges the propriety of adopting it; and it thus agrees with De. xxiii. 4. Ptolemy calls Pethor, Pachura, and Eusebius, Pathura; and places it in upper Mesopotamia. Calmet is of opinion, that it was situated towards Thapsacus, beyond the Euphrates.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Curse me this people.—It is, to be sure, a mere conjecture, and as such is offered; but might not this man have been previously employed by Sihon, king of the Amorites, to curse the Moabites under Balak's predecessor? If so, Balak would very naturally attribute the victory gained by Sihon to this cause; and knowing that reward was Balaam's primary object, he might justly conclude he would curse whomsoever he was paid for cursing. Dr. Clarke remarks that Macrobias has a whole chapter on the incantations used on such occasions, from which he gives two examples. The Romans held, that no city should, or could be taken, till its tutelary deities were withdrawn; and the Greeks, from the same principle, employed all their artifice to steal the Palladium from Troy.—See Clarke's Comment.

Ver. 15. And Balaam sent yet again, &c.—A respectable traveller in the East says, "Men of consequence in the city at different intervals presented themselves; and as we proceeded, two of the brothers of the Ameen-ad-dovlah, arrayed in brocade coats, with shawls round their caps, paid their respects to the ambassador. This succession of personages, whose rank increased as we approached the city, may bring to mind the princes, more and more honourable, which Balak sent to Balaam, Numb. xxii. 15.—Morrier's second Journey through Persia, p. 129.

servants of Balak, "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, ° I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD my God, to do less or more.

19 Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the LORD will say unto me more.

20 And ° God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him, If the men come to call thee, rise up, and go with them; but ° yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do.

21 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.

22 ¶ And God's anger was kindled because he went: and ° the angel of the LORD stood in the way for an adversary against him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him.

23 And the ass ° saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field: and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way.

24 But the angel of the LORD stood in a path of the vineyards, a wall being on this side, and a wall on that side.

25 And when the ass saw the angel of the LORD, she thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall: and he smote her again.

26 And the angel of the LORD went farther, and stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left.

27 And when the ass saw the angel of the LORD, she fell down under Balaam: and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with a staff.

28 And the LORD ° opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?

29 And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in my ° hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ° ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever ° since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay.

31 Then the LORD ° opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and he ° bowed down his head, and ° fell flat on his face.

32 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ° ass these three times? behold, I went ° out to withstand thee, because thy ° way is ° perverse before me:

33 And the ass saw me, and turned from me these three times: unless she had turned from me, surely now also I had slain thee, and saved her alive.

34 And Balaam said unto the angel of the LORD, ° I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, if it ° displease thee, ° I will get me back again.

35 And the angel of the LORD said unto Balaam, ° Go with the men: but ° only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak: so Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

36 ¶ And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost coast.

37 ¶ And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

38 And Balaam said unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: have I now any power at all to say any thing? the ° word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.

39 And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kirjath-huzoth.

40 And Balak offered oxen and snoop, any sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the ° high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people.

arise and go:" but instead of waiting for their calling, he rose up in the morning, as it should seem, to call them; and such, we shall see as we proceed, was his conduct all through the business. But what is the proper improvement of this awful narrative, so far as we have proceeded? St. Paul will tell us—"They that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil." (1 Tim. vi. 9, 10.)

Ver. 22-41. Balaam opposed by an angel, and reproved by an ass.—We now come to a part of Scripture that has, perhaps, provoked more infidel ridicule than any other; but let us examine it dispassionately. In the first place, Balaam himself is no object of ridicule, merely because he was mounted upon an ass; for, much as we despise these oppressed animals, they were formerly "for the king's household to ride on;" (2 Sam. xvi. 2.) It is the man, and not the ass, that excites our contempt. In the first place, the ass saw more than the prophet: she saw the forbidding angel, and turned aside; and when she could no more turn aside, fell down: nothing could prevail upon her to go forward in opposition to the angel: thus she "forbade the madness of the prophet." (2 Pet. ii. 16.) But the ass spoke! True; and this fact is sufficiently accounted for by the historian telling us, "God opened the mouth of the ass." But, perhaps, this was not a greater miracle than his opening the eyes of the prophet, who was as little able to see the angel, as the ass herself was to reason with her master. The fact is, he that made man's mouth, made also the mouths of animals; and he that opened the eyes of the ass to see the angel, wrought the same effect upon the prophet. Perhaps had the animal been a fox or an elephant, the narrative might not have appeared so incredible. But if Satan had given speech to a serpent, (Gen. iii. 1.) surely the Lord might give it to an ass. If we allow the Almighty to work one miracle, we cannot stay his hand, and say, "Hitherto shalt thou go, but no farther." All events, not implying an absolute contradiction, are equally practicable to him who gave laws to nature.

The angel here spoken of is, doubtless, the Angel of the covenant, who appeared so often to the fathers. Twice had the Lord appeared to Balaam in his dreams, and was recognised; now he appears in open day, and is unseen by him, till the scales are taken from his eyes; for it appears that supernatural, like spiritual objects, require our eyes to be prepared for them. Balaam's mind, probably, was so occupied with his hopes of preferment and reward, and was so enraged by the hindrance of his journey, that he was insensible to all other objects, and sinks apparently much below the animal he rode, who calmly reasons, while he rages with passion. The injured beast reproves his master for cruelty, and hints that he ought to have reflected, that there must be some extraordinary circumstance

Ver. 22. Because he went.—But was he not told to go? This, in no case, amounted to more than permission; "Go if you please!" But it was, his promptness in going without being called, that is considered to have given offence. The Arabic inserts here, "He went with a covetous disposition." Compare 2 Pet. ii. 15.—Boothroyd.

Ver. 31. The Lord opened the eyes of Balaam.—Hebrew, "Uncovered the eyes;" so Amos vi. 1. So Hagar's eyes were opened. (Gen. xxi. 19.) The heathen, also, were strongly impressed with the necessity of man's eyes being opened, to discover divine and spiritual objects. See Oriental Customs, No. 735.

Ver. 41. High places, &c.—Bamoth baal, "the high places of Baal," probably the same as Bamoth mentioned in ch. xxi. 19, 20.; and, if not the same, yet evidently not far from Baal-meon, in the mountains of Abarim: for the Israelites were now encamped in the plains of Moab, which these mountains overlook. Baal, which signifies a lord, or governor, was a name common to many idols; and probably here was the same as Chemosh, the god of Moab.]—Baxter.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1, 15, 28 Balak's sacrifice. 7, 18 Balaam's parable.

AND Balaam said unto Balak, "Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven oxen and seven rams.

2 And Balak did as Balaam had spoken; and Balak and Balaam offered on every altar a bullock and a ram.

3 And Balaam said unto Balak, "Stand by thy burnt-offering, and I will go: peradventure the Lord will come to meet me: and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee. And he went to a high place.

4 And God met Balaam: and he said unto him, I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram.

5 And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.

6 And he returned unto him, and lo, he stood by his burnt-sacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab.

7 ¶ And he took up his parable, and said, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, Come, curse me Jacob, and come, defy Israel.

8 How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations.

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!

11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast blessed them altogether.

12 And he answered and said, Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth?

13 And Balak said unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them: thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all: and curse me them from thence.

14 ¶ And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

15 And he said unto Balak, Stand here by thy burnt-offering, while I meet the Lord yonder.

16 And the Lord met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, and said, Go again unto Balak, and say thus.

17 And when he came to him, behold, he stood by his burnt-offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him, What hath the Lord spoken?

which occasioned his disobedience; and that should have led him to inquire of his conscience, whether the impediments in his way ought not to have checked his course. It should seem, that Balaam was as insensible to the miracle of the ass speaking, as he was to the glory of the angel, who now appears and explains the mystery. He also reproves the prophet for his cruelty and want of feeling; and tells him, in language which shows he could not be a mere created angel, "Thy way is perverse before me:" by which he meant, not to censure him for the act of going, but his "way" in a moral sense, his present disposition of mind—his being ready to curse even the Lord's people for reward; this his way was his folly and his sin. (See Ps. xlix. 13.) As to his going to Balak, that is still permitted; but by this enigmatical circumstance of the ass speaking with man's mouth, he is taught that he is to be merely the mouth of God; not speaking his own words, but such as should be put into his mouth, even as the words of the animal had been put into his mouth. And here, perhaps, we may be allowed to remark, that when a wicked man delivers the word of God, it is merely in this way; while the words of God are put into the heart of a good man, and are delivered from the treasury of his heart. (Matt. xii. 35.)

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—13. Balaam's first prophecy.—The close of the preceding chapter informs us, that Balak no sooner heard of Balaam's approach, than he began to offer sacrifices to his god's in honour of his arrival. The next day, he takes him up into the high places of Baal, where he might see the whole extent of the camp of Israel. Here the prophet requires seven altars, (probably of turf,) and on each altar a bullock and a ram was offered; and as they were offered by Balaam with a view to propitiate the true God, there can be little doubt that they were offered to the God of Israel, because he says, "Peradventure Jehovah will come to meet me."

He offered seven bullocks and seven rams, (that number in Hebrew signifying sufficiency, or perfection,) upon as many altars, and then retired alone into a solitary cliff of the rock, where the Lord met with him, (probably in human form,) and put a word into his mouth, which he was charged to deliver to the king. He, therefore, returned to Balak, and delivered it in the usually eloquent and poetical strain of the Jewish prophets. He predicts the vast increase of the nation, in fulfilment of the original promise to Abraham, that his seed should be as the dust and as the sand; and, at the same time, that the people should always "dwell alone," and never be "reckoned among the (other) nations;" a prediction which has been fulfilled in the most remarkable manner; for never have they been mingled, so as to coalesce either with any nation which they have conquered, or by which they have been subdued. But the prophet's concluding words respecting himself are not less worthy of observation: "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!" In this verse, it has been generally thought that, under the reproaches of a guilty conscience, the wicked prophet referred to his own unhappy case. We have here, as Bishop Butler remarks, the astonishing sight of "a wicked prophet, under a deep sense of God and religion, persisting still in his wickedness, and preferring the wages of unrighteousness, even when he had before him a lively view of death, and that approaching period of his days, which should deprive him of all the advantages for which he was prostituting himself; and likewise a prospect, whether certain or uncertain, of a future state of retribution! All this, joined with an explicit wish, that when he was to leave the world, he might be in the condition of a righteous man!"

"O let me die the death!" the prophet cries:
"Then live his life," the sacred word replies.

Ver. 14—30. Balaam's second prophecy.—The wickedness of Balaam is only to be equalled by the folly and weakness of his employer, Balak, who takes the prophet from one high place to another, under the forlorn hope, (for he could scarcely expect it,) that one aspect of the camp might be more favourable to his wishes than another. Perhaps the prophet, also, was anxious to convince his employer of his disposition to oblige him, if it were possible; but he reasons with him on the impossibility of his reversing the decrees of heaven, or cursing those whom the Almighty had resolved to bless. He was willing, indeed, to move from place to place, wherever the monarch should require, to offer sacrifices and seek enchantments; but, as a prophet, he could not, and, for his life, he dare not, utter a word that was not put into his mouth by the Spirit of God. "Behold, (said he) I have received commandment to bless: and he hath blessed; and I cannot reverse it. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel."

These last words require our particular attention, as they have been quoted very perversely, to prove, that the Lord, like a weak and fond parent, sees no evil in the conduct of his own people, however wicked it may be; a sentiment as opposite to reckoned among the nations:—they have been preserved from being confounded with their conquerors and oppressors in foreign lands, in a manner absolutely unprecedented in the annals of the world.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Who can count the dust of Jacob?—This evidently refers to the promise made to Abraham, Gen. xii. 16.—And number the fourth part of Israel.—This refers to the camp being square, and divided into four parts. (See the Plate.)—Let my latter end be like his!—The original term here rendered "latter end," it must be admitted, sometimes signifies posterity, as in Da. xi. 4. Amos v. 2, &c. But it also signifies the end of any thing, as opposed to its beginning, as in Deut. xi. 12. Prov. xix. 20. And the nature of the Hebrew parallelisms, as well as the sense of the context, seems to require that sense here. See Dr. Boothroyd.

Ver. 11. Blessed them altogether.—The Hebrew reads, (according to a common idiom,) "Blessing thou hast blessed," i. e. altogether and entirely blessed; without the admixture of a single curse, or any abatement in the blessing.

18 And he took up his parable, and said, * Rise up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor:

19 God † is not a man, that he should lie: neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath ‡ he spoken, and shall he not make it good?

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Balaam prophesieth the happiness of Israel: 15 he prophesieth of the Star of Jacob, and the destruction of some nations.

AND when Balaam saw that it pleased the LORD to bless Israel, he went not, as at other † times, to seek for enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness.

2 And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel abiding in his tents according to their tribes, and † the Spirit of God came upon him.

3 And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the † man whose eyes are open hath said:

4 He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, his own declarations, as to the interests of morals and religion. On the contrary, he saith, "Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying, You only have I known (or acknowledged) of all the families of the earth: THEREFORE I will PUNISH you for all your iniquities." (Amos 1. 1, 2.) The Lord corrects his children, but only for their good: when he corrects he forgives, and loves them still; not, indeed, for their own, but "for the fathers' sakes;" and because he would keep the oath "sworn unto their fathers." (Rom. xi. 28. Deut. vii. 8.) This was under the old dispensation: under the new, there is another name, "which is above every name;" for if God forgives us, it is "for Christ's sake." (Ephes. iv. 32.) The obvious meaning of this text we, therefore, conceive to be, God seeth "no iniquity in Jacob," because he hath forgiven them, and "cast their sins into the depth of the sea." (Micah vii. 18, 19.) from whence they shall never rise to condemn them; nevertheless, he is so far from conniving at, or tolerating their sins, that he saith, if they "forsake my law, I will visit their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquity with stripes;" and wherefore? The apostle Paul answers, "We are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." (Psalm lxxxix. 32.; 1 Cor. xi. 32.)

It then follows, "God brought THEM out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of a unicorn." Israel being a collective noun, agrees both with singular and plural pronouns: and that Israel is here meant, and not God, (which would seem an indecorous image,) we may learn from the parallel passage (ver. 8.) in the next chapter. Israel, which came out of Egypt weak and helpless, was now grown to the strength of the reem, generally translated unicorn, but which we have now reason to believe is the large species of rhinoceros, with a long horn in his front, and a small one behind, and is an animal of prodigious strength. "Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, nor any divination against Israel: according to (or respecting) this time it shall be said, What hath God wrought!" That is, this event, in which an enemy has been constrained to bless them, in opposition to his own interest, and in the face of a mighty and enraged monarch, Balak, this shall be considered as the overruling hand of God.

We live not in an age of miracles; yet there are few of us but have met with circumstances calling for the like admiration of the providence and grace of God. We ought often to stop to put the inquiry, What hath God wrought for us? and in that case we should often find occasion to turn the question into a note of admiration, and even a song of praise.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—14. Balaam farther predicts the prosperity of Israel.—We have here a full disclosure of the hypocrisy of Balaam. "And when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord (who doeth whatsoever pleaseth him) to bless Israel, he went not, as at other times, to seek enchantments," or omens, as some render it. So, then, all his pretences to meet the Lord were hypocritical: and it is very possible that men may still pretend to seek the Lord, when they are seeking their own interests, or their own gratification. But the Lord met with him when he sought him not, put words into his mouth, as he did into the mouth of his ass, and compelled him, again and again, to utter a blessing, as contrary to his wishes as to his worldly interest. But it was hard to "kick against the pricks," as others beside Balaam have found it, and he was, therefore, compelled to give up the contest; and being overpowered by the spirit of prophecy, he thus began: "Balaam the son of Beor hath said; the man whose eyes had been hitherto closed, but were now opened." Covetousness and ambition had long made him blind to his own best interests, and to his clearest duty. It is much to be feared, that many are so blinded by their covetousness and their lusts, that their eyes are never opened till they "lift them up in torment." (Luke xvi. 23.) But let us pray with the Psalmist, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may see wondrous things out of thy law!" (Psalm cxix. 18.)

Ver. 22. The strength of a unicorn.—[The reem, most probably denotes the rhinoceros, so called from the horn on its nose. In size he is only exceeded by the elephant; and in strength and power, inferior to none. He is at least twelve feet in length, from the snout to the tail; six or seven feet in height; and the circumference of the body is nearly equal to his length. He is particularly distinguished from all other animals by the remarkable and offensive weapon he carries on his nose; which is very hard horn, solid throughout, directed forward, and sometimes four feet in length. There are also some with two horns; a smaller one being placed above the other. He is perfectly indolent and untractable; though neither ferocious nor carnivorous. He neither disturbs the less, nor fears the greatest beast of the forest. He principally feeds upon large succulent plants, prickly shrubs, and branches; is fond of wallowing in the mire, and delights in marshy places.]—Balaam's

A remarkable animal has been discovered in Southern Africa, by Campbell, of the London Missionary Society. The Hottentots who shot the creature never having seen nor heard of an animal with a horn so great a length, cut off its head, and brought it bleeding on the back of an ox to Campbell. He would gladly have transported the whole of it with him to Europe, but its great weight, and the distance of the spot (the city of Mashow) from Cape Town, about 1200 miles, determined him to reduce it, by cutting off the under-jaw. (The rest is to be seen at the Missionary Museum, Austin Friars, London.) The head measured, from the ears to the nose, three feet; the length of the horn, which is nearly black, is also three feet, projecting from the forehead, about ten inches above the nose. There is a small horny projection, of a conical shape, measuring about eight inches, immediately behind the great horn, apparently designed for keeping fast, or steady, whatever is penetrated by the great horn. This projection is scarcely observed at a little distance. The animal is not carnivorous, but chiefly feeds on grass and bushes. It is well known in the kingdom of Mashow, the natives of which make from the great horn handles for their battle-axes. It appears to be a species of rhinoceros; but judging from the size of its head, it must have been much larger than the common rhinoceros of Southern Africa, which has a large crooked horn, nearly resembling in shape the cock's spur, pointing backward, and a short one of the same form, immediately behind it. Campbell was very desirous to obtain as adequate an idea as possible of the bulk of the animal killed near Mashow, and, with this view, questioned the Hottentots; who described it as being much larger than the rhinoceros, and equal in size to three oxen, or four horses.]—See Orient. Lit. No. 305.

Ver. 23. What hath God wrought!—This is a note of great admiration. When Baron De Tott was in Turkey, firing cannon at a mark, he happened to hit the centre of the butt, which seemed to them so extraordinary, that they exclaimed, Machalla! i. e. What has God done! as considering the circumstance miraculous. See Harmer's Obs.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. To seek for enchantments.—Hob. "To the meeting of enchantments," or omens, as Dr. Boothroyd (after the LXX.) renders it; meaning augury by means of birds. Now it should be recollected, that all the remarks in which Balaam offered sacrifices, were the tops of mountains, or rocks, where the eagle is wont to make her nest. (See ver. 21.) Now the eagle, when lively, and sporting about the air, was esteemed one of the best omens that the gods could give; therefore king Priam begs Jupiter to assure him of his protection, by sending to him his beloved bird, the eagle. It may farther be remarked, that the Hebrew Rechashim, rendered "enchantments," is nearly related to Nachash, the common name of a serpent; and Abp. Potter remarks, that the Greeks professed to derive their skill in augury from this animal. Melampus feigned that he attained his art by having his ears larked by dragons. A like story is told of the children of king Priam above mentioned.

Ver. 3. The man whose eyes are opened.—Hebrew, "Who had his eyes shut." This verse may strike some as containing a remarkable opposition between the text and margin; the latter (as generally) is the most correct, but the sense differs little. This man who had his eyes shut, had them opened to behold the angel, (here called the Almighty,) when he "fell flat on his face" before him; but not "in a trance," which words seem improperly supplied. See ch. xxii. 31.

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

6 As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens <sup>d</sup> by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as <sup>e</sup> cedar-trees beside the waters.

7 He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.

8 God brought him forth out of Egypt: he hath as it were the strength of a unicorn: he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and <sup>e</sup> pierce them through with his arrows.

9 He couched, he lay down <sup>h</sup> as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up? <sup>i</sup> Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee.

10 ¶ And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together : and Balak said unto Balaam, I called thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times.

11 Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour:

Balaam, having turned toward the wilderness, or desert, where the Israelites were encamped, seems struck with the beauty and regularity of the scene, which he compares to a plantation of gardens and of groves, well watered and regularly disposed. The imagery of the next verse is not so clear. Dr. Clarke thinks the words, "He shall pour water out of his buckets," alludes to a method of raising water in the East by a kind of tread-mill, when the water raised in buckets is received by persons who distribute it over the land; and the other simile, "His seed shall be in many waters," may allude to some sort of grain that (like rice) is sown in land when flooded. Both images refer to the great increase of the chosen nation in the promised land; as the following does to the honour of their king: "He shall be higher than Agag;" that is, than the king of the Amalekites, which was at this time (ver. 20.) the first of the nations in those parts; and his strength is compared to the unicorn, or great rhinoceros, and to the lion, the sovereign of the forest.

After these predictions of the increase and prosperity of Israel, it is natural to expect that Balak should be offended, and the action of smiting his hands together, indicates that he was not a little agitated: the only wonder is, that, instead of sending him back to his own country, he did not order his head to be struck off: but his prophecies were not yet finished, and till then he was immortal.

While we consider these oracles as referring to the Israelites and their prosperity, we should not forget "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," whose victories have been and shall be more splendid, more universal, and more durable. (See Psalm lxxii.)

Ver. 15—25. Balaam prophesies of the Messiah; of Moab, Amalek, and other nations.—Balaam, before he returns, is desirous to “advertise” or admonish Balak of his own fate and that of his posterity, which he does in reference to the reign of David, in the first place, and more remotely in reference to David’s Son and Lord. These prophecies are very striking, and demand our particular attention.

The introduction to this is nearly the same as to the preceding prophecy, and verse 16 is little more than a repetition of verse 4, already explained. But the following words, "I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh;" &c. are variously interpreted. Rabbi Maimonides explains them

Ver. 6. Lign-aloe—(Abalim, "lign-aloe trees.") This tree, which grows in the East Indies, is described as being eight or ten feet in height, with a stem the thickness of a man's thigh. At the top grows a large tuft of jagged and thick leaves, thick and indented, broad at the bottom, but growing narrower towards the point, and about four feet in length. The blossoms are red, intermingled with yellow, and double like cloves; from which comes a red perfume, which is said to resemble the perfume of the clove. The seedments filled with seed. The tree has a very beautiful appearance; and a forest of them is said to bear a resemblance to a numerous encampment. Under the bark there are three sorts of wood: the first, black, solid, and weighty; the second, tawny, of a light spongy texture, and filled with a fragrant and agreeable resin; the third, which is the heart, of a fine, strong aromatic perfume, and esteemed in the East, as more precious than gold.—Boetius.

Ver. 7. He shall pour water out of his buckets.—The late editor of Calmet renders this, "Water shall flow from his dripping places;" i. e. from his leaves and branches, which "drink water of the rain of heaven." De. xi. 11. Dr. Boothroyd following Geddes, renders this couplet,

This is, doubtless, very elegant, but query?—Higher than Agag.—This was probably the common name of the kings of Amalek, at least of the then reigning family.

12 And Balaam said unto Balak, Spake I not also to thy messengers which thou sentest unto me, saying,

14 And now, behold, I go unto my people: come therefore, and I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

15 ¶ And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said:

16 He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

17 I <sup>1</sup> shall see him, but not now: I shall be-thus: "'I shall see him, but not now,' this is David. 'I shall behold him, but not nigh,' this is King Messiah.' A star shall arise out of Jacob;" this is David; "and a sceptre shall arise of Israel;" this is King Messiah. "He shall smite all the corners of Moab;" this is David; "and destroy all the children of Sheth;" this is King Messiah." This extract (given by Ainsworth) is sufficient to show, that the most learned Jews of former times found it necessary to apply the prophecy in part to the Messiah. Christian interpreters (Bishop Newton in particular) consider it as a double prophecy, referring, in the first instance, to David; and, in the second, but chief, to his greater Son, Messiah. The introductory sentence, "I shall see him," &c. the learned prelate just quoted, and many others, interpret in the present tense, of the prophet discerning, by the spirit of prophecy, events yet future, with the same certainty as if they were present; though he was sensible that he was speaking of events yet "a long time to come." Some practical commentators give the words also a reference to the second coming of King Messiah, "in the clouds of heaven," when "every eye shall see him," though many, to their own sorrow, at an awful distance. (Rev. i. 7.)

The star and the sceptre, the hieroglyphics of divine and sovereign power, point evidently to him who was "The root and offspring of David;" "The bright morning star: the prince of the kings of the earth." (Rev. xxii. 16.) The prediction, as respects Moab, however, has evidently a reference to the victories of David over this country when he smote Moab, "casting them down to the ground." (2 Sam. viii. 2.) But even this part of the prophecy does not appear to terminate in David; Moab being often used as a term for idolaters and enemies to God, his victories may shadow out the final triumphs of David's Son and Lord. If Sheth be the name of any city or prince of Moab, (as many learned men conjecture,) this verse is easily explained; and the rules of Hebrew poetry seem to countenance the idea: but if Sheth, or Seth, be taken for the son of Adam and the ancestor of Noah, his children include all mankind; in that case, we must look for another meaning to the verb rendered destroy, which is certainly not the primary one. The Greeks explain it, shall take captive, or make a prey of; and the Chaldees, rule, or have dominion over; both which senses Awsworth derives from unwailing, breaking down the wall, and so ifies for their idolatry on their first coming out of Egypt, says, Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years? O house of Israel! but ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chium, your images; the star of your God which ye made to yourselves. (Amos v. 25, 26.) The star of your God, is a noble figurative expression to signify the image of your God; for a star being employed in the hieroglyphics to signify God, it is used here with great elegance, to signify the material image of a God; the words, the star of your God, being only a repetition of the image of a God; the image, and your God, are two different things, as we shall see by the next verse, hence it is concluded, that the metaphor here used by Balaam of a star, was of that abstruse and mysterious kind, and so to be understood; and consequently, that it related only to Christ, the eternal Son of God. "—Warburton's Divine Legislation.—And shall smite the corners of Moab.—Margin, Or, shall smite through the princes of Moab." "The corners, the sides, the quarters, Moab, (says Ainsworth,) meaning a conquest of the whole country," which he achieves, says David, Karakah, or Karah, which signifies, "and destroy." The Hebrew word Karakah, the reduplicate of karah, which means to join together, as the frame of a house, Nch. ii. 8.; as bricks or stones in a wall, Lev. xiv. 37.; as houses in a city, or walled town, Deut. ii. 36. But upon what principle the Rabbins and Ainsworth make the reduplicate form in sense the reverse of the simple, is not clear, though it may possibly be true. It renders it confound. Perhaps as karah may mean to put together, and karah renders it confound, so karakah may be to pull them down in a confused manner like a heap of rubbish. It is certain the ancients had a kind of battlement ramp, with a cleave, to pull down walls. See Taylor's Frag. No 221.

also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall go valiantly.

19 Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations; but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever.

21 And he looked on the Kenites, and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock.

22 Nevertheless, the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and said, Alas, who shall live when God doeth this!

24 And ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he also shall perish for ever.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

4 And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.

6 ¶ And, behold, one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand;

8 And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel.

9 And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand.

10 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel (while he was zealous for my sake among them) that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy.

12 Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace:

laying them open, which affords an excellent sense as applied to our Saviour, who has broken down the partition wall between Jews and Gentiles; (Ephes. ii. 14.) and of whom it is predicted, that his dominion shall be universal. So Matmonides, "And he shall unwall all the sons of Seth;" this is, the King Messiah, of whom it is written, (Ps. lxxix. 8.) "He shall have dominion from sea to sea."

The prophet then turns to the surrounding nations. To Amalek, though then "the first of the nations," he predicts utter destruction, which was fully accomplished in the days of king Hezekiah; and to the Kenites, (probably a tribe of Midianites,) who, like the eagle, had made their nest in the rocks, he foretells that they shall be gradually wasted, and finally carried to Babylon by the Assyrians. (See 1 Chron. ii. 55.) Then he goes on to predict the "affliction" of Asshur by ships from Chittim—the descendants of Japhet. (Gen. x. 4.) But whether this refer to the conquests of Alexander the Great, or of the Romans, the learned are much divided. Nor is it certain what nation is meant by Eber; if it meant the Jews, it predicts their long and severe punishment; but it is not of Eber, but of Chittim that it is asserted, "He who afflicted Asshur and Eber" also shall perish for ever; which, if it be interpreted of the Romans, is supposed also to foretell the utter destruction of Rome. It is evident that these predictions referred to events then at a very distant period; for the prophet exclaims, "Alas! who shall live when God doeth this!" Or, perhaps, the words may rather refer to the dreadful nature of the calamities predicted, which seemed to threaten the utter extirpation of mankind.

On these predictions we may generally observe, 1. The immense extent of the plans of Divine Providence, which include all ages, as well as every country. When we contemplate events a thousand or two years hence, we are confounded and overwhelmed; but, with the Lord, a thousand years are but as one day, and one day as a thousand years! (2 Pet. iii. 8.) 2. That men the most attached to the present state of things, cannot help sometimes extending their views far beyond it. "Who shall live when God doeth this!" We shall moulder in the dust; even our descendants, for many generations, shall no more have "a portion in any thing under the sun;" but the designs of Heaven shall proceed uninterrupted and undisturbed: and, 3. Though the enemies of the Church may all in their turn "afflict" they shall not destroy her; but shall in the end be themselves destroyed; they shall "perish for ever." Thus shall kingdoms rise and fall, nations prosper and decline, and all human governments perpetually change, till He shall come, "whose right it is" to reign for ever!

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—18. Israel joins in the idolatry of Baal-peor.—In the close of the preceding chapter we read, that "Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his own place." Whether it was before he went back, in order to make his peace with Balak; or whether he returned on purpose, that he gave counsel privately of a most pernicious nature; Moses informs us, (chap. xxxi. 16.) that it was through the wicked counsel of Balaam that "the children of Israel" committed "trespass against the Lord in the matter of (Baal) Peor," which occasioned a most destructive plague among the congregation, of which the history now comes before us.

Our first inquiry relates to the idol worshipped under this name. Peor (or Peghor) was the name of a mountain which is mentioned chap. xxiii. 28. but whether the mountain received its name from the idol, or the idol from the mountain, is uncertain and of small importance; as is the question to which of the Greek or Roman idols Peor corresponded; whether Saturn or Pluto, Adonis or Priapus. Peor signifies open; and Parkhurst thinks it was in the shape of a large bull, with a wide-gaping mouth to receive the victims offered, particularly infants. Most certain it is, however, that the rites with which this monster was adored were licentious in the extreme. So the prophet Hosea says of these Israelites: "They went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves to that shame: and their

Ver. 18. For his enemies.—The word for (though not in italics) is wanting in the original; we therefore, in this instance, prefer the rendering of the late Levi, "being his enemies."

Ver. 20. The first of the nations.—The margin adds, "that warred against Israel," which was certainly the fact. (Ex. xvi. 8.) however, these words are not in the text, but are taken from the Chaldee paraphrase: but first, by way of eminence, accord better with the other member of this verse, which predicts Amalek's utter destruction, which was finally accomplished in the days of Hezekiah. See 1 Chron. iv. 41—43.

Ver. 21. The Kenites.—Jethro, the priest of Midian, is called a Kenite, (Judges i. 16.) from which Dr. Dodd infers, that they were a tribe, or colony, of Midianites. The name has affinity to the Hebrew Ken, which signifies a nest; in allusion to which it is said, he should "put (or place) his nest in (a cavity of) a rock, where the eagle, the king of birds, delights to dwell."

Ver. 22. Until Asshur shall carry. &c.—Margin, "Or, How long (shall it be ere) Asshur carry." &c. In this marginal reading, the words in the parenthesis are supplied, and perhaps unnecessarily, as the textual reading seems clearer than the margin.

Ver. 24. From the coast of Chittim.—Which has been explained both of Greece and Italy. The Chaldee explains it of the Romans, and the old Latin version reads "from Italy." On the whole of these prophecies, see Ep. Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. V.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 3. Baal-peor, or "Baal the open."—"Probably so called from the Baal, or Bull, being represented with a wide-gaping mouth, to receive the victims, when an animal or children, which were burnt to death by the fire within."—Parkhurst. Others think, however, that peor, or open, referred to the open and shameful indecencies practised before the idol, not very different to those exhibited in the worship of Priapus.

Ver. 4. Hang them up.—[Dr. Kennicott remarks, that the Samaritan and Hebrew texts must be united to make the sense of this verse complete: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto all the heads of the people; and let them slay the men that were joined to Baal-peor; and hang them up before the Lord, against the sun." &c.]—Bazster.

Ver. 8. Into the tent.—The word here used (kebbah) is not the usual term for a tent, but applies to the interior apartment, the bed-chamber, called by the Arabs, Al kebbah. Both Draco and Solon allow impunity to any man who killed an adulterer, taken in the act. See Orient. Cust. No. 739.

Ver. 9. Twenty-four thousand.—St. Paul reckons only twenty-three thousand; though some MSS. and versions, particularly the latter Syriac and the Armenian, have, as here, twenty-four thousand. Allowing the 24,000 to be genuine, and none of the Hebrew MSS. exhibits a various reading here, and the 23,000 of St. Paul to be also genuine, the two places may be reconciled by supposing, what is very probable, that Moses includes in the 24,000, the 1000 men who were slain in consequence of the judicial examination, (ver. 4.) as well as the 23,000 who died of the plague; while St. Paul only refers to the latter.]—Bazster.

13 And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was <sup>a</sup> zealous for his God, and made an <sup>a</sup> atonement for the children of Israel.

14 Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, a prince of a <sup>a</sup> chief house among the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cozbi the daughter of <sup>a</sup> Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

16 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 17 Vex <sup>a</sup> the Midianites and smite them:

18 For they vex <sup>a</sup> you with their wives, where-with they have beguiled you in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian, their sister, which was <sup>a</sup> slain in the day of the plague for Peor's sake.

8 And the sons of Pallu; Eliab.

9 And the sons of Eliab; Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram. This is that Dathan and Abiram, which were famous in the congregation, who <sup>a</sup> strove against Moses and against Aaron in the company of Korah, when they strove against the Lord:

10 And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up together with Korah, when that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men: and <sup>a</sup> they became a sign.

11 Notwithstanding the <sup>a</sup> children of Korah died not.

abominations were according as they loved." (Hos. ix. 6.) The instruments of seduction, in this instance, as in many others, were certain licentious women, (some of them, probably, priestesses of the idol,) who enticed the Israelites both to lewdness and idolatry, which, it is well known, were inseparably blended among the heathen. Israel first began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab, who then invited them to attend their sacrificial feasts; whereby they were drawn into the practice of idolatry, in a manner unawares. The two great temptations to idolatry, according to Bishop Patrick, were "good victuals, and bad women." Thus they joined themselves to Baal-peor, and, of course, turned their backs upon Jehovah, whose wrath was kindled, and who had sent a pestilence among them. Moses was commanded to "take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the sun." But of what people? doubtless of the offenders. And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, "Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor." Here it must be remembered, that Israel had now become a military nation, and were engaged in war. Their magistrates and their officers were the same individuals, and ordered to inflict military execution on the offenders, in hope to stay the plague that was now raging in the camp. Alas! while Moses and the elders were weeping before the door of the tabernacle, and imploring mercy, one daring offender had the assurance to bring a Midianitish harlot into his tent, before the face of Moses, and of all Israel; which being observed by Phinehas, (the son of Eleazar,) he followed them into the tent, and inflicted summary justice on the offenders, and the plague was stayed; but not till 24,000, in the whole, had died thereby; 1000 by the sword of justice, and 23,000 by the visitation of God. Compare 1 Cor. x. 8.

As the action of Phinehas received the sanction of the Lord, it cannot require justification from us. Some heathen legislators, indeed, allow similar impunity in shedding of blood, in such cases; and, we believe, our own law considers the act only as manslaughter. Phinehas, however, being son of the High Priest, and grandson of Aaron, acted not as a private individual, but in his official capacity.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—65. The people again numbered, and the land divided.—The plague just mentioned having swept away the old generation of Israelites, they are again enumerated, and fall short of the number taken three years before, in the whole 1820; the decrease in some of the tribes seems to intimate, that they were deeply implicated in the several insurrections, and suffered accordingly in the plagues which followed, particularly the tribe of Simeon. But so completely was the former generation annihilated, that we are told there was not one man of them left, save Caleb and Joshua, who were by name exempted from the fatal decree, for their fidelity. (Chap. xiv. 38.) Whether the decree extended equally to the females, seems doubtful. Under the Mosaic dispensation, women were certainly under great disadvantages as to information; and as to authority, except in their little domestic circles, they were perfect ciphers. But where small privileges were conferred, the Ver. 13. Zealous for my sake.—Hebrew, "With my zeal." So the apostle speaks of zeal, or jealousy, of a "godly" sort, 2 Cor. xi. 2.—An everlasting priesthood.—That is, perpetual, to the end of the dispensation.

Ver. 17. Vex the Midianites.—Balaam's counsel seems to have been first given to Balak, king of Moab; but probably the Midianitish women, especially of the higher ranks, as Cozbi was, were the principal tempters; and the nation of Midian seems to have come into the execrable measure more generally and heartily than that of Moab: they were therefore first selected to be made examples of, for a warning to the Moabites, who were spared at this time.—B.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 2. Take the sum, &c.—[The plague having swept away the last of that devoted generation, which provoked the Lord to "swear in his wrath that they should not enter" Canaan; he now, after an interval of 38 years, commands another census of the Israelites to be made, and the nation of Midian seems to have come into the execrable measure more generally and heartily than that of Moab: they were therefore first selected to be made examples of, for a warning to the Moabites, who were spared at this time.—B.]

Ver. 10. Together with Korah.—[The Samaritan text does not intimate that Korah was swallowed up, but that he was burnt, as appears to have been the fact; and the Psalmist also (Ps. cvi. 17.) only mentions Dathan and Abiram as having been swallowed up.—] And the earth swallowed them up, what time that company died; and the fire devoured Korah with the 250 men, who became a sign.]—Bagster. Compare ch. xvi. 1.

Ver. 11. Children of Korah.—[It seems to be intimated in ch. xv. 27, 31, 33, that not only the men, but the sons and the little ones of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, were swallowed up by the earthquake; but the text here expressly affirms that the children of Korah "died not;" and their descendants were famous even in David's time. On a close inspection, however, of ver. 27 of the above-mentioned chapter, we shall find that the sons and the little ones of Dathan and Abiram alone are mentioned. There is no mention of the fathers of Korah: they, therefore, probably either not consenting to their father's crime, or possibly repenting, were preserved when he was cut off; while it appears that those of Dathan and Abiram perished with their fathers.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Simeonites.—[The immense decrease of this tribe, no less than 37,100, renders it highly probable, that, influenced by the bad example of Zimri, the Simeonites had been peculiarly criminal in the late wickedness, and that multitudes of them had died of the plague. It is remarkable, that Moses in De. xxiii. bestows no blessing upon this tribe.]—Bagster.

52 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

53 Unto <sup>a</sup> these the land shall be divided for an inheritance, according to the number of names.

54 To <sup>a</sup> many thou shalt <sup>a</sup> give the more inheritance, and to few thou shalt <sup>a</sup> give the less inheritance : to every one shall his inheritance be given, according to those that were numbered of him.

less was required of them. The advantages in their favour, under the new dispensation, are immense ; but then they should remember, "Where much is given, much also will be required." (Luke xii. 48.)

It is awful to think of so many thousands being cut off from the earth within forty years ; but with us the mortality is greater.

The generations of mankind are averaged at not more than about thirty years ; and half the human race have been calculated to die in infancy. "O Sin ! what hast thou done ?" But, blessed be God, the gospel has "brought life and immortality to light !" and we may now sing, "O death, where is thy sting ?" and, "O grave, where is thy victory ?" (1 Tim. i. 10 ; 1 Cor. xv. 55.)

56 According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided between many and few.

57 ¶ And <sup>k</sup>these are they that were numbered of the Levites after their families: of Gershon, the family of the Gershonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites.

58 These are the families of the Levites: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Mushites, the family of the Korathites. And Kohath begat Amram.

61 And <sup>a</sup>Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the LORD.

64 But among these <sup>s</sup>there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the priest numbered, when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai.

65 For the LORD had <sup>t</sup>said of them, They shall surely die in the wilderness. And there

<sup>1</sup>The daughters of Zelophehad sue for an inheritance. <sup>6</sup>The law of inheritances. <sup>12</sup>Moses, being told of his death, saith for a successor. <sup>15</sup>Joshua is appointed to succeed him.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—23. The daughters of Zelophehad obtain their father's inheritance.—"In the orders for the division of the land just given, no provision had been made for females, in case of the failure of male issue. The five daughters of Zelophehad, therefore, considered themselves as left destitute, having neither father nor brother, and being themselves entirely overlooked: and they agreed to refer the case to Moses and the rulers, whether it were not equitable that they should inherit their father's portion; especially as he had not incurred a forfeiture, any more than the other Israelites, who were all involved in one common sentence. There was, therefore, no sufficient reason that his memory should be disgraced as if his line were extinct, when he had left so many children.

"As no law had been given concerning females inheriting in defect of male issue, Moses consulted the Lord about it: and he not only allowed the justice of the claim, . . . but also gave a "statute of judgment," by which the magistrates might determine such causes, both in the division of Canaan, and in after ages. It is generally supposed, that brothers and relations, in the line of the father, are exclusively meant; as one great object was to preserve the genealogies distinct."—Scott.

In the latter part of this chapter, Moses is reminded that he must die on this side the promised land. Moses, like a true patriot, as well as a believer in the faithfulness of God, entreats that a suitable successor might be appointed, as the shepherd of Israel, to conduct the flock of God into the promised land. Joshua is then named; and Moses is admonished "to put some of his honour upon Joshua;" that is, to admit him to a share in the government, that the people might be accustomed to reverence and obey him, while Moses was yet alive to support him in his authority. In one material respect, however, he was inferior to Moses, who always had access to the most holy place to consult the oracle, whereas Joshua was to stand before the High Priest, and ask counsel of the Lord by Urim. Hence we infer, that this could not be "the prophet like unto Moses," which was promised; (Deut. xviii. 15.) we are, therefore, to

Ver. 51. These were the numbered.—The following exhibits a comparison of the two numberings of the people, here and in the first chapter of this book:

	Chap. I. A. M. 2514.	Chap. XXVI. A. M. 2553.	Increase.	Decrease.
Reuben	45,500	43,730	—	2,770
Simeon	59,300	22,200	—	37,100
Gad	45,650	40,500	—	5,150
Judah	74,600	76,500	1,900	—
Issachar	54,400	64,300	9,900	—
Zabulon	57,400	60,500	3,100	—
Manasseh	32,200	59,700	27,500	—

Benjamin	35,400	45,600	10,200	—
Dan	62,700	64,400	1,700	—
Asher	41,500	53,400	11,900	—
Naphtali	53,400	45,400	—	8,000
	603,550	601,730	59,200	61,020

Decrease upon the whole 1,820

[It should be observed, that among these there was not one of the former census, except Joshua and Caleb. (See ver. 64, 65.) Thus, though there was such an amazing increase in seven tribes, yet so great was the decrease in the other five tribes, that the balance against the present census is 1820, as appears above. Notwithstanding the amazing increase in some, and decrease in other tribes, the same sort of proportion is kept in their several divisions; so as to keep the division in the front the largest, and that in the rear the next.]—Bagster.

Ver. 52. The land shall be divided by lot.—This appears to have been a very ancient method of dividing land. So in Homer, Ulysses is made to say of his father.

"The large domain his greedy sons divide,
And each was portion'd as the lots decide,"

The Rabbins say that these lots were drawn by Eleazar, in his priestly robes, with the Urim and Thummim, and under divine direction. (This division by lot seems to have respect only to the quarter, or situation, which each tribe was to possess, and not to the quantity or extent of land, which was to be proportioned to the numbers of each tribe, according to the register now formed. Thus, for instance, it was determined by lot which of the twelve tribes was to inherit in the south, which in the north, &c. then, in that quarter where the lot fell, a larger or smaller portion of land was assigned them, according to the goodness of the soil, and in proportion as they were more or less numerous. Thus the decreasing of any tribe in the wilderness proved the decrease of their future political importance and influence in all succeeding ages. This equal division of property was, under God, the great bulwark and strength of the Hebrew commonwealth; for property is the natural foundation of power, and hence the natural foundation of every government is laid in the distribution of the lands belonging to its members. According to the most exact calculations, Canaan contained 14,976,000 acres; which, divided among 600,000 men, will allow of more than 21 1/2 acres to each, with a remainder of 1,976,000 acres for the princes of tribes, Levitical cities, &c.: so that there was an ample provision to enable each person, with all the advantages of that fertile country and fine climate, to live, if not in affluent, yet, in very comfortable circumstances. See Lowman's Dissert.—Bagster.

Ver. 62. Those that were numbered, &c.—"As the Levites were not numbered from twenty years of age, they are not here included."—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 3. Buried in his own sin.—"That is, he had not been concerned in raising any insurrection among the people, though he had doubtless been implicated in that general discontent which had excluded the whole generation from entering the land of Canaan.

11 And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it: and it shall be unto the children of Israel a <sup>1</sup> statute of judgment, as the Lord commanded Moses.

12 ¶ And the Lord said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mount Abarim, and see the land which I have given unto the children of Israel.

13 And when thou hast seen it, thou also shalt be <sup>2</sup> gathered unto thy people, <sup>1</sup> as Aaron thy brother was gathered.

15 ¶ And Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, 16 Let the Lord, the <sup>5</sup> God of the spirits of all flesh, <sup>6</sup> set a man over the congregation, 17 Which may go <sup>7</sup> out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the Lord be not as <sup>8</sup> sheep which have no shepherd.

18 ¶ And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man <sup>9</sup> in whom is the spirit, and <sup>10</sup> lay thy hand upon him;

19 And set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation: and give <sup>11</sup> him a charge in their sight.

20 And <sup>12</sup> thou shalt put some of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be <sup>13</sup> obedient.

21 And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall <sup>14</sup> ask counsel for him after the judgment of <sup>15</sup> Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation.

22 And Moses did as the Lord commanded him: and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation:

1 Offerings are to be observed. 3 The continual burnt-offering. 9 The offering on the sabbath, 11 on the new moons, 16 at the passover, 26 in the day of first-fruits.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Command the children of Israel, and look unto another Joshua, even Jesus the Saviour; who, as the immediate successor of Moses introduced the literal children of Israel into the promised land, so will he introduce those who believe in him into that "better country," the heavenly Canaan, into which, as our forerunner, he hath already entered.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—31. This chapter is little more than a recapitulation of precepts before given, as to the principal sacrifices of the Israelites: viz. the daily, weekly, monthly, and annual sacrifices, including the passover, first-fruits, &c. What is new, seems to require very little explanation.

"The stated sacrifices and service of the tabernacle having, probably, been greatly interrupted for several years, and a new generation having arisen, who were children or minors when the law was given respecting these ordinances; and as they were now about to enter into the promised land where they must be established and constantly observed; God commands Moses to repeat them to the people in the following order:—

1. Daily: the morning and evening sacrifices; a lamb each time, (ver. 3, 4.) 2. Weekly: the sabbath offerings; two lambs of a year old, (ver. 9, 10.) 3. Monthly: at the beginning of each month, two young bullocks, one ram, and seven) lambs of

Ver. 18. Spirit of all flesh.—[Yehovah elohay harochoth lechol basar, 'Jehovah, the God of the spirits of all flesh.' This address sufficiently proves, that this holy man believed man to be compounded of flesh and spirit; and that these principles are perfectly distinct. 3 ¶ And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the Lord; two lambs of the first year without spot <sup>d</sup> day by day, for a continual burnt-offering.

4 The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou <sup>e</sup> offer <sup>f</sup> at even;

5 And a tenth part of an ephah of flour for a <sup>g</sup> meat-offering, <sup>h</sup> mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil.

6 It is a continual burnt-offering, which was ordained in mount Sinai for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord.

7 And the drink-offering thereof shall be the fourth part of a hin for the one lamb: in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink-offering:

8 And the other lamb shalt thou offer at even: as the meat-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof, thou shalt offer it, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

9 And on the sabbath-day two lambs of the first year without spot, and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, and the drink-offering thereof:

10 This is the burnt-offering of every <sup>i</sup> sabbath, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

11 And in the <sup>j</sup> beginnings of your months ye shall offer a <sup>k</sup> burnt-offering unto the Lord; two young bullocks, and one ram, seven lambs of the first year without spot;

12 And three tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one bullock, and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one ram;

13 And a several tenth-deal of flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering unto one lamb, for a burnt-offering of a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord.

14 And their drink-offerings shall be half a hin of wine unto <sup>a</sup> a bullock, and the third part of a hin unto a ram, and a fourth part of a hin unto a lamb: this is the burnt-offering of every month throughout the months of the year.

a year old, and a kid for a sin-offering, (ver. 11, 15.) 4. Annual: (1.) The Passover, to last seven days; the offerings, two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of a year old, and a he-goat, (ver. 16, 25.) (2.) The day of First-fruits: the sacrifices the same as on the beginning of the month, (ver. 26, 31.)

"The monthly sacrifices were regulated by the new moons, and it is probable that the solemn sacrifices were appointed by God to prevent the idolatry which was usual among the heathen at this period; who expressed the most extravagant rejoicings on the first appearance of the new moon. At Athens, as Plutarch observes, sacrifices were made at the Neomania, or new moon. Demosthenes says, (Orat. adver. aristot.) they went at the new moon up to the citadel of Athens, and there sacrificed, and implored the gods for the welfare of the city and all individuals in the following month. Among the Romans, according to Macrobius, it was the business of the junior pontifex to watch for the appearance of the new light. As soon as he observed the new moon, he announced it to the chief priest, on which they performed together the sacrifice usual on that day. Moses, however, used the return of the moon only as one of the most natural and convenient measures of time; and ap-fluence of the Divine Spirit. There is a similar form of expression in ch. xvi. 22: "O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh;" and in Job xii. 10. "In whose hand is the soul (nephesh) of all living; and the spirit (ruach) of all flesh of man." These seem decisive proofs, among many others, that the Old Testament teaches that there is an immortal spirit in man; for though roach, sometimes denotes breath or wind, yet it certainly has not that signification here, nor in the other passages cited.—Bagster.

ing unto the LORD shall be offered, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

16 ¶ And in the fourteenth day of the first month is the passover of the LORD.

17 And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feast: seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten.

18 In the first day shall be a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work therein:

19 But ye shall offer a sacrifice made by fire for a burnt-offering unto the LORD; two young bullocks, and one ram, and seven lambs of the first year: they shall be unto you without blemish:

20 And their meat-offering shall be of flour mingled with oil: three tenth-deals shall ye offer for a bullock, and two tenth-deals for a ram;

21 A several tenth-deal shalt thou offer for every lamb, throughout the seven lambs:

22 And one goat for a sin-offering, to make an atonement for you.

23 Ye shall offer these beside the burnt-offering in the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering.

24 After this manner ye shall offer daily throughout the seven days, the meat of the sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD: it shall be offered beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

25 And on the seventh day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.

26 ¶ Also in the day of the first-fruits, when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the LORD, after your weeks be out, ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work:

27 But ye shall offer the burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the LORD; two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of the first year;

28 And their meat-offering of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals unto one bullock, two tenth-deals unto one ram,

29 A several tenth-deal unto one lamb, throughout the seven lambs;

30 And one kid of the goats, to make an atonement for you.

pointed sacrifices to JEHOVAH, to prevent the Israelites from falling into the idolatries of their heathen neighbours. In the serene climate of Arabia and Judea, its first faint crescent is, for the most part, visible to all; and it is probable, that there was some pious celebration of the return of this beautiful luminary, in honour of the true God, long before the introduction of the absurd rites of idolatry."—Bagster.

The first and last days were to be kept as sabbaths, on which there were solemn assemblies; and for seven days sacrifices were offered. On the other festivals, two bullocks sufficed, (ch. xxviii. 11, 19, 27,) and on the festival at the beginning of this month, only one was appointed; but, on the first day of this festival, thirteen young bullocks were appointed; and so on each successive day, with the decrease of only one bullock, till on the seventh day, there were only seven, making in all seventy bullocks. great festivity, and ushered in by the blowing of trumpets; whence it was also called the feast of blowing the Trumpets. In imitation of this Jewish festival, different nations began the new year with sacrifices and festivity. The ancient Egyptians did so; and the Persians also celebrated their navree rooz, or new year's day, which they held on the vernal equinox, and which lasted ten days, during which all ranks seemed to participate in one general joy. The rich sent presents to the poor; all were dressed in their holiday clothes; all kept open house; and religious processions, music, dancing, a species of theatrical exhibition, rustic sports, and other pastimes, presented a continued round of varied amusements. Even the dead, and the rams also, were in a double proportion to the number sacrificed at any other festival. This was an expensive service; but more easy at this time of the year than any other, as Bp. Patrick observes, because now their barns were full, and their wine-presses overflowed; and their hearts might well be supposed to be more enlarged than at other times, in thankfulness to God for the multitude of his mercies. The Jewish doctors give this reason for the daily diminution of the number of the bullocks: the whole number, say they, was according to the languages of the seventy nations of the world; and the diminution of one every day signified, that there should be a gradual diminution

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Vows are not to be broken. 3 The exception of a maid's vow, 6 of a wife's, 9 of a widow's, or her that is divorced.

AND Moses spake unto the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded.

2 If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond: he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 ¶ If a woman also vow a vow unto the Lord, and bind herself by a bond, being in her father's house in her youth;

4 And her father hear her vow, and her bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father shall hold his peace at her; then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand.

5 But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth, not any of her vows or of her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand; and the Lord shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

6 ¶ And if she had at all a husband when she vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith she bound her soul:

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it: then ideal beings, were not forgotten; rich viands being placed on the tops of houses and high towers, on the flavour of which the Peris, and spirits of their departed heroes and friends, were supposed to feast." After the Mohammedan conquest of Persia, the celebration of this period sensibly declined, and at last totally ceased, till the time of Jelaladdin, (about A. D. 1082,) who, coming to the crown at the vernal equinox, re-established the ancient festival, which has ever since been celebrated with pomp and acclamations."—Bagster.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1—16. The law of vows.—If a man vow of those nations till all things were brought under the government of the Messiah; in whose days "no sacrifices shall remain, but those of thanksgiving, prayer, and praise."—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Eighth day.—[Though this day was properly a distinct festival, and esteemed the chief or high day of the feast, yet fewer sacrifices are appointed for it than for any of the foregoing seven. On every one of them two rams and fourteen lambs were offered; but on this day there were but half as many; and whereas seven bullocks were the fewest that were offered on any of those days, on this there was only one. By this, says Ep. Patrick, God consulted perhaps the weakness of mankind, who naturally grow weary both of the charge and labour of such services, when they are long continued; and therefore he made them every day less toilsome and expensive: and put them in mind likewise, that the multitude of the sacrifices did not procure their acceptance with God, and that in length of time they would come to nothing, and be utterly abolished, to establish something better in their room. At this feast, there was an extraordinary ceremony of which the rabbins inform us, though there is not the least hint of it in the law of Moses; namely, the drawing water out of the pool of Siloam, and pouring it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay on the altar. This they are said to have done with such expressions of joy, that it became a common proverb, "He that never saw the rejoicing of drawing of water, never saw rejoicing in all his life." The Jews pretend to ground this custom on the following passage of Isaiah, chap. xii. 3.) "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation;"

to do any thing sinful in itself, he ought deeply to repent of the sin which he has committed; for no vow or oath can bind him to break the command of God. Some vows relate to the performance of what was previously our indispensable duty; and such a vow is implied in our attendance on the Lord's table. But there are things of a discretionary nature; as Jacob's vow concerning the proportion of his substance which he would set apart for religious purposes; Paul's solemn determination to take nothing of the Corinthians; the Nazarites' vow; the vows concerning undemanded sacrifices; and vows of abstinence in relation to this ceremony Jesus is supposed to refer, when "in the last day, the great day of the feast, he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink: he that believeth on me, as the Scripture saith, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," (Jno. vii. 37, 38.) thereby calling off the people from their carnal mirth and festive and pompous ceremonies, to seek spiritual refreshment for their minds."—Bagster.

Ver. 39. Set feasts. [It appears from the account in these two chapters, that the Jews annually offered to God, at the public charge, independently of a prodigious number of voluntary vows, and trespasses on me, as the Scripture saith, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water," (Jno. vii. 37, 38.) thereby calling off the people from their carnal mirth and festive and pompous ceremonies, to seek spiritual refreshment for their minds."—Bagster.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 2. If a man vow, &c.—[The preceding chapters had treated of sacrifices required by law; and in the last words had said, they were enjoined "beside your vows and your free-will-offerings," which Moses now proceeds to discuss; so that what is here said of vows seems meant only of what vowed to be offered to the Lord. The laws here delivered must have been her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

8 But if her husband <sup>8</sup> disallowed her on the day that he heard it, then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with her lips, wherewith she bound her soul, of none effect; and the Lord shall forgive her.

9 ¶ But every vow of a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their souls, shall stand against her.

10 And if she vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath;

11 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not: then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

12 But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her <sup>h</sup> husband hath made them void; and the <sup>i</sup> Lord shall forgive her.

13 Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void.

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: he confirmeth them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he shall any ways make them void after that he hath heard them; then he shall bear her iniquity.

16 These are the statutes, which the Lord commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 The Midianites are spoiled, and Balaam slain. 19 How the soldiers, with their captives and spoil, are to be purified, and the prey divided. 48 The voluntary oblation unto the treasury of the Lord.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Avenge <sup>a</sup> the children of Israel of the Midianites: afterward shalt thou be <sup>b</sup> gathered unto thy people.

3 And Moses spake unto the people, saying, spect of things lawful, for a limited season. Vows in such things may on some occasions be properly made; but they are a kind of promissory oaths, and should be formed with solemnity, and religiously observed; seeing the life or soul is bound as a surety for the performance of them.

An unmarried woman in her father's house was required to notify her vows to her father; and if he did not refuse his consent, she was bound by them; but if he did, they were disannulled, and the obligation ceased. If she had vowed discreetly and properly, "she had done well that it was in her heart," and her willing mind would be accepted; if otherwise, her fault would be forgiven.—In many instances such vows might not only be disagreeable to a parent, but prejudicial to the whole family.—It is supposed by many expositors, that, by parity of reason, minor sons were under the same restriction in respect of their vows: but if they were intended also, it is extraordinary that daughters exclusively should be mentioned. The males were certainly allowed more liberty in various cases than the females: the vows of the latter might be adjudged more prejudicial to families; or the sons, being more immediately under the father's tuition, might be thought less liable to be inveigled into rash engagements of this kind.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1—54. The Midianites slain, and the spoil divided.—"Vengeance is mine; and I will repay, saith the Lord." (Rom. xii. 19.) He only who gave the law to man is able, in all cases, to enforce its penalties; and he only who CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 3. Avenge the Lord.—[It was God's quarrel, not their own, that they were now to take up. These people were idolaters, and had seduced the Israelites to practise the same abominations: idolatry is an offence against God; and the civil power has no authority to meddle with what belongs to Him, without special directions, certified, as in this case, in the most unequivocal manner. Private revenge, ambition, or avarice were to have no place in this business: JEHOVAH is to be avenged; and through Him, the children of Israel, (ver. 2.) because they were nearly ruined by their idolatries, Re. 2. 14.

Arm some of yourselves unto the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and avenge the Lord of Midian.

4 Of <sup>c</sup> every tribe a thousand, throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war.

5 So there were delivered out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, twelve thousand armed for war.

6 And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand of every tribe, them and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with the holy instruments, and the trumpets to <sup>d</sup> blow in his hand.

7 And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses; and <sup>e</sup> they slew all the males.

8 And <sup>f</sup> they slew the kings of Midian, beside the rest of them that were slain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam also the son of Beor they slew with the sword.

9 And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And <sup>g</sup> they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly castles, with fire.

11 And they took all the <sup>h</sup> spoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beasts.

12 And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses and Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp at the <sup>i</sup> plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

13 ¶ And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp.

14 And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the <sup>j</sup> battle.

15 And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women <sup>k</sup> alive?

reads the heart is qualified to apportion them accurately to the demerits of his rational creatures. In national judgments, God deals with the nation as a political body; and if among them there should be individuals who "fear God and work righteousness," there is another judgment and another world, in which all temporal calamities may be abundantly compensated; a circumstance which has a very favourable bearing in the case of suffering infants, as well as to the class just mentioned, of whom we can barely hope to find any among a nation generally devoted to idolatry, and that of the most corrupting nature. Living in a Christian land, we can hardly conceive the profligacy of the heathen world; and yet there still exist countries, where acts of prostitution are acts of devotion; and suicide, and infant murder, rank among the sublimest virtues. Such, probably, was the case with this people, of whom the women appear to have been most licentious, and their idolatry most cruel.

Balak, their king, used all his art and all his influence to bring a curse on Israel; and when he found there was no other way, he (no doubt) readily fell in with the wicked advice of Balaam; and by their seduction to pagan vices and idolatries, he brought on them a curse, which causelessly lights not on man. The people were depraved, and through their depravity many of them were destroyed. As they were the Lord's people, their seduction he considered as a crime against himself; and denounced that vengeance, which he also executed in a signal manner,

If Jehovah, instead of punishing sinners by earthquakes, pestilence, or famine, is pleased expressly to command any person or people to avenge his cause, this commission justifies, nay sanctifies, war, massacre, or devastation. Though none can at present show such a commission, yet the Israelitish could; and it is therefore absurd to censure Moses, Joshua, and Israel, for the dreadful slaughter made by them. God himself passed sentence of condemnation, and employed them merely as ministers of his vengeance; and unless it could be proved that the criminals did not deserve their doom, or that God had no right to punish his rebellious creatures, such objectors only show their enmity to God, by becoming the unsolicited advocates of his enemies.]—Bagster.

of Peor, and there was a plague among the congregation of the Lord.

17 Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him.

18 But all the women-children, that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves.

19 And do ye abide without the camp seven days: whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify both yourselves and your captives on the third day, and on the seventh day.

20 And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of skins, and all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood.

21 And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord commanded Moses;

22 Only the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron, the tin, and the lead, 23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean: nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of separation: and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water.

24 And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye shall come into the camp.

25 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 26 Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the chief fathers of the congregation:

27 And divide the prey into two parts; between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation:

28 And levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war which went out to battle: one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep:

29 Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the priest, for a heave-offering of the Lord.

30 And of the children of Israel's half, thou shalt take one portion of fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all manner of beasts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord.

31 And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the Lord commanded Moses.

32 And the booty, being the rest of the prey which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep,

33 And threescore and twelve thousand beeves,

34 And threescore and one thousand asses,

35 And thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him.

36 And the half which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand and seven and thirty thousand and five hundred sheep;

37 And the Lord's tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threescore and fifteen.

38 And the beeves were thirty and six thousand; of which the Lord's tribute was threescore and twelve.

42 And of the children of Israel's half, which Moses divided from the men that warred, by an extirpation of the nation; the adults being all slain, together with the male children, and the female children doomed to a state of slavery for life.

As to Balaam, who had "caused Israel to sin," he was found among the slain. His death was not "the death of the righteous;" nor was his "last end like his." He was an awful instance of the baneful influence of covetousness, and this fatal error of his heart, for it was not in his judgment, sealed his doom on earth,

Ver. 17. Kill every male, &c.—[The sword of war should spare women and children, as incapable of resisting; but the sword of justice knows no distinction, except that of guilty or not guilty, or more or less guilty. This was the execution of a righteous sentence upon a guilty nation, in which the women were the greatest criminals; and it may safely be said, that their lives were forfeited by their personal transgressions. With respect to the execution of the male infants, who cannot be supposed to have been guilty, God, the author and supporter of life, who has a right to dispose of it when and how right?—Bagster.

Ver. 18. All the women children . . . keep alive for yourselves.—[It has been groundlessly asserted, that Moses here authorized the Israelites to make concubines of the whole number of female children; and a formidable objection against his writings has been grounded upon this monstrous supposition. But the whole tenor of the law, and especially a statute recorded in Deut. xxi. 10-14, proves most decisively to the contrary. They were merely permitted to possess them as female slaves, educating them in their families, and employing them as domestics; for the laws concerning fornication, concubinage, and marriage, were in full force, and prohibited an Israelite even from marrying a captive, without delays and previous formalities; and if he afterwards divorced her, he was to set her at liberty, "because he had humbled her."—Bagster.

Ver. 23. With the water of separation.—See chap. xix. 2, &c. Metals were to pass through the fire, and as a great part of these was probably in the form of penates, or domestic idols, these were undoubtedly to be melted down.

Ver. 29. A heave-offering unto the Lord.—From hence it has been per- versely inferred, that the Lord's share of the captives was offered on the altar. But, 1. The heave-offering was never sacrificed on the altar, but after being heaved toward the altar, was given to the priest, and his family, for their support; if this prove any thing, therefore, it would prove that the priest and his family lived on human flesh, which cannot be pretended. Compare Exod. xxix. 27, with Numb. xviii. 19. 2. A thing being devoted to the Lord by no means implied it was being sacrificed, otherwise we must suppose that houses and fields were offered on the altar, Levit. xxvii. 14-23. 3. Even animal, and we fear, for ever; for he "loved the wages of unrighteousness."

The following part of the chapter, contains the details of war and of victory and of plunder, but, in the close, we have an instance of pious gratitude on the part of the officers of the army, who discerning the Lord's hand in their victory, and especially in the miraculous sparing of their lives, brought the richest of the spoil into the tabernacle of the Lord, and devoted it to his mals that were unclean, i. e. not fit for sacrifice, were to be redeemed, Exod. xiii. 13. Levit. xxvii. 11, 12. 4. Human sacrifices were, in all cases, positively forbidden, Deut. xii. 31. Isa. lxiii. 3.

Ver. 32. Booty, &c.—[It appears from the enumeration here, that the Israelites in this war with the Midianites, took 32,000 female prisoners, 61,000 asses, 72,000 beeves, 675,000 sheep and small cattle; besides the immense number of males who fell in battle, and the women and children who were slain by the divine command, (ver. 17.) This booty was divided into equal parts, (ver. 22.) by which partition a far larger share was justly given to the warriors employed on the expedition, who were only 12,000, than to those who, being equally willing to go, were ordered to stay in the camp. Each party was to give a certain proportion to Jehovah, as their sovereign, in grateful acknowledgement that to him they owed their success. The soldiers to give to the Lord one out of every five hundred persons, beeves, asses, and sheep, (ver. 23.) and the people, who by staying at home risked nothing, and had no fatigue, were to give one out of fifty of each of the above to the Levites, who were far more numerous than the priests, (ver. 30.) The booty, its division among the soldiers and people, and the proportion given by each to the Lord and to the Levites, will be seen at one view by the following table:

SHEEP,	- - -	675,000	ASSES,	- - -	61,000
To soldiers,	- - -	337,500	To soldiers,	- - -	30,500
To God,	- - -	675	To God,	- - -	61
To people,	- - -	337,500	To people,	- - -	30,500
To Levites,	- - -	6,770	To Levites,	- - -	610

BEEVES,	- - -	72,000	PERSONS,	- - -	32,000
To soldiers,	- - -	36,000	To soldiers,	- - -	15,000
To God,	- - -	72	To God,	- - -	32
To people,	- - -	36,000	To people,	- - -	15,000
To Levites,	- - -	720	To Levites,	- - -	320

It does not appear that a single ox, sheep, or ass, was required by Moses as his portion; or that there was any given to him by the people; and though he had a family as well as others, yet no provision was made for them above the common lot of Levites!—Bagster.

47 Even <sup>d</sup> of the children of Israel's half. Moses took one portion of fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites, which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

48 ¶ And the officers which were over thousands of the host, the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses:

49 And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under <sup>e</sup> our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us.

50 We have therefore brought an oblation for the LORD, what every man hath <sup>f</sup> gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and tablets, to <sup>g</sup> make an atonement for our souls before the LORD.

51 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels.

52 And all the gold of the <sup>h</sup> offering that they offered up to the LORD, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels.

53 (For the men of war <sup>i</sup> had taken spoil, every man for himself.)

54 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation, for a <sup>j</sup> memorial for the children of Israel before the LORD.

6 ¶ And Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?

7 And wherefore <sup>i</sup> discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them?

8 Thus did your fathers, <sup>k</sup> when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to see the land.

9 For when they went up unto the valley of Eshcol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the LORD had given them.

10 And <sup>l</sup> the LORD's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying,

11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; <sup>m</sup> because they have <sup>n</sup> not wholly followed me:

12 Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite, and Joshua the son of Nun: for they have wholly followed the LORD.

13 And the LORD's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made <sup>o</sup> them wander in the wilderness forty years, <sup>p</sup> until all the generation that had done evil in the sight of the LORD was consumed.

15 For if <sup>s</sup> ye turn away from after him, he will yet again <sup>t</sup> leave them in the wilderness; and ye shall destroy all this people.

16 ¶ And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheep-folds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones:

17 But we <sup>u</sup> ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities, because of the inhabitants of the land.

18 We <sup>v</sup> will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance.

19 For we will not inherit with them on yonder side Jordan, or forward; <sup>w</sup> because our inheritance is fallen to us on this side Jordan eastward.

service. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" (Psalm cvii. 8.)

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 1-42. Two tribes and a half settle on the east side of Jordan.—The tribes of Reuben and Gad being rich in cattle, profess a desire to settle in the plains of Jordan, on the east side of the river, as a fine grazing country; Moses, indeed, who had been much tried by the waywardness of the former generation, expresses a very natural suspicion, that they had other motives than they expressed; in short, that they wished to sit down and enjoy the land already conquered, with-

Ver. 50. We have therefore brought an oblation.—[The officers of the army had mustered their men, found they had not lost a man in the contest with Midian.] Penetrated with gratitude for this most remarkable interposition of Providence in their favour, they now offer to Jehovah the golden jewels which they had found among the spoil, to the amount of 16,750 shekels, equal to about $168,364 of our money. Hence originated the practice among various nations of dedicating a portion of the spoil to their gods. Before the spoils were distributed, the Greeks considered themselves obliged to dedicate a part of them to their gods, to whose assistance they reckoned themselves indebted for them all. But besides the public offerings of the nation, the soldiers often of their own accord consecrated a part of their spoils to the God of battles. They had several methods of doing this: at one time, they collected them in a heap and consumed them by fire; at another, they consecrated their offerings in the temples. Pausanias, the Spartan, is reported to have consecrated out of the Persian spoils a tripod to Delphian Apollo, and a statue of brass, seven cubits long, to Olympian Jupiter. See Pausanias's Illustrations. —Baxter.—"As we travelled onwards, we discovered the guilt cupola of the tomb of Patmeh, at Koom. We were not permitted to enter within the mausoleum, but we were told, the tomb itself, and the bars of the gate that surround it, are of solid silver, and that its gates are plated with gold, upon which are inscribed sentences of the Koran. All around the tomb are hung up, in great display, various offerings, consisting of pieces of jewellery, arms, rich apparel, and other things that are counted scarce and precious."—Mortier.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 16. Build sheep-folds.—[This proposal was very equitable, and it was honestly made and faithfully executed; though it did not imply that all men capable of bearing arms should go, and so leave their families and possessions defenceless, but only a sufficient detachment of them. Among the inhabitants of the land were the Amorites, Moabites, Idumeans, and the remains of the Midianites and Amoritae; and as it was impossible for the women and children to keep the defended cities, when placed in them, many of the men of war must of course stay behind. In the last census, (ch. xxvi.) the tribe of Reuben consisted of 43,730 men; the tribe of Gad 40,500; and the tribe of Manasseh 52,700; the half of which is 26,350; which together amount to 110,580. Now, from Jos. iv. 13, we learn, that of these tribes only 40,000 armed men passed over Jordan to assist their brethren; consequently 70,580 men were left behind for the defence of the women, the children, and the flocks; which was amply sufficient for this purpose.]—Baxter.

Ver. 17. Will go ready armed.—Hebrew, "Will go armed and readily;" i. e. as immediately explained, will go before the children of Israel, in the van, or front of the army.

21 And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the LORD, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, 22 And the land be <sup>v</sup> subdued before the LORD: then <sup>a</sup> afterward ye shall return, and be guiltless before the LORD, and before Israel; and this land shall be your possession before the LORD.

23 But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the LORD: and be sure your <sup>a</sup> sin will find you out.

24 Build <sup>b</sup> you cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.

25 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben spake unto Moses, saying, Thy <sup>c</sup> servants will do as my lord commandeth.

26 Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead:

27 But <sup>d</sup> thy servants will pass over, every man armed for war, before the LORD to battle, as my lord saith.

28 So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel:

29 And <sup>e</sup> Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle, before the LORD, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession:

30 But if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying, As the LORD hath said unto thy servants, so will we do.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 Two and forty journeys of the Israelites. 50 The Canaanites are to be destroyed.

THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt with their armies under the hand of Moses and Aaron.

2 And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys by the commandment of the LORD: and these are their journeys according to their goings out.

3 And they <sup>a</sup> departed from Rameses in the first month, on the <sup>b</sup> fifteenth day of the first month; on the morrow after the passover the

The Saviour shows his own."—Watts.

CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 1—56. The journeys of the Israelites.—While the children of Israel journeyed through the wilderness, Moses was commanded to keep a diary of their proceedings, from which is here extracted a catalogue of their encampments, and of the places through which they passed. "In this catalogue, (remarks Dr. Wall,) Moses mentions several places which had not been mentioned in the former chapters, and omits some that had been mentioned. At some places they encamped and set up the tabernacle, and stayed a good while; others they only passed by, as Beer, Mattaneh, &c. (chap. xxi. 18—20,) which are not named here. Some places have different names; and, in some texts, he does not name [precisely] the same place that was named in the chapters before, but one that was nigh it," as Rithma, for Kadesh-barnea, which were near each other. The fact is, that their army was so numerous, and their camp of that extent, that while their van was at one place, their rear would be at another, and so of their right and left wings.

It will also appear, by comparing this journal with a map of the land of Canaan, that their march was sometimes zigzag, and even retrograde. "God (says Henry) led the Israelites to and fro, forward and backward, as in a maze, or labyrinth and yet they were all the while under the direction of the pillar of cloud: 'He led them about,' (Deut. xxxii. 10,) and yet he led them by a right way." (Psal. cvii. 7.) God's way in bringing his people home is always the best, though it may not be the nearest.

The same pious commentator recommends the conduct of Moses, in keeping a diary, or journal of the Lord's dealings towards Israel, as an example to ourselves. Such memorials may be useful; but the grand thing is to have them recorded on "the fleshy tables of our hearts," that we may remember, "and gratefully acknowledge all the way which the Lord our God has led us." (Deut. viii. 2.)

At the close of this diary, we have the command repeated, —Aroer.—Aroer was situated, according to Eusebius, on a mountain on the north bank of the river Arnon. This is confirmed by Burckhardt, who says it is called Araayr, and is seated on the edge of the precipice, at the foot of which the river flows. —Bagster.

Ver. 36. Beth-nimrah.—Probably the same as Nimrah in Je. xlviii. 34, and the Bethnabris mentioned by Eusebius, five miles north from Livna. Burckhardt says, that "in the valley of the Jordan, south of Abou Obeida, are the ruins of Nemrin, probably the Beth-nimrah of the Scriptures." —B.

Ver. 37. Elealeh.—[Elealeh is placed, by Eusebius, a mile from Heshbon. It is now called El Ad, "the high," and is situated on a hill.] —Bagster.

Ver. 38. Baal-meon.—[This town is placed, by Eusebius and Jerome, nine miles from Heshbon, at the foot of mount Abarim.] —Bagster. —Their names being changed.—Hebrew, "They called by (other) names, the names of the cities." The idolaters generally called their cities after the names of their gods, which the Israelites were not allowed to name, and therefore were compelled to alter. Exod. xxiii. 13.

Ver. 41. And Moses gave Gilead unto Machir.—In consequence of his taking this territory from the Amorites, there being more land than was necessary for the tribes of Reuben and Gad, a portion on this side the river was also given to half the tribe of Manasseh, including the families of Machir, Jair, &c. Jair was the descendant of Machir and Manasseh, in the female line; but from Judah in the male line. 1 Chron. ii. 21—23. Yet joining himself to the Manassites on this occasion, his posterity was ever after reckoned among them. Deut. iii. 14, 15.

Ver. 41. Havoth-jair.—That is, the villages of Jair.

Ver. 23. Your sins will find you out.—Guilt pursues the conscience like a bloodhound, equally eager to pursue, and cruel to devour. See Isa. li. 12. —[If the persons concerned prevaricated, and so imposed on men, or if they afterwards refused to fulfil their engagement, God would most certainly detect and expose their wickedness, and inflict condign punishment upon them. Of all the ways, says Dr. South, to be taken for the prevention of that great plague of mankind, Sin, there is none so rational and efficacious as to confute and baffle those motives by which men are induced to embrace it; and among all such motives, the heart of man seems to be chiefly overpowered and prevailed upon by two, viz. secrecy in committing sin, and impunity with respect to its consequences. Accordingly, Moses, in this chapter, having to deal with a company of men suspected of a base and fraudulent design, though couched under a very fair pretence, as most such designs are, endeavours to quash it in its very conception, by secretly applying himself to encounter those secret motives and arguments, which he knew were the most likely to encourage them in it. And this he does very briefly, but effectually, by assuring them, that how covertly and artificially soever they might carry on their dark project, yet their sin would infallibly find them out. Though the subject and occasion of these words are indeed particular, yet the design of them is manifestly of an universal import, as reaching the case of all transgressors, in their first entrance on any sinful act or course.] —Bagster.

Ver. 34. Dibon.—Eusebius says that Dibon was a large town, near the river Arnon. Burckhardt says, that when he was about an hour's distance north of the Medjeb or Arnon, he was shown to the N. E. the ruins of Dibar, the ancient Dibon, situated in the low ground of the Kour, or plains of Moab.

to drive out the Canaanites, in which we shall at present notice only one feature—"Thou shalt destroy all their pictures and their molten images;" an injunction which, in this elegant and polite age, may be thought barbarous in the extreme: but we may derive from it a proposition of great practical importance; namely, that wherever there is danger of any monuments of antiquity being abused, to the revival of idolatry, it is far better to destroy them, however precious, than to preserve them with the risk of their contributing to so vile a purpose. (See 2 Kings xviii. 4.)

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 1—29. Boundaries of Canaan.—The people of God, though generally poor, are said "to inherit the earth;" because "a little that the righteous hath, is better than the riches of many wicked."—For the bounds of their habitation, and the measure of their provision, are assigned them by the only wise God, their heavenly Father, in suberviency to their salvation, and the increase of grace and peace in their different names of the hills of which they were composed. Eusebius and Jerome inform us, that some part of them, as one went up to Heshbon, retained the old name of Abarim in their time; and that the part called Nebo was opposite Jericho, not far from the Jordan, six miles west from Heshbon, and seven east from Levis. Dr. Shaw describes them as "an exceeding high ridge of desolate mountains, no otherwise diversified than by a succession of naked rocks and precipices; rendered in some places the more frightful by a multiplicity of torrents, which fall on each side of them. This ridge is continued all along the eastern coast of the Dead sea." Mount Nebo is now called Debel Attarous; and is described as a barren mountain, the highest point in the neighbourhood, with an uneven plain on the top. Burckhardt's Trav. i.—B.

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 3. Your south quarter, &c.—This chapter cannot well be understood without comparing it with a good map of Canaan.—Salt sea.—(The lake Asphaltites, Dead sea, or Salt sea, is, according to the most authentic accounts, about 70 miles in length, and 18 in breadth. Viewing this sea from the spot where the Jordan discharges its waters into it, it takes a south-easterly direction visible for ten or fifteen miles, when it disappears in a curve towards the east. Its surface is generally unruined, but the hollow of the basin in which it lies scarcely admitting the free passage necessary for a strong breeze; it is, however, for the same reason, subject to whirlwinds or squalls of short duration. The mountains on each side are apparently separated by a distance of eight miles; but the expanse of water at this point has been supposed not to exceed five or six: as it advances towards the south, it evidently increases in breadth. The acid saltness of its waters is much greater than that of the sea; and of such specific gravity, that bodies will float on it that would sink in common sea-water. It is probably on this account, that few fish can live in it; though the monks of St. Saba affirmed to Dr. Shaw, that they had seen fish caught in it.)—Bagster.

Ver. 13. This is the land.—The whole extent of the land of Canaan proper is said not to have exceeded 160 miles in length, and 60 in breadth, upon the average.

Ver. 15. Two tribes and the half.—[These two tribes inherited the dominions of Sihon and Og, the two vanquished kings of the Amorites, which extended from the Arnon to Mount Hermon. Of those countries, Moses gave to the tribe of Reuben the south-west part, which was bounded on the south by the river Arnon, on the west by Jordan, and on the north and east by the tribe of Gad. The tribe of Gad was bounded by the river Jordan, and tribe of Reuben, on the west, by the half tribe of Manasseh on the north, by the kingdom of the Amorites, and Arabia Deserta, on the east, and by the tribe of Reuben on the south. The part belonging to the tribe of Manasseh was bounded by the tribe of Gad on the south, by the sea of Galilee, and part of Jordan, on the west, by Hermon and Lebanon on the north, and by the mountains of Trachonitis on the east.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. These are the men.—[It is worthy of remark, that Moses does not follow any order hitherto used in arranging the tribes, but places them exactly in the order in which they possessed the land, and according to their fraternal relationship. The following is their order, with the names of their princes, who divided the land:]

1 Judah: Caleb.	6 Ephraim: Kemuel.
2 Simeon: Shemuel.	7 Zebulun: Elizaphan.
3 Benjamin: Elidad.	8 Issachar: Paltiel.
4 Dan: Bukki.	9 Asher: Abihud.
5 Manasseh: Hanniel.	10 Naphthali: Pedahel.

Judah is first, having the first lot, in the south. (Jos. xv.) and next him Simeon, because his inheritance was "within the inheritance of the children of Judah," (Jos. xix. 1.) Benjamin, the third, had his portion between Judah and the children of Joseph. (Jos. xviii. 11.) Dan was the fourth, and his lot was westward of Benjamin, (Jos. xix. 40, 41.) Manasseh and his brother Ephraim, had their inheritances behind that of Benjamin, (Jos. xvi. 7.) Next these dwelt Zebulun and Issachar, (Jos. xix. 10—17.) and then Asher and Naphthali, Jos. xix. 24—32.]—Bagster.

the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Je-phunneh.

20 And of the tribe of the children of Simeon, Shemuel the son of Ammihud.

21 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad the son of Chislon.

22 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bukki the son of Jogli.

23 The prince of the children of Joseph, for the tribe of the children of Manasseh, Hanniel the son of Ephod.

24 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Ephraim, Kemuel the son of Shiphtan.

25 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Zebulun, Elizaphan the son of Parnach.

26 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Issachar, Paltiel the son of Azzan.

27 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Asher, Abihud the son of Shelomi.

28 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, Pedahel the son of Ammihud.

29 These <sup>v</sup> are they whom the LORD commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Fight and forty cities for the Levites; 6 six of them are to be cities of refuge. 9 The laws of murder.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, saying, 2 Command <sup>a</sup> the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their possession cities to dwell in; and ye shall give also unto the Levites suburbs for the cities round about them.

3 And the cities shall they have to dwell in; and the suburbs of them shall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beasts.

4 And the <sup>b</sup> suburbs of the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall reach from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about.

cast our lot among them, and not covet riches, nor seek, in any improper way, to increase our temporal provision; may we be careful not to live beneath our privileges, through sloth or indulgence; may we enjoy the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, as an assurance of victory and eternal life; and when our warfare is ended, may we be welcomed to the heavenly Canaan by Jesus, the Prince of all the tribes of the redeemed, to our everlasting and complete satisfaction.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXXV. Ver. 2 and 4. Give unto the Levites cities, suburbs, &c.—The Septuagint reads "two thousand cubits," as in the following verse; but this rendering is not acknowledged by any other ancient version, except the Coptic, nor by any of the MSS. collated by Dr. Kennicott and De Rossi. Various modes have been proposed for reconciling the accounts in these two verses, which appear in general to require full as much explanation as the text itself. The explanation of Maimonides is the only one that is intelligible, and appears perfectly satisfactory: "The suburbs," says he, "of the cities are expressed in the law to be 2000 cubits on every side, from the wall of the city and outwards. The first 1000 cubits are the suburbs; and the 2000, which they measured without the suburbs, were for fields and vineyards."—Bagster. The whole, therefore, of the city, suburbs, fields, and vineyards may be represented by the following diagram:

brethren, the other tribes are required to allot them forty-eight cities (or walled towns) for their residence, in different parts, that they might be employed in instructing the people, and educating the children, during such times as they were not on duty at the tabernacle; to each town was also to be appended a certain portion of land, not exceeding three quarters of a mile on each side, for suburbs, fields, and vineyards; and these towns were to be furnished by the several tribes in equitable proportion, according to their extent of territory.

Of these towns (or cities) six were to be "cities of refuge" avenged the death of his relation, by slaying the murderer wherever he found him, the appointment of these cities was a humane institution for the protection of the involuntary homicide; for they were designed only for the protection of such, by which they were distinguished from the asyla of the Greeks and Romans.—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Refuge from the avenger.—That is, the nearest relative of the deceased, who was considered bound to vengeance, as a duty. It is remarkable that this law, which doubtless originated in patriarchal times, still subsists among the Indians in North America, and even in Greenland. Hans Egede Saabye, a Moravian missionary, relates an instance of a boy of thirteen, who saw his father murdered, but was too young to avenge him. Long after he grew to manhood, even twenty years after the fact, he took some of his relations with him, and went to live near the murderer, with the express desire of vengeance; but he met with the missionary, and God met with him: he became a Christian, and was reconciled even to the murderer.—Saabye's Greenland.

Ver. 13. Six cities ye shall have for refuge.—This custom is also found among the Indians. "The North American Indians have most of them either a house or town of refuge, which is a sure asylum to protect a manslayer, or unfortunate captive. In almost every Indian nation there are several peaceable towns which are called old beloved, ancient holy, or white towns, (white being the emblem of peace and purity.) They seem to have been formerly towns of refuge, for it is not in the memory of their oldest people, that blood was ever shed in them."—Adair's Indians. In Persia, the king's stable is the most sacred of all sanctuaries.—Malcolm's Hist.

Ver. 14. Three cities on this side.—[The region east of Jordan was nearly as long as that on the west of that river; and therefore three cities were appointed in each division. One or other of these cities would be within half a day's journey of every part of the land; and as it would rarely happen that the avenger of blood would be on the spot, and none had a right to assault or detain the manslayer, at least if no malicious intention was manifest; the unhappy men would, therefore, get the start of their adversaries, and very few of them be overtaken before they gained the place of refuge. But then they must forsake their families, employments, most important interests, and dearest comforts; and they must neither loiter nor yield to weariness, nor regard difficulties, nor slacken their pace, till they had got safe within the walls of the city. The Jewish writers inform us, that, to afford every facility to those who thus fled for their life, the road to these cities was always preserved in good repair; and way-posts, upon which was inscribed, REFUGE, were placed wherever needful, that they might not so much as hesitate for a moment.]—Bagster.

16 And if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him with throwing a stone, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with a hand-weapon of wood, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

19 The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he shall slay him.

20 But if he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait, that he die;

21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer, when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait,

23 Or with any stone, wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm:

24 Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments:

25 And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood:

28 Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your dwellings.

31 Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 The inconvenience of the inheritance of daughters, 6 is remedied by marrying in their own tribes.

AND the chief fathers of the families of the children of a Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Israel:

2 And they said, The Lord commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters.

3 And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

4 And when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

5 And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well.

6 This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry.

7 So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every for the manslayer, whether an Israelite or a stranger, that "killeth any person at unawares;" in which the Jewish law seems to have differed from our law of manslaughter, in as much as it made no allowance for provocation, or sudden gusts of passion, as ours doth. This asylum, however, was not permanent in the first instance. The conduct of the manslayer was to undergo legal investigation before the magistrates, in presence of the people, and if his conduct, on the evidence of two or more witnesses, came under the crime of murder, he must be delivered up to justice. If not, he was to be sent back under safe conduct to the place of refuge, and there dwell until the death of the high priest; but if found without that district, it was at the peril of his life.

This appointment was evidently founded on the patriarchal law respecting murder, (Gen. ix. 5, 6.) which had been widely diffused through all nations; and, at the same time, this refuge pointed forward to the refuge for sinners provided in the gospel, and to the safety of those who have "fled for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope [therein] set before us." (Heb. vi. 17, 18.) Like other types, however, it has points of difference, as well as of similitude. Having by faith entered the way of salvation, we run no risk of an avenger of blood following us; nor does our safety depend on proofs of innocent intention; nor have we to wait in thralldom till the death of our High Priest. He (Christ) hath died once, "the just for the unjust;" and through his atonement "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." (Matt. xii. 31.)

CHAP. XXXVI. Ver. 1—13. Of the marriage of heiresses.—

Ver. 31. Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer.—This is done in almost all Pagan countries: see Orient. Lit. No. 316. "The ancient Greeks had no public officer charged by the state to look after murderers. The relations of the deceased alone had a right to pursue vengeance. Pausanias in many places speaks of this ancient usage, a usage that appears to have subsisted always in Greece.—Goguet's Origin of Laws.

CHAP. XXXVI. Ver. 2. The Lord commanded.—(To one division of the tribe of Manasseh, a portion had been assigned eastward of Jordan; but Zelophehad was of that division, to which an inheritance was afterward allotted west of Jordan; yet, expecting the promised land, the elders of the Manassites now propose a difficulty, upon the adjudged case of Zelophehad's daughters. (ch. xvii. 1—11.) If the females should inherit, in defect of male issue, and should intermarry with other tribes, they would diminish the interest, and weaken the influence of their own tribes, and give occasion to future confusion, and perhaps contention. The Manassites therefore referred the case to Moses; and he, by the authority of God, annexed a clause, which would effectually keep the tribes and inheritances distinct, as long as it was observed. Heiresses were not allowed to marry out of their own tribe, though within those bounds they might consult their own inclinations.—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Every one of the children.—If e. he shall not endeavor to obtain any part of the inheritance of another tribe by marrying an heiress. This also enacted, that when a man left only a daughter, his estate should not be carried by her to a stranger, but she should be bound to marry one who was nearest of kin; in defect of which, it should descend to the children of her father's brother, or the children of her grandfather, some of whom were to marry her.—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

: Moses' speech, in the end of the fortieth year, briefly rehearsing the story, 6 of God's promise, 34 of God's anger for their incredulity, 41 and disobedience.

THESE be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel on <sup>a</sup> this side Jordan in the wilderness, in the plain over against the <sup>b</sup> Red sea, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab.

2 (There are eleven days' journey from Horeb by the way of mount Seir unto Kadesh-barnea.)

3 And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the Lord had given him in commandment unto them;

4 After he had slain <sup>c</sup> Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, which dwelt at Astaroth in Edrei:

5 On this side Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to declare this law, saying,

6 The Lord our God spake unto us in <sup>d</sup> Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount:

7 Turn <sup>e</sup> you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto <sup>f</sup> all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south, and by the sea-side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates.

8 Behold, I have <sup>g</sup> set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the Lord <sup>h</sup> sware unto your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give unto them and to their seed after them.

9 ¶ And I spake unto you at that time, saying, I am <sup>i</sup> not able to bear you myself alone:

10 The Lord your God hath multiplied you, and behold, ye <sup>j</sup> are this day as the <sup>k</sup> stars of heaven for multitude.

11 (The Lord <sup>l</sup> God of your fathers make you a thousand times so many more as ye <sup>m</sup> are, and bless you, as he hath promised you!)

12 How <sup>n</sup> can I myself alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife?

14 And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do.

15 So I <sup>u</sup> took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and <sup>v</sup> made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes.

21 Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee; fear not, neither be discouraged.

22 ¶ And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said, We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we shall come.

23 And the saying pleased me well: and I <sup>g</sup> took twelve men of you, one of a tribe:

24 And they turned and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and searched it out.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—18. Moses reviews the Lord's dealings with Israel.—The first five verses of this chapter are introductory, and were probably prefixed by Joshua (or some other inspired person) at the same time as the account of the death of Moses was added at the close. These be "the words of Moses," and "the law of God." That is, the discourse, or speech, was delivered by Moses, but the authority was of God, which is frequently the sense of the word law, in the Old Testament, and particularly in the Psalms. This discourse was delivered on the east side of Jordan, for Moses was never permitted to cross it, or to enter the land of Canaan.

The words, "Ye have dwelt long enough in this place," are not before recorded, but were probably uttered to Moses at the time that "the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle;" (Numb. x. 11.) and they took their journey, "according to the command of the Lord by the hand of Moses;" on which we may remark, that there is a command in the leadings of Providence, as well as in the written word, and they are in harmony with each other: when the cloud moves, we must follow.

When Moses speaks of the people being "multiplied as the stars of heaven for multitude," he throws in a parenthesis, to CHAP. I. Ver. 1. The Red (sea).—Margin, "Zuph" (rather Suph.) Moses, says Dr. Clarke, was never further from "the Red sea" in his life; nor is the word "sea" in the original, which is simply Suph, the name of a place in or near the plain of Moab. Ptolemy mentions a people called Sophinites, who probably had their name from hence. See Note on Numb. xii. 14, where the word "sea," though not in Italic, is supplied by the translators. The Suphah there mentioned is probably the same place as is here called Suph, or Zuph.—Paran, Tophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Dizahab, seem to have been either places or cities not far from the plains of Moab; for it is evident that Paran and Hazeroth could not have been those near the Red sea, and not far from Horeb.—Bagster.

Ver. 6. The Lord our God spake, &c.—Most of the circumstances here mentioned have been already noticed; as the complaint of Moses, and the method he took to relieve himself: ver. 9—18, compared with Numb. xi. 17, 17; the sending men to spy out the land, and the result, ver. 22—46, compared with Numb. xiii. xiv.

Ver. 10. Stars of heaven.—[This was the promise made by God to Abraham, (Gen. xv. 5, 6,) which Moses considers now as amply fulfilled. May assure them, that notwithstanding he was overwhelmed with the weight of their numerous concerns, yet his heart rejoiced in their increase: "The Lord God of your fathers make you a thousand times so many more as ye are, and bless you as he hath promised you!" So all the faithful servants of God will rejoice in the increase and prosperity of his people, however they may find their work and duty thereby increased. Those who labour for the salvation of others must not account their "own lives dear unto them."

Ver. 19—46. A farther review of the conduct of Israel in the wilderness.—The account of sending the spies to search out the promised land, their perverse report, and the melancholy consequences of the people's listening thereto, we have had before, in the book of Numbers; but we have here a farther account of the manner in which Moses encouraged the people to go up and possess the land. "Thou hast seen (says he) how the Lord thy God bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went." So the Lord by the prophet Hosea, some ages afterwards; "When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and brought my son out of Egypt." (Hos. xi. 1.) But the people would not believe the Lord, but basely insinuated suppose this expression to be hyperbolic; and others, no friends to revelation, think it a vain, empty boast, because the stars, in their apprehension amount to innumerable millions. But, as this refers to the number of stars which appear to the naked eye, which only amount to about 3010, in both hemispheres, the number of the Israelites far exceeded this; for, independently of women and children at the last census, they amounted to more than 600,000.—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Respect persons.—[Heb. acknowledge faces.—That is, let not the bold, daring countenances of the rich or mighty induce you to give an unrighteous decision; and let not the abject look of the poor man induce you either to favour him in an unrighteous cause, or to give judgment against him at the demand of the oppressor. Be firm, uncorrupt, and incorruptible, for the judgment is God's—ye minister in the place of God—act therefore like HIM.—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Send men before us.—[The people proposed this measure through unbelief; Moses mistaking their motive, approved of it; and God being justly displeased, permitted them to follow their own counsel, which proved injurious to them only through their sin and folly.—Bagster.

their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, It is a good and which the LORD our God doth give us.

26 Notwithstanding, ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God :

27 And ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because the LORD <sup>a</sup> hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us.

28 Whither shall we go up ? our brethren have <sup>b</sup> discouraged our heart, saying, The people is <sup>c</sup> greater and taller than we ; the cities are great and walled up to heaven ; and moreover, we have seen the sons of the <sup>d</sup> Anakims there.

29 Then I said unto you, Dread not, neither be afraid of them.

30 The LORD your God which goeth before you, <sup>e</sup> he shall fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes ;

31 And in the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the LORD thy God <sup>f</sup> bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place.

32 Yet in this thing ye did not <sup>g</sup> believe the LORD your God, 33 Who <sup>h</sup> went in the way before you, to <sup>i</sup> search you out a place to pitch your tents in, in fire by night, to show you by what way ye should go, and in a cloud by day.

34 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, and was wroth, and <sup>j</sup> sware, saying,

35 Surely <sup>k</sup> there shall not one of these men of this evil generation see that good land, which I swear to give unto your fathers, 36 Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh ; he shall see it, and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, because he hath <sup>l</sup> wholly followed the LORD.

37 Also <sup>m</sup> the LORD was angry with me, for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not go in thither.

38 But <sup>n</sup> Joshua the son of Nun, which standeth before thee, he shall go in thither. Encourage <sup>o</sup> him : for he shall cause Israel to inherit it.

39 Moreover, <sup>p</sup> your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no <sup>q</sup> knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it.

40 But as for you, <sup>r</sup> turn you, and take your journey into the wilderness by the way of the Red sea.

41 Then <sup>s</sup> ye answered and said unto me, We have sinned against the LORD, we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill.

42 And the LORD said unto me, Say unto them, Go not up, neither fight ; for I am not <sup>a</sup> among you ; lest ye be smitten before your enemies.

43 So I spake unto you ; and ye would not hear, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD, and <sup>b</sup> went presumptuously up into the hill.

44 And the Amorites, which dwelt in that mountain, came out against you, and chased you, as <sup>c</sup> bees do, and destroyed you in Seir, even unto Hormah.

45 And ye returned and wept before the LORD ; but the LORD would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you.

46 So <sup>d</sup> ye abode in Kadesh many days, according unto the days that ye abode there.

CHAPTER II.

1 The story is continued, that they were not to meddle with the Edomites, 9 nor with the Moabites, 17 nor with the Ammonites, 24 but Sihon the Amorite was subdued by them.

THEN we turned, and took our journey into the wilderness by the way of the Red sea, <sup>a</sup> as the LORD spake unto me : and we compassed mount Seir many days.

2 And the LORD spake unto me, saying,

3 Ye have compassed this mountain <sup>b</sup> long enough : turn you northward.

4 And command thou the people, saying, Ye <sup>c</sup> are to pass through the coast of your brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir ; and they shall be afraid of you : take ye good heed unto yourselves therefore :

5 Meddle not with them ; for I will not give you of their <sup>d</sup> land, no, not so much as a foot-breadth ; <sup>e</sup> because I have given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession.

6 Ye shall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat ; and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink.

7 For the LORD thy God hath blessed thee in all the <sup>f</sup> works of thy hand : he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness : these <sup>g</sup> forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee : thou hast lacked nothing.

8 And <sup>h</sup> when we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, through the way of the plain from <sup>i</sup> Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab.

ated that it was not out of love, but hatred, that the Lord had brought the people out of Egypt, to deliver them into the hand of the Amorites ! Such are the perverse interpretations of an ungrateful heart ! We also, as Christians, have a land of promise set before us ; and, without disparaging Canaan, we may safely call it " a better country," because a heavenly one. " Let us, therefore, fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into rest," any of us should fall short of it, " after the same example of unbelief." (Heb. iv. 1—11.)

Ver. 23. The cities are great, and walled up to heaven.—[That is, with very high walls, which could not be easily scaled. The same hyperbole occurs in the best authors. Thus Homer speaks of a fir-tree—" which was as high as heaven," i. e. exceeding high. High walls in these parts of Arabia are still deemed a sufficient defence against the Arabs, who scarcely ever attempt to plunder except on horseback.]—Bagster. " The great monastery at mount Sinai, (Thepenot says), is well built of good free-stone, with very high, smooth walls ; on the east side there is a window, by which those who were within drew up the pilgrims into the monastery with a basket, which they let down by a rope that runs in a pulley." These walls, he observes in the next chapter, are so high, that they cannot be scaled ; and without that, the place cannot be taken. Thus it was anciently, and by this representation did the spies discourage the hearts of the people.

Ver. 44. And chased you as bees do.—[These insects, from their industry, ardour, and social union, have furnished poets of all countries and of all ages with similes and metaphors in abundance. When provoked or disturbed, the whole swarm attacks and pursues whatever annoys them, with great courage and fury, and sometimes is a most formidable enemy. They were so troublesome in some districts of Crete, that, according to Pliny, the inhabitants were actually compelled to forsake their homes. Ælian reports, that some places in Scythia were formerly inaccessible on account of the numerous swarms of bees with which they were infested. Park relates that some of his associates imprudently attempted to rob a numerous hive which they found in their way. The exasperated little animals rushed out to defend their property, and attacked them with so much fury, that they quickly compelled the whole company, men, horses, and asses, to scamper off in all directions. The horses were never recovered, and a number of the asses were so severely stung, that they died the next day.]—Bagster.

CHAP. II. Ver. 9. Ar.—[Ar was situated south of the Arnon ; and was called by the Greek writers Areopolis, and thought by them to be so named because they worshipped Ares, or Mars. Jerome says that it was destroyed by an earthquake when he was an infant. Burckhardt supposes that the ruins of a small castle called Mehatet el Hadj, may be the site of this ancient city.]—Bagster.

10 (The <sup>m</sup> Emims dwelt therein in times past, a people great, and many, and tall, as the <sup>n</sup> Anakims;

11 Which also were accounted giants, as the Anakims; but the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The <sup>o</sup> Horims also dwelt in Seir before-time; but the children of <sup>p</sup> Esau succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their <sup>q</sup> stead; as Israel did unto the land of his possession, which the LORD gave unto them.)

13 Now rise up, said I, and get you over the <sup>r</sup> brook <sup>s</sup> Zered. And we went over the brook Zered.

14 And the space in which we <sup>t</sup> came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the <sup>u</sup> brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until <sup>v</sup> all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, <sup>w</sup> as the LORD swore unto them.

15 For indeed the <sup>x</sup> hand of the LORD was against them, to <sup>y</sup> destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed.

16 So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people,

17 That the LORD spake unto me, saying,

18 Thou art to pass over through Ar, the coast of Moab, this day:

19 And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession; because I have given it unto the children of <sup>z</sup> Lot for a possession.

20 (That also was accounted a land of giants: giants dwelt therein in old time; and the Ammonites call them <sup>a</sup> Zamzummims;

21 A people <sup>b</sup> great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims; but the LORD destroyed them before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead:

22 As he did to the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, when he destroyed the <sup>c</sup> Horims from before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead even unto this day:

24 ¶ Rise ye up, take your journey, and <sup>g</sup> pass over the river Arnon: behold, I have given into thy hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land: <sup>h</sup> begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle.

25 This day will I begin to put the dread of thee and the <sup>i</sup> fear of thee upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who shall hear report of thee, and shall tremble and be in anguish because of thee.

26 And I sent messengers out of the wilderness of Kedemoth unto Sihon king of Heshbon with words of <sup>j</sup> peace, saying, 27 Let <sup>k</sup> me pass through thy land: I will go along by the highway, I will neither turn unto the right hand nor to the left.

28 Thou shalt sell me meat for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money, that I may drink: only I will pass through on my feet;

29 (As <sup>l</sup> the children of Esau which dwell in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar, did unto me;) until I shall pass over Jordan into the land which the LORD our God giveth us.

30 But <sup>m</sup> Sihon king of Heshbon would not let us pass by him: for the LORD thy God <sup>n</sup> hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate, that he might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day.

31 And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have begun to give Sihon and his land before thee: begin to possess, that thou mayest inherit his land.

32 Then <sup>o</sup> Sihon came out against us, he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz.

33 And the LORD our God delivered him before us; and we <sup>p</sup> smote him, and his sons, and all his people.

34 And we took all his cities at that time, and <sup>q</sup> utterly <sup>r</sup> destroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones of every city: we left <sup>s</sup> none to remain:

35 Only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, and the spoil of the cities which we took.

36 From <sup>t</sup> Aroer which is by the brink of the river of Arnon, and from the city that is by the river, even unto Gilead, there was not one city too strong for us: the <sup>u</sup> LORD our God delivered all unto us:

37 Only unto the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not, nor unto any place of the river <sup>v</sup> Jabbok, nor unto the cities in the mountains, nor unto whatsoever the LORD our God <sup>w</sup> forbade us.

CHAPTER III.

1 The story of the conquest of Og king of Bashan. 11 The greatness of his bed. 12 The distribution of those lands to the two tribes and a half. 23 Moses' prayer to enter into the land: 27 he is permitted to see it.

THEN we turned, and went up the way to Bashan: and <sup>a</sup> Og the king of Bashan here remarks, "God gave him (Sihon) over to his own inflexible humour, which was set upon violent courses; from which God did not divert him, because he intended to destroy him." And destroyed he was; and every city, (or walled town,) containing several families of "men, women, and children," taken possession of; and the inhabitants treated according to the decree pronounced against those that should refuse terms of peace. Deut. xx. 10-16. (See Introduction to this Book, p. 233.)

Ver. 10. The Emims dwelt therein.—This, with the two following verses, appear to be a parenthesis, (so marked in some university editions of our translation,) and it is suspected, by many able critics, that several similar passages, containing historical or geographical memoranda, were originally marginal notes, but afterwards inserted in the text. On the Emims, Dr. Clarke remarks, "Calmet supposes that these people were destroyed in the war against them by Chedorlaomer and his allies, Gen. xvi. 5. Lot possessed their country after the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. They are generally esteemed as giants; probably they were a hardy, fierce, and terrible people, who lived, like the wandering Arabs, on the plunder of others."

Ver. 11. Which also were accounted giants.—The word here is not the same translated giants, Gen. vi. 4, &c. (see note there;) but Rephaim, the name of a people first mentioned Gen. xiv. 5.; and Dr. Clarke thinks that "the Emim, the Anakim, and the Rephaim, were probably the same people, called by different names in the different countries where they dwelt; for they appear originally to have been a kind of freebooters, who lived by plunder. It must be granted, however, that there were several men of this race of extraordinary stature, and hence all gigantic men were called Rephaim; but we well know that fear and public report have added whole cubits to men's height. It was under this influence that the spies acted when they brought the discouraging report mentioned Numb. xiii. 33."

Ver. 12. As Israel did, &c.—From hence some critics infer, that this passage must have been written after the conquest of Canaan. Ainsworth and

In reading these dreadful accounts of God's judgments upon the heathen, we must always bear in mind that they were transgressors born under the sentence of death, and living only, by respite of their Judge, till "the measure of their iniquities was filled up." Nor should we forget that we also are "under the same condemnation," unless rescued by the mercy of God, through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1-29. The conquest of Og king of Bashan.

Scott, however, think it may refer to the conquests already obtained over Sihon and Og.

Ver. 13. Zered.—[The brook, or torrent Zered, takes its rise in the mountains of Moab, and, running from east to west, falls into the Dead sea. It seems to be the stream which Burckhardt calls Wady Beni Hamdan, south of the Medjeh or Arnon, and about five hours north of Kerek. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 23. The Arnon—Margin, Avites. It is the Hebrew plural mascula line, and does not require, nor properly admit, the s added. This and the three preceding verses are to be considered in the same light as verses 10, 11, 12. See above, Note on ver. 10.

Ver. 29. As the children of Esau did, &c.—It does not appear that either the Edomites or Moabites permitted the Israelites to pass through their land on their first application; (though) they afterwards permitted them, and supplied them with what they wanted, for money. See Numb. xx. 21. But Houbigant supposes that the Edomites who granted a passage, were not the same people who refused it, but a tribe nearer to the Ammonites. See Boothroyd's Heb. Bible, and compare our note on Numb. xx. 18.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Bashan.—Bashan, one of the most fertile districts of the Holy Land, was bounded on the west by the Jordan and lake of Gennesareth on the east by Trachonitis, on the south by the brook Jabbok, and on the north by Mount Hermon; and seems to have been composed of two or three districts,—on the south the land of Gilead, on the north the region of Argob, and east of both, the plain of Hauran. (See ver. 13-15.) It was afterwards came out against us, he and all his people, to battle at <sup>b</sup> Edrei.

2 And the LORD said unto me, <sup>c</sup> Fear him not; for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto <sup>d</sup> Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

3 So the LORD our God delivered into our hands Og, also the king of Bashan, and all his people: and we smote him until none was left to him remaining.

4 And we took all his cities at that time, there was not a city which we took not from them, threescore cities, all the region of <sup>e</sup> Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

5 All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars; besides unwalled towns a great many.

6 And <sup>f</sup> we utterly destroyed them, as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children of every city.

7 But <sup>g</sup> all the cattle, and the spoil of the cities, we took for a prey to ourselves.

8 And we took at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites the land that was on this side Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermon;

10 All the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto <sup>k</sup> Salehah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

11 ¶ For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of <sup>l</sup> giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron; <sup>m</sup> is it not in <sup>n</sup> Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man.

12 ¶ And this land, which we possessed at that time, from <sup>o</sup> Aroer, which <sup>p</sup> is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites and to the Gadites.

13 And <sup>q</sup> the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half-tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants.

14 Jair <sup>r</sup> the son of Manasseh took all the country of Argob unto the coasts of <sup>s</sup> Geshuri and Maachathi; and called them after his own name, Bashan-havoth-jair, unto this day.

15 And I gave Gilead unto Machir.

16 And unto the Reubenites and unto the Gadites I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley, and the border, even unto the river Jabbok, which <sup>t</sup> is the border of the children of Ammon:

17 The plain also, and Jordan, and the coast thereof, from <sup>u</sup> Chinnereth even unto the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, under <sup>v</sup> Ashdod-pisgah eastward.

18 And I commanded you at that time, saying, The LORD your God hath given you this land to possess it; ye <sup>w</sup> shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all that <sup>x</sup> are meet for the war.

19 But your wives and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given you;

20 Until the LORD hath given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they also possess the land which the LORD your God hath given them beyond Jordan: and then <sup>y</sup> shall ye return every man unto his possession which I have given you.

21 And <sup>z</sup> I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto these two kings: so shall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest.

22 Ye shall not <sup>a</sup> fear them: <sup>b</sup> for the LORD your God he shall fight for you.

23 ¶ And I besought the LORD at that time, saying,

24 O Lord God, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy <sup>c</sup> greatness, and thy mighty hand for <sup>d</sup> what God <sup>e</sup> is there in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might?

25 I pray thee, let me go over, and see the <sup>f</sup> good land that <sup>g</sup> is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

26 But <sup>h</sup> the LORD was wroth with me for your sakes, and would not hear me: and the LORD said unto me, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter.

—Such is the dread that mankind had of giants, that armies trembled before them, as in the instance of Goliath; (1 Sam. xvii. 24.) the destruction of such a monster was, therefore, considered as no mean triumph. And yet there seems little reason for such alarm, since an arrow or a spear might penetrate between the joints of his armour as easily as those of another man. (1 Kings xxii. 34.) The bedstead (as it here called) seems to have been only a monument of his great vanity, since it could have afforded no defence in case of an attack. Whether the Ammonites seized this as a prize, or af-called Batanæa: and seems to be now comprehended under the modern names of Belad Erbad, or El Bottein, Belad Beni Obeid, Djelaad, and Hawran. (See Burckhardt's Travels in Syria.) It contained at one period not less than 60 walled towns, besides villages; and its rich pastures, oaks, and fine cattle, were exceedingly commended. The scenery of this elevated track is described by Buckingham as extremely beautiful; its plains covered with a fertile soil; its hills covered with forests, and at every new turn presenting the most beautiful landscapes that can be imagined.—Edrei.—This town is placed by Eusebius about 25 miles northward from Bostri; and mentioned by Burckhardt under the name of Draa.—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Rehoboth Argob.—Heb. "Line of Argob," alluding to the line, or cord, by which lands were measured, Amos vii. 17.

Ver. 5. All his cities.—Cities are here explained to be walled towns, with gates and bars, in distinction from unwalled towns. See note on ch. i. 28.

Ver. 6. Men, women, and children of every, or, "every city of men, women, and children."

Ver. 9. Hermon.—[Mount Hermon is the south eastern branch of Lebanon, beyond Jordan. The Chaldee Targumists, who place it at Caesarea, and Samaritan interpreters, call it foor talge, "the mountain of snow," because of it being always covered with snow; and Jerome informs us, that it lies higher than Paneas or Caesarea Philippi, and that in the summer time snow used to be carried from thence to Tyre. It is now called El Heish, and is comprised in the district of Kanneetra. See Burckhardt's Travels.—Bagster.

Ver. 11. His bedstead was . . . of iron.—Before iron bedsteads were brought into general use, it was considered as a proof of the great weight of the giant, that a wooden frame did not support him. It is very difficult, however, to ascertain what this bedstead was, since nothing like what we call a bedstead was then, or yet is, known in eastern countries. Parikhurst supposes it to have been a sort of "mattress full of small pieces of iron," like a coat of mail, and intended to give an idea of his "martial roughness." The late Editor of Calmes, considers it as a kind of "duan, or broad settle," raised from the floor, on which cushions or carpets were usually spread. Amos speaks of the luxurious larehites of his time, as "lying on beds (or duans) of ivory," whereas this giant king chose rather to lie, perhaps, on massy bars of iron.

Little, however, can be ascertained, as to his size, from this account. Suppose it to have been sixteen feet long, by seven wide, it does not follow that he was either so long or so wide. Who would choose to be confined to a bed like a coffin, which just fits his body? Bp. Watson says, "You make no allowance for the size of a royal bed; nor ever suspect that king Og might have been possessed of the same kind of vanity which occupied the mind of king Alexander, when he ordered his soldiers to enlarge the size of their beds, that they might give to the Indians, in succeeding ages, a great idea of the prodigious stature of a Macedonian."—Apol. for Bib.

Ver. 15. Argob, which is called the land of giants.—The tradition that giants formerly dwelt in this part, still remains in Arabia, only that it makes them rather taller than Moses does Og, and calls the land in which they lived, not Bashan, but Hadrach, which name occurs in Zech. ix. 1.

Ver. 14. Bashan-havoth-jair.—Or the villages of Jair, in Bashan, (Numbers xxxii. 41.) The words "unto this day," if originally in the text, can mean only about a twelvemonth; but the expression was probably added afterwards, as in some other cases.

Ver. 25. And Lebanon.—Or, "even Lebanon."—Lebanon is a long chain of limestone mountains, extending from near the coast of the Mediterranean on the west to the plains of Damascus on the east, and forming the extreme northern boundary of the Holy Land. It is divided into two principal ridges running parallel to each other in a north-north-east direction; the most westerly of which was properly called Libanus, and the easterly Anti-Libanus, though the Hebrews did not make this distinction, but called both by the same name. It is computed to be fifteen or sixteen hundred fathoms in height; and the highest summits are always covered with snow. They are by no means barren, but are almost all well cultivated and well peopled; their summits being in many parts level, and forming extensive plains, in which are sown corn and all kinds of pulse. They are watered by numerous springs, rivulets, and streams of excellent water, which diffuse on all sides a freshness and fertility even in the most elevated regions. Vineyards and plantations of olive, mulberry, &c. are common, and the culture and in terraces formed by walls; and the soil of the declivities and hollows is most excellent, and produces an abundance of corn, oil, and wine.—Bagster.

27 Get thee up into the top of <sup>a</sup> Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

28 But <sup>a</sup> charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him: for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see.

29 So we abode in the valley over against <sup>a</sup> Beth-peor.

CHAPTER IV.

1 An exhortation to obedience. 41 Moses appointeth the three cities of refuge on that side Jordan.

NOW therefore hearken, O Israel, unto the <sup>a</sup> statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to <sup>b</sup> do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the LORD God of your fathers giveth you.

2 Ye <sup>a</sup> shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you.

3 Your eyes have seen what the LORD did <sup>a</sup> because of Baal-peor: for <sup>a</sup> all the men that followed Baal-peor, the LORD thy God hath destroyed them from among you.

4 But ye that did <sup>a</sup> cleave unto the LORD your God, are alive every one of you this day.

5 Behold, <sup>a</sup> I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.

6 Keep therefore and do them: for this is your <sup>a</sup> wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, <sup>a</sup> Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.

7 For <sup>a</sup> what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?

8 And <sup>a</sup> what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?

terwards bargained for it with the Israelites, seems quite uncertain; but we are told it was preserved "in Rabbeth, of the children of Ammon," probably more as a curiosity than with any other view. Israel, however, are instructed to consider their victory over Sihon and Og as a pledge of future deliverance from all their other enemies.

On this occasion, Moses informs us, that when he saw what God had "begun to do" for Israel, it made him the more anxious to go over Jordan with them into the promised land, that he might witness more of the Lord's goodness toward his people: but he is ordered to desist from this request, and to be content with viewing the good land afar off. Thus to view, by faith, the heavenly Canaan, the New Jerusalem, is, indeed, the highest privilege to which humanity can aspire on earth. We see the blessedness of a future state marked out to us in the Scriptures; but we must die to enter it. Our affections must be purified and sublimed, before we can enjoy all that God has "laid up for them that love him." (1 Cor. ii. 9.)

CHAP. IV. VER 1-24. Dehortations against corrupting the word of God, and against idolatry.—The word of God may be corrupted either in the record or in the interpretation. The former, when any doctrines or precepts are delivered which are not from God; or obliterated, which were really given by him. The Jews were notoriously guilty of the former, when they added what they called the oral law to that which Moses delivered. The oral law is said to contain those verbal and generally mystical interpretations, which the Almighty communicated orally, (that is, by word of mouth,) to Moses, Moses to Aaron and his sons, &c. and which were handed down to their posterity, till they were entered in the Talmud. Now these traditions often contradict or supersede the text; therefore our Lord charges the Pharisees of his day with Ver. 29. Beth-peor.—That is, the house, or temple of Peor. See Num. xxv. 3. note. The temple gave name to the city.

CHAP. IV. VER. 2. Ye shall not add . . . nor diminish.—That our Scriptures are not corrupted, see the Introduction to this work. As to the errors of printers and transcribers, the Editor of this Bible, in comparing different editions of our authorized translation, has found many slight variations in spelling, in pointing, and especially in the italics, but none of any consequence to the interpretation.

9 Only take heed to thyself, and <sup>a</sup> keep thy soul diligently, <sup>a</sup> lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but <sup>a</sup> teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons:

10 Specially the <sup>a</sup> day that thou stoodest before the LORD thy God in Horeb, when the LORD said unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to <sup>a</sup> fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 And ye came near and stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire unto the <sup>a</sup> midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness.

12 And the LORD spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; <sup>a</sup> only ye heard a <sup>a</sup> voice.

13 And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even <sup>a</sup> ten commandments; and <sup>a</sup> he wrote then upon two tables of stone.

14 And <sup>a</sup> the LORD commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it.

16 Lest ye <sup>a</sup> corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the <sup>a</sup> likeness of male or female,

17 The likeness of <sup>a</sup> any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air,

18 The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth:

19 And lest thou <sup>a</sup> lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, even all the host of hea-making void the law of God through their traditions; (Matt. xv. 3-6.) but he never charges them with corrupting the sacred text. Being divided into different sects, as Pharisees, Sadducees, &c. they could not do this, one keeping watch upon the other; nor need they, since they could turn the Scriptures as they please by their traditions. The Roman Catholics have been guilty of the same fault; and it cannot be denied that they have also, in their translations and catechisms, attempted to suppress, in whole or in part, the second commandment, as we shall have farther occasion to remark.

The following paragraph acquaints us with a most interesting and awful fact. We read in the 25th chapter of Numbers, that all the men that were joined to Baal-peor were ordered to be slain; but as many of them probably absconded or concealed themselves, the Lord sent a pestilence, which destroyed them also, according as Moses warned their brethren. "Be sure your sin will find you out!"—"The Lord thy God is a consuming fire!"

The privileges which Israel enjoyed under the Mosaic dispensation are thus enumerated: "What nation is there so great, who hath a God so nigh unto them?" or who hath "statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law?" Their adherence to these, therefore, would be a mark of wisdom and prudence; and might lead the nations around, when they heard them, to say, "Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people?"

Among all the doctrines of the Jewish religion, the first, and most prominent, is the unity of God: and the second, the spirituality of his worship, without regard to any medium: of devotion, natural or artificial, both which were universal in the worship of the heathen. They regarded the heavenly bodies as the objects of their worship, and animals of almost

Ver. 19. Divided.—That is, assigned, or granted for their benefit, as natural agents; but not that they should pervert the heavenly bodies into objects of idolatrous veneration.

Ver. 26. Call heaven, &c.—[A most solemn method of adjuration, in use among all nations in the world. So Virgil represents Æneas as calling the sun, earth, fountains, rivers, and the gods beneath the deep, or in the golden sky, to hear and attest his vow. God and man being called upon to bear testimony to the truth of what was spoken, that if there was any flaw or insinven, shouldest be driven to <sup>e</sup> worship them, and serve them, which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.

20 But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the <sup>e</sup> iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of <sup>f</sup> inheritance, as ye are this day.

21 Furthermore, <sup>g</sup> the Lord was angry with me for your sakes, and sware that I should not go over Jordan, and that I should not go in unto that good land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance:

22 But I must die in this land, I must not go over Jordan: but ye shall go over, and possess that good land.

23 Take <sup>h</sup> heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God, which he made with you, and make you a graven image, or the likeness of any thing which the Lord thy God hath forbidden thee.

24 For the Lord thy God is a consuming <sup>i</sup> fire, even a <sup>j</sup> jealous God.

25 ¶ When thou shalt beget children, and children's children, and ye shall have remained long in the land, and shall corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, and shall do evil in the sight of the Lord thy God, to <sup>k</sup> provoke him to anger;

26 I <sup>l</sup> call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordan to possess it: ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed.

27 And the Lord shall <sup>m</sup> scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you.

28 And <sup>n</sup> there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell.

29 But <sup>o</sup> if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with <sup>p</sup> all thy heart and with all thy soul.

30 When thou art in tribulation, and all these <sup>q</sup> things are come upon thee, even in the <sup>r</sup> latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto his voice;

31 (For the Lord thy God is a <sup>s</sup> merciful God;) he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he sware unto them.

32 ¶ For <sup>t</sup> ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?

33 Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the <sup>a</sup> fire, as thou hast heard, and live?

34 Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by <sup>b</sup> temptations, by <sup>c</sup> signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a <sup>d</sup> mighty hand, and by a <sup>e</sup> stretched out arm, and by great <sup>f</sup> terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?

35 Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God: there is none else beside him.

36 Out of <sup>a</sup> heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee: and upon earth he showed thee his great fire; and thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire.

37 And because <sup>b</sup> he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them, and brought thee out in his sight with his <sup>c</sup> mighty power out of Egypt;

38 To drive out nations from before thee, <sup>d</sup> greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day.

39 Know therefore this day, and <sup>e</sup> consider it in thy heart, that <sup>f</sup> the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath there is none else.

40 Thou <sup>g</sup> shalt keep therefore his statutes and his commandments which I command thee this day, that it may go <sup>h</sup> well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, for ever.

41 ¶ Then Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan toward the sun-rising;

42 That <sup>i</sup> the slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live:

43 Namely, <sup>j</sup> Bezer in the wilderness, in the plain country, of the Reubenites; and Ramoth in Gilead, of the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan, of the Manassites.

44 ¶ And this <sup>k</sup> is the law which Moses set before the children of Israel:

45 These <sup>l</sup> are the <sup>m</sup> testimonies, and the <sup>n</sup> statutes, and the <sup>o</sup> judgments, which Moses spak unto the children of Israel, after they came forth out of Egypt,

every species, as emblems of those orbs; and, in a secondary view, as either objects or instruments of their devotion. This was a most seducing and destructive system. It was seducing, in that it led them to terminate their worship in those heavenly luminaries, which were designed to lead their minds to the great Creator of them all: and when they had chosen these objects of adoration, their worship itself became degraded, carnal, and, of course, licentious. It is only the direction of our worship to a Being of infinite grandeur and perfection, that can preserve it from puerility and grossness—from folly and wickedness.

Ver. 25—49. Moses warns Israel against disobedience, and especially against idolatry, which would be sure to bring upon them swift destruction; and yet, even in this case, holds out encouragement to hope, that sincere repentance would never be in vain; "for the Lord thy God (says he) is a merciful cerity it might be detected, and if any crime, it might not go unpunished. Such appeals to God show at once the origin and use of oaths.

Ver. 43. Bezer.—[Bezer is the same as Bozra, formerly a royal city of Edom. See note on Gen. xxxvi. 33.—Ramoth.—Ramoth was a celebrated city in the mountains of Gilead, placed by Eusebius fifteen miles east from Philadelphia or Ammon, and by Jerome in the neighbourhood of Jabbok, and consequently north of Philadelphia.—Golan.—This city gave name to the district of Gaulonitis, now called Djolan, which comprises the plain to the south of Diedou or Iturea, and to the west of Hauran: its southern frontier is the Nahar Aweir, by which it is separated from the district of Erbad, and the Sheriat el Mandhour, which separates it from the district of El Kef.

God;—he will not forget the covenant of thy fathers." Those who seek God in their affliction, however deep, if they be in earnest, will not seek in vain. When afflictions find them, as the Hebrew phrase is, they may find the Lord in their afflictions. Prone as we are to forget his mercies, he will not forget his covenant.

Two things the venerable prophet particularly insists upon as extraordinary and unprecedented—their redemption from Egypt, and the revelation made to them at Sinai; and in both cases we Christians have the advantage. Their redemption was from Egypt, ours is from hell; they had a code of most excellent laws revealed to them, but the Gospel is revealed to us: or if it be said, the Gospel was preached to them also, still we have the advantage; for it was preached to them only in types, to us it is declared openly. They saw the glory through a glass darkly; we behold it as with open face!

rat: on the west it is limited by the territory of Feik, and on the north-west by Diebel Heish, or mount Hermon.—Burckhardt's Travels.—Bagster.

Ver. 44. This is the law.—[This is evidently an introduction to the discourse of the subsequent chapters. Moses having practically improved some particulars in the history of Israel, proceeded to repeat and enforce the laws which he had before delivered, with additions and explanations, beginning with the ten commandments.]—Bagster.

Ver. 46. Beth-peor.—[Beth-peor was a city which was situated, according to Eusebius, opposite Jericho, and six miles above Livna. (See Reland's Palestina.) As the name signifies "the house of Peor," it is probable that there was a temple to Peor situated in this place, full in view of the people, while 47 And they possessed his land, and the land of Og king of Bashan, two kings of the Amorites, which were on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising;

48 From <sup>a</sup> Aroer, which is by the bank of the river Arnon, even unto mount Sion, which is <sup>a</sup> Hermon,

CHAPTER V.

AND Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and <sup>a</sup> keep, and do them.

2 The LORD our God made a <sup>b</sup> covenant with us in Horeb.

3 The LORD made not this covenant with our fathers, but with <sup>c</sup> us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.

4 The LORD <sup>d</sup> talked with you face to face in the mount out of the midst of the fire,

5 (I <sup>e</sup> stood between the LORD and you at that time, to show you the word of the LORD: for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount;) saying,

6 ¶ I <sup>f</sup> am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of <sup>g</sup> bondage.

7 Thou <sup>h</sup> shalt have none other gods before me.

8 Thou <sup>i</sup> shalt not make thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth:

9 Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, <sup>k</sup> visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me,

10 And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

11 Thou <sup>j</sup> shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

12 Keep <sup>m</sup> the sabbath-day to sanctify it, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee.

13 Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work;

14 But the seventh day is the <sup>n</sup> sabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy <sup>o</sup> man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou.

15 And <sup>p</sup> remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the LORD thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath-day.

16 ¶ Honour <sup>q</sup> thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee; that thy <sup>r</sup> days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

Farther, Moses argues, as we should do, from what God has done, to what he will do. He who brought Israel out of Egypt, and delivered them from the mighty Pharaoh, will surely drive out the petty usurers of the promised land, and give them their long covenanted inheritance. "Know therefore, and consider it in thine heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none else!"

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—33. The covenant of Sinai.—As this covenant has been much misunderstood, it may be well to bestow some particular attention on it. 1. It was not a covenant of works. The Ten Commands contain, indeed, an abstract of the original law under which man was created, delivered in a prohibitory form. "This law (says the excellent Newton) could not be designed as a covenant, by obedience to which man should be justified; for long before this, the gospel had been preached unto Abraham. (Gal. iii. 8.) But the law entered that sin might abound;" (Rom. v. 20.) that is, that the extent, evil, and desert of sin, might be known; for it reaches to the most hidden thoughts of the heart, requires absolute and perpetual obedience, and denounces a curse upon all who continue not therein. (Gal. iii. 10.) . . . Believers of old were relieved from the strictness [i. e. the penalty] of the moral law by the sacrifices which pointed to Christ: believers under the gospel are relieved by a direct application of 'the blood of the covenant.' (Heb. x. 29.) Both renounce any dependence on the moral law for justification, and both accept it as a rule of life in the hands of a Mediator; and are enabled to yield a sincere, though not perfect, obedience." 2. But the covenant of Sinai was a national covenant between Jehovah, as their absolute sovereign, (absolute by right both of creation and redemption,) and the people of Israel, of which covenant Moses was the mediator; (Gal. iii. 19.) and, therefore, here says, "I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to show you the word of the Lord: for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount." Nor was this covenant made with one generation only, but with every succeeding one, so long as they continued a nation. "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers [only] but with us, even us who are here alive this day;"—of whom the younger part were unborn when the law was delivered at mount Sinai.

These remarks may lead us to a correct view of the true nature of the Ten Commands. Upon the people of Israel, they were enjoined as a national code; and, therefore, 1. With them was blended the ordinance of the seventh day sabbath; which, so far as respects its being the seventh day, may be considered as a positive institution. 2. The authority of the Legislator is here founded, not only upon the authority of God, as creator, (as in Exod. xx. 11.) but also upon his redemption of the nation from Egyptian bondage: "I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt." 3. There are in this covenant temporal sanctions peculiar to Israel as a nation, such as length of days—"That thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee." (For a fuller account of this covenant, see Dr. John Erskine's Theol. Dissertations, Diss. 1.)

But it may be said, What, then, have we to do with these commands? We reply, so far as they are purely moral, and founded on the relation between the Creator and his creature, so far are they binding upon all intelligent beings; nor can we be released from their obligation so long as we remain creatures; that is, so long as we exist. The summary of these commands, therefore, as given us by our Lord himself, must be universally and forever binding: "Thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." (Matt. xxii. 37—39.) St. Paul, moreover, writing to the Romans, (who, it is to be remembered, were not Jews,) says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." (Rom. xiii. 8—10.)

As to the commands themselves, we shall refer to our observations on the 20th chapter of Exodus, adding only two or three remarks there omitted.

The word elohim, which is rendered God, in the singular, eloah, and in Arabic, allah, is derived from the Arabic, alaha, he worshipped, adored, was struck with astonishment, fear or terror; and hence, he adored with sacred horror and veneration: it also signifies, he succoured, liberated, kept in safety, or defended. Hence we learn that elohim, denotes the sole object of adoration; the perfection of whose nature must astonish all who contemplate them, and fill with horror all who rebel against him; that consequently he must be worshipped with reverence and religious fear; and that every sincere worshipper may expect help in all his weaknesses, &c. freedom from the power, guilt, and consequences of sin, and support and defence to the uttermost. 22 ¶ These words the LORD spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he <sup>a</sup> wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me.

23 And <sup>a</sup> it came to pass, when ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, (for the mountain did burn with fire,) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders;

24 And ye said, Behold, the LORD our God hath showed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire: we have seen this day that God doth talk with man, and he <sup>a</sup> liveth.

25 Now <sup>a</sup> therefore why should we die? for this great fire will consume us: if we <sup>b</sup> hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we shall die.

26 For who is there of all flesh, that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived?

27 Go thou near, and hear all that the LORD our God shall say: and <sup>a</sup> speak thou unto us all that the LORD our God shall speak unto thee; and we will hear it, and do it.

28 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye spake unto me; and the LORD said unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which <sup>a</sup> they have spoken unto thee: they have well said all that they have spoken.

29 O <sup>a</sup> that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me, and <sup>a</sup> keep all my commandments always, that <sup>a</sup> it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

30 Go say to them, Get you into your tents again.

31 But as for thee, stand thou here by me, and I <sup>b</sup> will speak unto thee all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to possess it.

32 Ye shall observe to do therefore as the LORD your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn <sup>a</sup> aside to the right hand or to the left.

33 Ye shall walk in <sup>a</sup> all the ways which the LORD your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and <sup>a</sup> that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The end of the law is obedience: 3 an exhortation thereto.

NOW these are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which the LORD your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do <sup>a</sup> them in the land whither ye <sup>b</sup> go to possess it:

2 That thou mightest <sup>c</sup> fear the LORD thy God, to keep all his statutes and his commandments which I command thee, thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life; and that thy days may be <sup>d</sup> prolonged.

3 ¶ Hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be <sup>e</sup> well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily, as the <sup>f</sup> LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee, in the land that floweth with milk and honey.

4 Hear, <sup>g</sup> O Israel: The LORD our God is <sup>h</sup> one LORD:

5 And thou shalt love the LORD thy God <sup>i</sup> with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

6 And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thy <sup>j</sup> heart:

so clear and explicit, that one would have thought it almost impossible to mistake or to evade it. It not only forbids the worshipping of images, but even the making of them for such a purpose: yet such is the ingenuity of some writers in the Church of Rome, that they explain away the whole, by assigning to saints and angels a lower degree of worship; and making these images merely the medium, and not the objects of adoration.

But if we wish not to be deceived, let us ask, 1. Were the Jews allowed to pay a lower degree of worship to the sun and moon, to Baal and Ashtaroth? Certainly not; nor did Satan himself think of such an evasion, when he tempted our Saviour in the wilderness; but was silenced with the answer, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (Matt. iv. 10.) 2. It is said, Catholics worship not the idols of the heathen, but saints and angels only. We reply, there were saints and angels under the Old Testament; but which of them received religious worship, except only the great "Angel of the Covenant," whom angels worship? And as to mediators, we Christians have but "One Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." (1 Tim. i. 5.)

With respect to the use of images to represent the divine glory and perfections, they are also prohibited in the most general and express manner. Thus, in the preceding chapter, it is strongly impressed upon the children of Israel, that when they heard "the voice of words" at mount Sinai, they "saw no similitude, but only heard a voice." (Chap. iv. 12.) They saw, indeed, a cloud of glory, and of darkness, that was terrible to behold; so much so, that they desired to see it no more; but there was no likeness of any created being, either "in heaven above, or in earth beneath, or in the waters beneath the earth."

On the subsequent parts of this chapter, we shall only remark, that though the people were very ready to promise, there was too much reason to suspect their equal readiness to obey. "O that there were a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children, for ever!" God delighteth not in the death of a sinner, much less in the punishment of his own people. (Ezek. xviii. 32. Isa. xxviii. 21.)

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—25. Moses enforces the first principles of all true religion:—the unity and love of God. The unity of God is so much a first principle with us, that we generally regard it as a truism; but it was far otherwise in those early ages. It was, in fact, peculiar to the Hebrews, and the ground on which they were universally hated. Had JEHOVAH been content to rank

Yisrael, Yehovah, Elohim, Yehovah aichod. "Hear, Israel, Jehovah our God, is one JEHOVAH." On this passage the Jews lay great stress: and it is one of the four passages which they write on their phylacteries. On the word Elohim, Simeon ben Joachi says, "Come and see the mystery of the word Elohim: there are three degrees, and each degree is by itself alone, and yet they are all one, and joined together in one, and are not divided from each other."—B. The Hebrew reads, "Jehovah our Elohim, Jehovah is one;" the last letters in the first and last words being written and printed much larger than the others; this, however, is probably a rabbinical whim. That Elohim is plural we have stated in the very opening of our work, (on Gen. i. 1.) and as it is quite certain that Jehovah is singular, this has been thought to point out "three persons in one God;" but the evidence would certainly have been much stronger had the incommutable name been three times repeated, instead of twice.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt teach them diligently.—The original word, (Shinan-tem), says Dr. Clarke, signifies to repeat, iterate, or do a thing again and again as we sharpen a knife by rubbing it on a stone; hence the margin reads, "to whet, or sharpen."

Ver. 21. His field.—This occurs not in Exod. xx. 17.

Ver. 25. That hath heard, &c.—It seems to have been a general opinion, that if God appeared to men, it was for the purpose of destroying them. And indeed most of the extraordinary manifestations of God were in the way of judgment; but here it was widely different. God did appear in a sovereign and extraordinary manner, but it was for the instruction, direction, deliverance, and support of his people. 1. They heard this voice speaking with them in a distinct articulate manner. 2. They saw the fire, the symbol of his presence, the appearances of which demonstrated it to be supernatural. 3. Notwithstanding God appeared so terrible, yet no person was destroyed; for he came not to destroy, but to save.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Were such a heart.—[The language of the original is very emphatic: mee yittam wehayahev levavom zeh lahem, literally, "Who will give that there may be such a heart in them?" They refuse to receive such a heart from me, who then can supply it?—] Bagster.

Ver. 33. That ye may live.—That is, live long. Compare ver. 15.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 4. Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord.—[Shema, 8 And thou shalt <sup>m</sup> bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

9 And thou shalt <sup>n</sup> write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates.

10 And it shall be, when the LORD thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly cities, which thou <sup>o</sup> buildedst not,

11 And houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, and wells digged, which thou diggedst not, vineyards and olive-trees, which thou plantedst not; when thou shalt have eaten and be full;

12 Then beware lest thou forget the LORD, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of <sup>p</sup> bondage.

13 Thou <sup>q</sup> shalt fear the LORD thy God, and serve him, and shalt <sup>r</sup> swear by his name.

14 Ye <sup>s</sup> shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you;

16 Ye <sup>w</sup> shall not tempt the LORD your God, as ye tempted him in <sup>x</sup> Massah.

17 Ye shall <sup>y</sup> diligently keep the commandments of the LORD your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee.

18 And <sup>z</sup> thou shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD: that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land which the LORD swore unto thy fathers, 19 To <sup>a</sup> cast out all thine enemies from before thee, as the LORD hath spoken.

20 And when thy son asketh <sup>b</sup> thee in time to come, saying, <sup>c</sup> What mean the testimonies, among the gods of the Egyptians or Assyrians, the Greeks or Romans, they would probably have allowed him a niche in their idol temples: but the LORD is a jealous God, and will not even suffer his name to be associated with theirs,—will not permit his worshippers even to name an idol.

There is certainly something striking and expressive in the manner in which this first article of the Jewish and Christian faith is here expressed, especially in the original; "Hear, O Israel, JEHOVAH our God is one JEHOVAH." Many Christian divines have thought the Trinity in Unity here intimated; and though the Rabbins will not admit this, some of them have confessed (according to Bishop Patrick) there is some thing very mysterious, both in the text itself, and in the manner in which they write it.

If the word of God dwell in our hearts, we shall always be anxious to teach it to our children; and where the Bible is not employed as a medium of instruction, it certainly marks a low sense of its excellence and importance. Not that all should be promiscuously read by children, (for the Jews themselves omitted the Song of Solomon,) but the more important parts of the history of the Old Testament, the Psalms, the Proverbs, and the Gospels, cannot be taught to children too early. Many have in old age blessed God for the Scriptures they had learned in their infancy. Every thing in education, however, requires prudence. The mind may be overburdened without the judgment being informed: when the words are taught, the meaning (so

Ver. 8. A sign upon thine hand, and frontlets between thine eyes, &c.—The Tephillin, or phylacteries, are of two sorts; one for the head, and one for the arm. The Rabbins maintain that they should be literally explained, as requiring schedules, with some portions of Scripture to be affixed to the door-posts, and certain signs, tokens, and frontlets, to be fastened to the hand and arm, and between the eyes. The four paragraphs to be written on the Tephillin are, Exod. xiii. 1–10, and 11–16. Deut. vi. 4–9, and xi. 13–21. all inclusive.

Leo Modena says, "The men ought continually to wear their frontlets, or tephillin for the head, which is commanded in Deut. vi. 8–9; xi. 18, 19. Notwithstanding, at present, partly to avoid the scoffs of the nations among whom they live, and also because they account these holy things, and such as ought to be used with great discretion, and not upon every trivial occasion, they put them on only in the time of prayer. A mezuzah is a piece of parchment, on which are written two portions of Scripture: Deut. vi. 4–9; xi. 13–20. The parchment is rolled up with the ends of the lines inward, the Hebrew word Shaddai is inscribed on the outside, and the roll is put into a cane, or a cylindrical tube of lead, in which a hole is cut, that the word Shaddai may appear. The tube is fastened to the door-post by a nail at each end. The injunction of the law being in the plural number, upon the posts of thine house and on thy gates," it is considered that mezuzoth should be fixed on all

CHAPTER VII.

1 All communion with the nations is forbidden, for fear of idolatry, &c.

WHEN the LORD thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out <sup>a</sup> many nations before thee, the <sup>b</sup> Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou;

2 And when the LORD thy God shall deliver them before thee; thou shalt smite them and <sup>c</sup> utterly destroy them, thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them.

3 Neither shalt thou make <sup>d</sup> marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son.

4 For they will ruin away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

5 But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall far as is necessary to render them useful to children) should be imparted with them: and no method can be better adapted for this purpose than that which is here suggested, namely, to introduce them into our family conversations, at home or abroad, and especially evening and morning. It is added, "Thou shalt bind them as a sign upon thine hand," &c. Some Christian expositors suppose this meant only figuratively, that they should continually have them in mind: but seeing their religion was full of ritual observances, it seems very natural to understand them literally, as the Jews did: and as our Lord did not reprove the Pharisees for wearing phylacteries, but only for making them broad, by an ostentatious display, we have reason to conclude that the use of them was not only lawful, but a duty. Indeed, we are so apt to forget the most important truths, that we have need of every rational means to impress them on our minds.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1–25. No alliances to be made with the Canaanites.—We have seen the command for destroying the devoted nations of Canaan, and the reasons on which it was founded: both are repeated again and again in this book, and in the following book of Joshua. The order for their destruction is founded on their incurable attachment to idolatry; an attachment that, at first sight, may appear unaccountable to us Christians, but the following hints may lead us into the mystery. 1. Men naturally prefer a deity like themselves. In paganism, they found a variety of gods and goddesses, not only the doors of dwelling-houses, whether parlours, bed-rooms, kitchens, or cell-towns.—Allen's Modern Judaism.

Ver. 13. And serve him.—Our Saviour quotes these words thus: "And him only shalt thou serve;" from which it would appear that the word levaddai was anciently in the Hebrew text, as it was in the Septuagint, Coptic, Vulgate, and Anglo-Saxon. Dr. Kennicott argues, that without the word only the text would not have been conclusive for the purpose for which our Lord advanced it. It is proper, however, to observe, that the word levaddai is not found in any MS. yet collated, though retained in the above versions. —Bag.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. The Hittites, &c.—In the promise to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18–21, there are ten nations named instead of seven; but great revolutions had doubtless taken place since that period. For their different stations in the country, see note on Josh. iii. 10.—[With respect to the situation of these nations in the land of Canaan, Calmet remarks, that the Canaanites chiefly inhabited Phœnicia; the Hittites, the mountains south of the promised land in the Hittites, mount Ebal, and Gerizim, and towards the lake of Harnon; the Girgashites, beyond Jordan, towards the lake of Gennesareth; the Jebusites, about Jerusalem; the Amorites, the mountains west of the Dead sea, and part of the land of Moab; and that the Perizzites were probably not a distinct nation, but villagers scattered through the country. —Bagster. & destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire.

6 ¶ For thou art a holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.

7 The LORD did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people:

8 But because the LORD loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bond-men, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

9 ¶ Know therefore that the LORD thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations;

10 And repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face.

11 Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them.

12 ¶ Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep, and do them, that the LORD thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he swore unto thy fathers:

13 And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he swore unto thy fathers to give thee.

14 Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle.

15 And the LORD will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee.

16 And thou shalt consume all the people which the LORD thy God shall deliver thee: thine eye shall have no pity upon them: neither shalt thou serve their gods; for that will be a snare unto thee.

17 If thou shalt say in thine heart, These nations are more than I, how can I dispossess them?

18 Thou shalt not be afraid of them: but shalt well remember what the LORD thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt;

19 The great temptations which thine eyes saw, and the signs, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the stretched out arm, whereby the LORD thy God brought thee out: so shall the LORD thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid.

20 Moreover, the LORD thy God will send the hornet among them, until they that are left, and hide themselves from thee, be destroyed.

21 Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the LORD thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible.

22 And the LORD thy God will put out those nations before thee by little and little: thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beasts of the field increase upon thee.

23 But the LORD thy God shall deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them with a mighty destruction, until they be destroyed.

24 And he shall deliver their kings into thy hand, and thou shalt destroy their name from under heaven: there shall no man be able to stand before thee, until thou have destroyed them.

25 ¶ The graven images of their gods shall ye burn with fire: thou shalt not desire the silver or gold that is on them, nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein: for it is an abomination to the LORD thy God.

26 Neither shalt thou bring an abomination into thy house, lest thou be a cursed thing like it: but thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it; for it is a cursed thing.

endowed with human passions, but with the same frailties as themselves. Heroes, indeed, and famed for strength and courage; but artful, envious, and addicted to every species of licentiousness. Such were much more agreeable to the depravity of human nature than the rigorous and jealous character of the God of Israel; who not only could endure no rival, but no compeer—no partner in his throne. 2. A god himself subject to frailties, would naturally be supposed more indulgent to the vices of mankind. So that, admitting them to be conscious of the conduct of their worshippers, if they had their due portion of sacrifices, they were not likely to be very strict as to the principles of morality; a little lewdness or intemperance must be of small consideration with them, though intolerable to the God of Israel. 3. Men love to mingle not only pomp and splendour with their devotions, but also the indulgences of intemperance and lust, which are always and necessarily connected with the worship of such deities as Venus and Bacchus, and many others: and the natural attachment to these is in nothing more evident than in the astonishing fact, that though the external orgies of these idols are now suppressed, there are multitudes who call themselves Christians, that still praise them with all the zeal of devotees, and with as much delight as ever they were celebrated in the Pagan world! It is not to be wondered at, then, that the Gentile world was attached to paganism.

Moses, while he interdicts the Israelites from heathen rites and heathen vices, is no less anxious to guard them against supposing, that they were in themselves better than the nations that were expelled to make room for them. "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number (or, by parity of reason, because ye were better) than other people; . . . but because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers." 1. God fixes his love upon sinners gratuitously. He saith, "I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will and Pharaoh, Moses and the Magicians, in which the former triumphed most decidedly. See Exod. viii. 18, 19; ix. 11; x. 2, &c.

Ver. 20. Will send the hornet.—Bochart cites several instances of people being chased from their habitations by hornets; and Elian mentions the Phaseliotes, a party of Canaanites, driven from the mountains of Solyma by wasps. Joshua mentions two kings of the Amorites actually driven out of the land by hornets, Josh. xxiv. 12. Dr. T. M. Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible, in Hornets.

Ver. 22. Lest the beasts of the field increase.—(As the Israelites were not yet sufficiently numerous to fill the whole land occupied by these nations; and as wild and ferocious animals might be expected to multiply where the place was but thinly peopled, therefore God informs them that their extermination was but thinly peopled, therefore God informs them that their extermination from before them should be gradual. Haynes says, "The approaching to Cana, at the close of the day, as we did, is at once terrifying and dangerous. The surrounding country swarms with wild beasts, such as tigers, leopards, jackals, &c. whose cries and howling, I doubt not, would strike the holiest traveller, who had been frequently in a like situation, with the deepest sense of horror."—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Thou shalt not desire the silver nor the gold that is on them.—Many of their idols were wood, plated over with gold; and lest this should tempt them to preserve the idols, they are commanded to burn them, that the gold might be melted down, and the image beneath utterly destroyed.

Ver. 26. It is a cursed thing.—It must, therefore, be brought home, lest Ver. 6. To be a special people.—St. Paul seems to quote this "a peculiar people," Titus ii. 14. Compare Exod. xix. 5.

Ver. 7. Ye were the fewest of all people.—See chap. x. 22. "It was no good in them that induced God to choose them, at this time, to be his peculiar people: he had his reasons, but these sprung from his infinite goodness."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 10. He will repay him to his face.—That is, openly, fully, in the sight of all men. See chap. xxxii. 35, 36.

Ver. 15. The evil diseases of Egypt.—One of these was called Egyptiaca, or "the botch of Egypt," chap. xxvii. 27. It appears to have been a species of elephantiasis, common on the banks of the Nile. See Clarke on the latter text.—The Israelites, if obedient, would have been subject to no maladies but those common to fallen men, and generally very healthy and long lived; being exempted from pestilential diseases, which have often most tremendously scourged guilty nations; and from such maladies in particular, as they had witnessed in Egypt, by which God afflicted their cruel oppressors, but of which we know nothing with certainty. (Ex. xv. 26.) this must be referred to the national covenant: for though godliness commonly secures the most solid temporal advantages; yet temporal blessings were not, even among them, uniformly dispensed to individuals according to their obedience: but they were to the nation, with an exactness which is not observed towards any other people.—Bagster.

CHAPTER VIII.

An exhortation to obedience in regard of God's dealings with them.

ALL <sup>a</sup>the commandments which I command thee this day <sup>b</sup>shall ye observe to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers.

2 And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these <sup>c</sup>forty years in the <sup>d</sup>wilderness, to humble <sup>e</sup>thee, and to <sup>f</sup>prove thee, to <sup>g</sup>know what was in thy heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no.

3 And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with <sup>h</sup>manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that <sup>i</sup>man doth not live by bread only, but by every <sup>j</sup>word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live.

4 Thy <sup>k</sup>raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.

5 Thou shalt also consider in thy heart, that <sup>l</sup>as a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee.

6 Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to <sup>m</sup>fear him.

7 For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills;

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates, a <sup>n</sup>land of oil-olive, and honey;

9 A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any <sup>o</sup>thing in it; a land whose stones are <sup>p</sup>iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

10 When thou hast <sup>q</sup>eaten and art full, then thou shalt <sup>r</sup>bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day:

12 Lest <sup>s</sup>when thou hast eaten, and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt <sup>t</sup>therein;

13 And <sup>u</sup>when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied;

14 Then thy heart be lifted up, and thou <sup>v</sup>forget the Lord thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage;

15 Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderness, <sup>w</sup>wherein were fiery <sup>x</sup>serpents, and scorpions, and <sup>y</sup>drought, where there was no water: who brought thee forth <sup>z</sup>water out of the rock of flint;

16 Who fed thee in the wilderness with <sup>a</sup>manna, which thy fathers knew not, that <sup>b</sup>he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, <sup>c</sup>to do thee good at thy latter end:

17 And thou say in thy <sup>d</sup>heart, My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth.

18 But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for <sup>e</sup>it is <sup>f</sup>he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers, as <sup>g</sup>it is this day.

19 And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I <sup>h</sup>testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish.

20 As the nations which the Lord destroyeth before your face, <sup>i</sup>so shall ye perish; because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord your God.

show mercy on whom I will show mercy." (Exod. xxxiii. 19.) 2. He perseveres in his love and in his mercy, not only from the unchangeableness of his nature, but also from his fidelity to his covenant. "He is the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his commandments, to a thousand generations." Neither, however, the freeness of his mercy, nor his unchangeable fidelity, are to be abused, as arguments to relax in our obedience; for because that he is gracious and is faithful, as well as because he will punish the disobedient: "Therefore (saith he) thou shalt keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them."

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—20. Grateful recollections of the Lord's dealings.—It is here said, that Israel were led forty years through the wilderness, "to prove them and to humble them;" but this was accomplished by a very slow process; for, even to the fortieth year of their pilgrimage, we find them as full of murmuring and repining as at their first setting out. Now, there seems but one way to account for this, and that is, by looking into our own experience. Do not the most aged and tried Christians often find in their own hearts the same disposition to repine at the dispensations of Providence, and to be as much discouraged by the dangers and inconveniences of the way, as in early life; and these are kept down, not by national calamities, but by personal afflictions; not by pestilence and lightning, but by gout and rheumatism, scrofula and nervous fever: these, accompanied by the gracious influences of God's Spirit, are the means employed both to humble and to prove us in our Christian course. On this most interesting fact we may farther observe,

1. That the Lord's great end in all his dealings with his people, is to do them good. All their trials, on the part of God, are the effect of infinite wisdom and goodness united, for their deliverance from sin and all its consequences.

2. That pride is natural to the human heart; and no degree of meanness, wretchedness, or dependance, can exclude it. Like some disgusting animals, who extract poison from the most harmless vegetables, pride inflates itself from circumstances the most humiliating. Would one suppose that a people, after forty years slavery at the brick-kilns and iron-furnaces—after being treated as the offscouring of the earth, and degraded to the very lowest degree—that, after all this, they should need the thorns of the wilderness to humble them? But such is man.

3. The best things are not always the pleasantest; but the most efficacious medicines are often the most unpalatable. Israel, as we have observed, met with many painful and mortifying circumstances in the desert; but it was to do them good. Humbling providences are often our greatest mercies.

4. Mercies are doubly sweet when intermingled with trials. Contrasts produce great effects in nature; and it is by comparison with other objects, we form our most correct ideas of the excellent and beautiful. So pain and sickness teach the value of health and ease; and to hunger and thirst we principally owe our relish for food: therefore it is that the Lord mingles in the cup of his people such a contrariety of ingredients. Let us, plentiful, and cultivated in Egyptian hives, made of clay. Its vines and pomegranates were also famous.

Ver. 9. Whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.—Not only were there iron mines, but many of their loose stones were strongly impregnated with iron ore. They had also mines of copper (perhaps always meant by brass, in the Old Testament.) for our brass is an artificial metal, formed by the addition of lapis calaminaris. See Dr. Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible, in Brass and Copper.

Ver. 15. Wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions.—On fiery serpents, see Note on Numb. xxi. 6. A scorpion is similar in form to a lobster, with a sharp poisonous sting in its tail; the Arabs call lobsters "sea-scorpions." See Dr. Harris's Nat. Hist.—Dr. Shaw, in his Travels through this wilderness, observes, that, "We were now and then offended with several little swarms of locusts, and hornets, both of them of an unusual size, though of the ordinary colours. Vipers, especially in the wilderness of Sin, were very dangerous and troublesome, not only our camels, but the Arabs who attended them, running every moment the risk of being bitten." The Doctor having given these reptiles only the general name of viper, we cannot, from his account, identify the species. He again alludes to this desert, as affording a great plenty of the serpentine kinds it bring a curse on its possessor. Every thing connected with idolatry was accursed.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 3. By every word, &c.—That is, by every dispensation of his providence. He that commanded light out of darkness, commanded bread and flesh from heaven, water from the rock, &c. See Luke iv. 4.

Ver. 4. Thy raiment waxed not old.—The plain meaning of this much tortured text, (says Dr. Clarke) appears to me to be this: "God so amply provided for them all the necessities of life, that they were never obliged to wear tattered garments, nor were their feet injured for lack of shoes or sandals. If they had carvers, engravers, silversmiths, and jewellers among them, as plainly appears from the account we have of the tabernacle and its utensils, is it to be wondered at if they had habit and sandal-makers, &c. as we are certain they had weavers, embroiderers, and such like." As to materials, they had the skins of animals, slain either for food or sacrifice, and other materials might easily be obtained in exchange with the travelling Arabs. So he late Editor of Calmet, Dr. Boothroyd, &c. The Rabbinical fable of their clothes growing large with their bodies, &c. is now universally rejected.

Ver. 8. A land of wheat and barley, &c.—Harnier, on the fertility of Judea, quotes Hasselquist, (the celebrated traveller,) who speaks of the olives and figs in Judea as equal to any he had tasted in the Levant. Money is very

CHAPTER IX.

Moses dissuadeth them from the opinion of their own righteousness, by rehearsing their several rebellions.

HEAR, O Israel: Thou art to pass <sup>a</sup> over Jordan this day, to go in to possess nations <sup>b</sup> greater and mightier than thyself, cities great and fenced up to heaven,

<sup>7</sup> ¶ Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderness: <sup>m</sup> from the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD.

<sup>8</sup> Also <sup>n</sup> in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, so that the LORD was angry with you to have destroyed you.

<sup>9</sup> When I was gone up into the mount, to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, then I <sup>o</sup> abode in the mount forty days and forty nights, I neither did eat bread nor drink water:

<sup>10</sup> And the <sup>p</sup> LORD delivered unto me two tables of stone written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words which the LORD spake with you in the <sup>q</sup> mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly.

<sup>11</sup> And it came to pass at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the <sup>r</sup> covenant.

<sup>12</sup> And the LORD said unto me, Arise, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themselves; they are <sup>s</sup> quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.

<sup>15</sup> So <sup>x</sup> I turned and came down from the mount, and <sup>y</sup> the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.

<sup>16</sup> And I looked, and behold, ye had sinned against the LORD your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you.

<sup>17</sup> And I took the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes.

then, receive it thankfully, with this consolation, that the sweetness of our comforts will remain, when every taste of bitterness is lost and forgotten for ever.

It is our duty and privilege to see the hand of God in all the circumstances of life: even food and raiment, whether bestowed through our own industry, or by the special gift of Providence, are to be viewed as from his bountiful hand, without whose blessing our labours might not succeed, nor our food nourish us. "Thou shalt remember the LORD thy God; for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he swore unto thy fathers, as it is this day."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1.—29. Moses cautions the children of Israel against self-righteousness.—A caution this as necessary to us as to them;—in our age, as it was 3000 years ago. Here are several errors to be guarded against. 1. Persons who prosper in the world, are too apt to attribute their success to their own merits, whereas much may be owing to the folly or wickedness of others, who are punished by the same means as they are enriched: Israel was enriched by the punishment of Canaan. 2. As this is common in respect of temporal things, much more is it so in matters of religion. The Pharisee, who fasts twice in the week, or gives tithes of his possessions, imagines that he lays the Almighty under obligations to reward him; not considering that he is a sinner, and a rebel against his Maker. 3. Whatever God does for us, it is for the sake of another.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. This day.—[Hymn, "this day," frequently denotes, as here, this time. They had come 38 years before this nearly to the verge of the promised land, but were not permitted, because of their unbelief and rebellion, at that day or time, to enter; but this time they shall certainly pass over. This was spoken in the eleventh month of the fortieth year of their journeying; and it was on the first month of the following year they passed over: and during this interval Moses died.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Not for thy righteousness.—[Though the Canaanites were expelled for their wickedness, it does not follow, that the Israelites were established in their room on account of any distinguished virtue, or because they deserved it. On many occasions, it may be seen in the history of the world,

What he did for Israel, as a nation, was for the sake of their fathers; what he does for us, is for the sake of his own Son. They provoked the Lord at Horeb, by worshipping a golden calf, and were continually, for forty years afterwards, murmuring and rebelling. Who can lay his hand upon his heart and say, I am not an idolater? or, I am not a rebel? It is our mercy that we have a better Mediator than Moses; who is also the Mediator of a better covenant. "It is good for us (says Henry) often to recollect against ourselves, with sorrow and shame, our former sins; and to review the records which conscience keeps of them, that we may see how much we are indebted to free grace, and may humbly own, that we never merited at God's hand any thing but wrath and the curse."

In his introduction to these cautions, the prophet says, "Hear, O Israel! thou art to pass over Jordan this day," but this was before the death of Moses, probably a full month, and consequently many days before they actually passed over: but day is often used in a loose sense, for a short time, or period, and must be so taken here. (See Gen. ii. 4, 17. Deut. vii. 11; viii. 11; ix. 24; xiii. 18; xxviii. 9, &c.)

In the close of this chapter, Moses informs the people with what earnestness he had pleaded on their behalf, and particularly on the behalf of Aaron, with whom the Lord was very angry, on account of the calf which he made, and which they worshipped. (See Exod. xxxii. expos. and notes.) And it is very remarkable, that in all the petitions of Moses to the Lord that God punishes the wicked by the instrumentality of other men, who are as wicked as themselves. Not the Israelites' righteousness, but the wickedness of the inhabitants, and the promise of God to their fathers, was the cause of their obtaining Canaan.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Two tables.—[Moses might have done this through distress and anguish of spirit on beholding their abominable idolatry and dissolute conduct: or probably he did it emblematically, and perhaps by the direction of God, intimating thereby that, as by this act of his the tables were broken in James, on which the law of God was written, so they, by their present conduct, had made a breach in the covenant, and broken the laws of their Maker and Sovereign.]—Bagster.

20 And the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time.

21 And I took your <sup>a</sup> sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small, even until it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount.

22 And at <sup>e</sup> Taberah, and at <sup>f</sup> Massah, and at <sup>g</sup> Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath.

23 Likewise <sup>h</sup> when the LORD sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God, and ye <sup>i</sup> believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice.

24 Ye have been <sup>j</sup> rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you.

25 Thus <sup>k</sup> I fell down before the LORD forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first; because the LORD had said he would destroy you.

26 I <sup>l</sup> prayed therefore unto the LORD, and said, O Lord God, destroy not thy people and <sup>m</sup> thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed through thy greatness, which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

27 Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; look not unto the <sup>n</sup> stubbornness of this people, nor to their <sup>o</sup> wickedness, nor to their <sup>p</sup> sin:

28 Lest the <sup>q</sup> land whence thou broughtest us out, say, Because <sup>r</sup> the LORD was not able to bring them into the land which he promised them, and because he hated them, he hath brought them out to slay them in the wilderness.

29 Yet <sup>s</sup> they are thy people and thine inheritance which thou broughtest out by thy mighty power and by thy stretched out arm.

CHAPTER X.

1 God's mercy in restoring the two tables, 10 in hearkening unto Moses' suit for the people. 12 An exhortation unto obedience.

AT that time the LORD said unto me, Hew <sup>a</sup> thee two tables of stone like unto the first, and come up unto me into the mount, and make thee an <sup>b</sup> ark of wood.

2 And I will write on the tables the words that were in the first tables which thou brakest, and thou shalt put them in the ark.

3 And I made an ark of <sup>c</sup> shittim-wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, for Israel, he uses but two pleas; namely, a regard for his own glory, and the covenant which he had made with Abraham. (See Exod. xxxiii. 11—14. Numb. xiv. 13, &c.) And thus it is with us; we can plead the covenant made with Christ, our Redeemer, and the glory resulting to the divine mercy from the pardon of sinners, such as we are: but as to all pleas of personal worthiness, our mouths must be shut for ever.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—22. The two tables restored, and obedi-

Ver. 21. I took your sin, the calf.—See Exod. xxxii. 15—35. exposition.—Brook, &c.—[This was the stream which flowed from the rock that Moses smote with his rod. (Ex. xvii. 6.) and to which the Psalmist alludes in Ps. lxxvii. 16—20. &c.] Alto relates that upon Moses striking the rock, the water poured out like a torrent, affording not only a sufficient quantity for allaying their present thirst, but to fill their water vessels to carry with them on their journey.—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Forty days and forty nights.—From the mention of forty days twice before in this chapter, (ver. 11 and 18) some have concluded that Moses fasted three times forty days and nights; but for this, as Scott remarks, the text affords not sufficient authority. The words of Moses are, "Thus I fell down," &c.; meaning as before related.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Make an ark of wood.—[It is evident that the ark of the covenant, and not a temporary ark, was here intended; for the two tables of the law continued in it, at the time when Moses delivered this discourse.—Probably, before he ascended the mount the second time, he gave express orders to Bezaleel to get the ark ready against he came down; and, having directed and ordered the making of it, he speaks as if he had made it: thus Solomon is said to have built the temple, which he caused to be built by the hands of others.—B.

Ver. 6. The children of Israel took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to Mosera.—Beeroth signifies "wells;" so that they stopped here to procure water for themselves and cattle: but Numb. xxxiii. which contains a regular list of their encampments, says, (ver. 31.) "They departed from Moseroth, (the plural of Mosera,) and pitched in Bene-jaakan;" i. e. among the children of Jaakan, which can only be reconciled by supposing they twice visited the children of Jaakan, who might have two settlements, a thing and went up into the mount, having the two tables in my hand.

4 And he <sup>d</sup> wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten <sup>e</sup> commandments, <sup>f</sup> which the LORD spake unto you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly: and the LORD gave them unto me.

5 And I turned myself and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made; and <sup>g</sup> there they be, as the LORD commanded me.

6 ¶ And <sup>h</sup> the children of Israel took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to Mosera: there Aaron died, and there he was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead.

7 From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah; and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters.

9 Wherefore <sup>n</sup> Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren; the LORD <sup>o</sup> is his inheritance, according as the LORD thy God promised him.

10 ¶ And I stayed in the mount, according to the <sup>p</sup> first time, forty days and forty nights: and the LORD <sup>q</sup> hearkened unto me at that time also, and the LORD would not destroy thee.

11 And the LORD said unto me, Arise, <sup>r</sup> take thy journey before the people, that they may go in and possess the land which I swear unto their fathers to give unto them.

12 ¶ And now, Israel, what <sup>s</sup> doth the LORD thy God require of thee, but to <sup>t</sup> fear the LORD thy God, to <sup>u</sup> walk in all his ways, and to <sup>v</sup> love him, and to <sup>w</sup> serve the LORD thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, 13 To keep the commandments of the LORD, and his statutes, which I command thee this day <sup>x</sup> for thy good?

14 Behold, the <sup>y</sup> heaven and the heaven of <sup>z</sup> heavens is the LORD's thy God, the <sup>a</sup> earth also, with all that therein is.

15 Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day.

16 Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your <sup>b</sup> heart, and be no more stiff-necked.

ence again enjoined.—The history of these second tables we have already had, in the 34th chapter of Exodus, and it needs no farther remark. But there is a passage relative to the encampments of the children of Israel, and the death of Aaron, (verses 6 and 7,) which is evidently a parenthesis, and, as Scott thinks, should follow the eleventh verse. The words themselves are also difficult to reconcile with the journal of their encampments in Numbers, (chap. xxxiii.) Such small by no means unlikely. It must be confessed, however, that the Samaritan Pentateuch contains a much clearer account, probably supplied from the chapter in Numbers above referred to. That account is thus given by Dr. Kennicott:—"When the children of Israel journeyed from Moseroth, and encamped Bene-jaakan, from thence they journeyed and encamped at Hagidag: from thence they journeyed and encamped in Jotbathah, a land of rivers of waters: from thence they journeyed and encamped in Ebronah:—in Ezion-gaber:—in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh; and then at mount Hor. And Aaron died there, and was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead. At that time the LORD separated the tribe of Levi." &c.—Mosera <sup>h</sup> there Aaron died.—But in Numbers xxxiii. 38, 39, we read that Aaron died in mount Hor; those who reject the additions of the Samaritan (see word) above the text, even at Mosera, to be the same with Hor, which is not impossible. The name Hor, signifies a mount, by way of eminence: and mount Hor was probably so called from the prospect it afforded, as we often call such a rising ground "Mount Pleasant." (So Pisgah, where Moses died, signifies the hill; i. e. a peak arising on mount Nebo.—To return to Aaron:) Moseroth signifies a chain, i. e. of mountains; Mosera (the singular of Moseroth) a link of that chain, and might properly refer to Hor, as scelling (the radical idea of the word) above the text, even at Pisgah on mount Nebo.

Ver. 14. Heaven of heavens.—(Hashshamayim shemay hashshamayim, "the heavens and the heavens of heavens.") All these words are in the plural; and are probably intended to point out the immensity of God's creation, in which we may readily conceive one system of heavenly bodies, and others beyond them, and others still in endless progression, through the whole immensity of space.—Hagidag.

18 He <sup>f</sup> doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment.

19 Love <sup>g</sup> ye therefore the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt fear the LORD thy God; him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou <sup>h</sup> cleave, and <sup>i</sup> swear by his name.

21 He <sup>j</sup> is thy <sup>k</sup> praise, and he <sup>l</sup> is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things which thine eyes have seen.

22 Thy fathers went down into <sup>m</sup> Egypt with threescore and ten persons; and now the LORD thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

CHAPTER XI.

1 An exhortation to obedience. 18 A careful study is required in God's words. 26 The blessing and curse are set before them.

THEREFORE thou shalt love the LORD thy God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments, always.

2 ¶ And know ye this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, and which have not seen the <sup>a</sup> chastisement of the LORD your God, his greatness, his mighty hand, and his stretched out arm,

3 And his miracles, and his acts, which he did in the midst of Egypt, unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt, and unto all his land;

4 And what he did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horses, and to their chariots; how he made the <sup>b</sup> water of the Red sea to overflow them as they pursued after you, and how the LORD hath destroyed them unto this day;

5 And what he did unto you in the wilderness, until ye came into this place;

6 And what he did unto Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, the son of Reuben: how the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and <sup>c</sup> their households, and their tents, and all the substance that <sup>d</sup> was in their possession, in the midst of all Israel:

7 But your eyes have seen all the great acts of the LORD which he did.

8 ¶ Therefore shall ye keep all the commandments which I command you this day, that ye may be strong, and go in and possess the land, whither ye go to possess it;

9 And that ye may prolong your days in the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers to give unto them, and to their seed, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where <sup>e</sup> thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs:

11 But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven:

12 A land which the LORD thy God <sup>f</sup> careth for: the <sup>g</sup> eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year.

13 And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken <sup>h</sup> diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, to <sup>i</sup> love the LORD your God, and to serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul, 14 That <sup>j</sup> I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the <sup>k</sup> first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil.

15 And <sup>l</sup> I will <sup>m</sup> send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest <sup>n</sup> eat and be full.

16 Take <sup>o</sup> heed to yourselves, that your <sup>p</sup> heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside and serve other gods, and worship them;

17 And then the LORD's <sup>q</sup> wrath be kindled against you, and he <sup>r</sup> shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit; and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

18 Therefore shall ye lay <sup>s</sup> up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and <sup>t</sup> bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.

19 And <sup>u</sup> ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

20 And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thy house, and upon thy gates:

21 That <sup>v</sup> your days may be multiplied, and mistakes and apparent dislocations occur in all very ancient writings, and (as we have before observed) could not have been prevented without a perpetual miracle; but it is our consolation, that though these may create some difficulties in geography or chronology, they affect neither the doctrines nor the duties of religion.

The practical admonitions which follow, are not more excellent in themselves than they are eloquently expressed. They trace all the blessings of Israel to their proper source, "The Lord had a delight in thy fathers;" and show the accomplishment of all the promises made to them in their present wonderful increase. "Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons; and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude. He is thy praise, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things, which thine eyes have seen."

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—32. Moses exhorts the people to obedience.—The first verse of this chapter, as Scott remarks, belongs evidently to the preceding, of which it is clearly a practical

Ver. 22. Three score and ten.—[And now, from so small a beginning, they are multiplied to more than 600,000 men, besides women and children; and this, indeed, in the space of 40 years; for the 603,000 which came out of Egypt, were at this time all dead, except Moses, Joshua, and Caleb.] How easy can God increase and multiply, as well as diminish and bring low! In all things, by his omnipotence, he can do whatsoever he will; and he will do whatsoever is right.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 10. And waterest it with thy foot.—Dr. Shaw illustrates this from the present practice of the Egyptians, who preserve the water of the Nile in large cisterns, from which, in the dry seasons, they draw the plugs, and "then the water gushing out is conducted from one rill to another by the gardener, who is always ready, as occasion requires, to stop and divert the torrent, by turning the earth against it with his foot, and opening at the same time with his mallet a new trench to receive it." This method, however, though applied to certain productions of Egypt, (as pulse, melons, &c.) does not appear to be applied to corn, which seems to be here chiefly referred to. Paric-hurst, therefore, thinks it more probable, that by "watering by the foot," Mose alluded to "a machine for drawing up water, which was worked by the foot," (a kind of tread-mill.) Such a one, Grattus long ago observed, that Philo, who lived in Egypt, has described as used by the peasants of that country in his time. Niebuhr also gives a representation of a kind of "hydraulic machine, worked by the feet;" and it is well known that the Chinese have a machine of this kind in use to the present day.

Ver. 19. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, &c.—Among the Chinese, moral maxims are inculcated by the aged on the younger branches of the family, and plain sentences of morality are hung up in the common hall, where the male branches of the family assemble. This appears to be exactly the same method as was practised by the ancient Hebrews in the time of Moses. See Macartney's Embassy to China.

We have given (note on ch. vi. 8.) the manner in which the Jews observe this precept respecting their door-posts; but it seems much more rational to suppose that the passages were to be posted, or placarded open, as by the Chinese and Europeans, than folded up like the Mozza, which, in fact, degenerated into a superstitious charm.

the days of your children, in the land which the LORD swear unto your fathers to give them, as the <sup>w</sup> days of heaven upon the earth.

22 For if ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, to do them, to love the LORD your God, to walk in all his ways, and to <sup>a</sup> cleave unto him;

23 Then will the LORD <sup>v</sup> drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves.

24 Every place <sup>z</sup> whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the <sup>a</sup> wilderness and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea shall your coast be.

25 There <sup>b</sup> shall no man be able to stand before you: for the LORD your God shall lay the <sup>c</sup> fear of you and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, as he hath said <sup>d</sup> unto you.

26 ¶ Behold, I <sup>e</sup> set before you this day a blessing and a curse:

27 A <sup>f</sup> blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you this day;

28 And a <sup>g</sup> curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the LORD your God, but turn <sup>h</sup> aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods which ye have not known.

29 And it shall come to pass when the LORD thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou halt <sup>i</sup> put the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal.

30 Are they not on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down, in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the campaign over against Gilgal, beside the plains of Moreh?

31 For ye shall pass over Jordan to go in to possess the land which the LORD your God giveth you, and ye shall possess it, and dwell therein.

32 And ye shall <sup>j</sup> observe to do all the statutes and judgments which I set before you this day.

CHAPTER XII.

Monuments of idolatry are to be destroyed. <sup>k</sup> The place of God's service is to be kept.

THESE <sup>l</sup> are the statutes and judgments which ye shall observe to do in the land which the LORD God of thy fathers giveth thee this refers to the digging of trenches, and the formation of little banks by the foot, or to the raising water from the Nile by means of a kind of tread-mill, as the children of Israel were employed in all their most laborious services, at the brick-kilns and the iron mines, so there is no doubt but they were employed in this also when necessary, and perhaps in early life; and therefore is this circumstance particularly mentioned, as likely to impress them, in a comparison with a land watered by rain from heaven, and springs from the hills running through the valleys. But the principal circumstance in commendation of this land of promise is, that it was a land which the Lord "cared for," and watched over continually, to give them "the former and the latter rain," each in to possess it, <sup>b</sup> all the days that ye live upon the earth.

3 And ye shall <sup>f</sup> overthrow <sup>g</sup> their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their <sup>h</sup> groves with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of that place.

4 Ye <sup>i</sup> shall not do so unto the LORD your God.

5 But unto the <sup>j</sup> place which the LORD your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put his name there, even unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come:

6 And <sup>k</sup> thither ye shall bring your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, and your <sup>l</sup> tithes, and heave-offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will-offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks:

7 And there ye shall eat before the LORD your God, and ye shall rejoice <sup>m</sup> in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the LORD thy God hath blessed thee

8 Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, <sup>n</sup> every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes.

9 For ye are <sup>o</sup> not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance which the LORD your God giveth you.

10 But when ye go over <sup>p</sup> Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety:

11 Then there shall be a <sup>q</sup> place which the LORD your God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there; thither shall ye bring all that I command you, your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, your <sup>r</sup> tithes, and the heave-offering of your <sup>s</sup> hand, and <sup>t</sup> all your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD:

12 And ye shall <sup>u</sup> rejoice before the LORD your God, ye, and your sons, and your daughters, and your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and the Levite that is within your gates; forasmuch as he hath no <sup>v</sup> part nor inheritance with you.

its season, so long as they continued faithful and obedient; but if they did not, he who blesses his obedient people, hath also curses for the rebellious and disobedient. "Behold, (saith the prophet,) I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God;" and, if not, "a curse."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—32. Monuments of idolatry to be destroyed, &c.—Among these monuments of idolatry no mention is made of temples: and it is probable that the tabernacle in the wilderness was the first building ever formed, as a habitation for the Deity; and that a misunderstanding of its meaning and intention gave rise to the custom of building temples in after ages. Before this, men seem to have wor-

Ver. 30. The campaign.—That is, open country, or plain.—Beside the plains of Moreh.—Or "oaks of Moreh." (Ainsworth.) See note on Gen. xii. 6.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 3. Ye shall utterly destroy.—See Numb. xxxiii. 52. Deut. xxi. 22.

Ver. 6. High mountains.—(These were the places where the ancient heathen chose to worship their gods. Lucian says that they worshipped in mountains, because they were then nearer the gods, and so could be more easily heard.—Piny says, that groves "were the temples of the gods; and even now the simple people, after the ancient rites, dedicate to God such trees as excel the rest. Nor do we more adore the images glittering with gold and ivory, than we do the groves and their solemn silence.")—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Thither shall ye bring your offerings.—That is, to Jerusalem. Psalm lxxviii. 68, 69. Compare Levit. xvii. 4, 5. note, and ver. 11 and 14 this chapter.

Ver. 13. Take heed.—This was directly opposed to the customs of the heathen idolaters, in offering their sacrifices on the tops of hills and mountains, to which we before alluded, (on ver. 2.) Sophocles introduces Hercules asking Hyllus whether he knew Mount Oeta, which was sacred to Jupiter? "Yes," says he, "I have often sacrificed on its top." Strabo says of the Persians, "neither statues nor altars are erected, but their princes sacrifice on a high place to celestial Jupiter." So Apollonius says, that Mithridates sacrificed to Jupiter, according to the custom of his country, upon a high mountain.—B.

Ver. 24. From the river, even Euphrates, unto the uttermost sea;—namely, the Mediterranean. Compare Numb. xxxiv. 1—2. This was not fulfilled in its utmost extent until the reign of Solomon. See 2 Chron. ix. 26.

Ver. 29. Gerizim, and Ebal.—(Gerizim and Ebal, mountains west of Jordan, and in the tribe of Ephraim, are opposite or parallel to each other, extending from east to west; mount Gerizim being on the south, and mount Ebal on the north. They are separated by the beautiful valley in which Shechem or Nablous is situated, which is only about 200 paces in width. Both mountains are much alike in length, height, and figure; being about a league in length, in the form of a semicircle, and so steep, on the side of Shechem, that there is scarcely any shelving: their altitude appeared to Buckingham nearly equal, not exceeding 700 or 800 feet from the level of the valley, which is itself elevated. But though they resemble each other in these particulars, yet in another they are very dissimilar; for, says Maundrell, "though neither of the mountains has much to boast of as to their pleasantness, yet, as one passes between them, Gerizim seems to discover a somewhat more verdant, fruitful aspect, than Ebal. The reason of which may be, because fronting towards the north, it is sheltered from the heat of the sun by its own shade; whereas Ebal, looking southward, and receiving the sun that comes directly upon it, must by consequence be rendered more scorched and unfruitful.")—Bagster. For the blessings and curses, see ch. xxvii. 12. &c.

14 But in the place which the LORD shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee.

15 ¶ Notwithstanding, thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee: the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roe-buck, and as of the hart.

16 Only ye shall not eat the blood; ye shall pour it upon the earth as water.

17 ¶ Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil, or the firstlings of thy herds or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy free-will-offerings, or heave-offering of thy hand:

18 But thou must eat them before the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God in all that thou puttest thy hands unto.

19 ¶ Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest upon the earth.

20 ¶ When the LORD thy God shall enlarge thy border, as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, I will eat flesh, because thy soul longeth to eat flesh; thou mayest eat flesh, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

21 If the place which the LORD thy God hath chosen to put his name there be too far from thee, then thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat in thy gates whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

22 Even as the roe-buck and the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat them: the unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike.

23 Only be sure that thou eat not the blood for the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh.

24 Thou shalt not eat it; thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water.

25 Thou shalt not eat it; that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the LORD.

26 ¶ Only thy holy things which thou hast, and thy vows, thou shalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD shall choose:

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Enticers to idolatry, 10 are to be stoned to death. 15 Idolatrous cities are not to be spared.

IF there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, shipped in high or in shady places, as favourable to contemplation, or as supposed to be peculiarly sacred to the Deity, which custom was in many countries retained long afterwards. But the Israelites were strictly enjoined to destroy every thing which could keep up the memory, that such and such places had been sacred to any particular idol; and even, as far as possible, to erase from the memory of man the very names of their false gods; that the idolatry itself might sink into oblivion, through all the land of their inheritance. And especially, they must by no means imitate the Canaanites, by offering sacrifices in such places as they chose for themselves, however suitable they might think them for that purpose.

The people had before been directed to bring all their sacrifices to the door of the tabernacle. But at this time the general command was particularly explained, with reference to the promised land; and was expatiated on in a manner which evinced that it was of great importance. Idolatry and superstition would be prevented, and the true Object and prescribed method of worship adhered to, when all the sacrifices were offered at the same place, by the priests appointed for that purpose. Brotherly love and harmony in religion would be promoted, by the people thus constantly meeting together from every part of the land, and joining in sacred ordinances. And the temple, sacrifices, priests, and especially the ark of the covenant, were typical of Christ, through whom alone God can be acceptably worshipped by sinners. Where the ark, in the most holy place of the sanctuary, was stationed by divine appointment; there the LORD "put his NAME" as the one living and true God, the God of Israel, "a just God and a Saviour." There he made known his glorious perfections; and there only in ordinary cases, would he accept the sacrifices of his people; that they might feast before him with holy joy, as peculiarly in all things favoured and blessed by him. Yet prayer and praise might be offered any where, with reference to the sacrifices at the altar, and the sprinkling of the blood before the ark.—The place was not at this time appointed; for that was to be done after the people had got possession of the land. Accordingly, Shiloh was long the appointed place; and after some changes, Jerusalem was chosen for the purpose, and continued to enjoy that distinction till the crucifixion of Christ.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—18. Enticers to idolatry to be put to death.—By this law, every Israelite was bound in conscience to inform against, to prosecute, and to assist at the execution forbidden to eat any flesh at all: but this restriction was taken off when they entered the promised land.—Scott.

Ver. 23. The blood is the life.—See note on Gen. ix. 4.

Ver. 31. For even their sons and their daughters they have burned in the fire to their gods.—This was notoriously practised by the Carthaginians, who, it is certain, derived it from the Phœnicians, the ancient inhabitants of this country. Plato mentions it in Protagoras, where he says, "The Athenian laws did not permit them to sacrifice men, but among the Carthaginians it was a holy rite: so that some of them permitted their sons to be offered to Saturn." This wicked custom at last overpread all nations, even the Greeks themselves. "Our forefathers did the same; and to such an extreme was this carried in South America, that Bullcock assures us, in his description of ancient Mexico, that the coronation of their last emperor was celebrated by the sacrifice of 30,000 human beings. The great altar on which they were offered, and the horrid idol to which they were devoted, are still to be seen in his exhibition at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, London.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1. If there arise among you a prophet.—The unity of God was so much a settled principle among the Hebrews, that neither prophecy nor miracles were to be admitted in favour of idolatry. Nothing could be more certain than that God is one; the denial of this was of itself a sufficient Ver. 15. Eat flesh.—That is, the flesh of clean animals. As the wild animals here named were generally killed in the chase, and never sacrificed, their blood, of course, could not be poured out before the altar: so those who lived at a distance from Jerusalem were to be allowed to kill their meat in their own gates, as it was impossible for them to carry it to the capital. For the roebuck, see chap. xiv. 5, and note.

Ver. 17. The tithe of thy corn, &c.—This means the second tithe, (ch. xvi. 22—29; xxvi. 12—15.) for the Levites received the whole of the other. (Numb. xviii. 20—32.) In like manner every male firstling was the portion of the priests alone; (Numb. xviii. 17, 18.) so that either the female firstling, or some other of their young cattle, being presented as peace-offerings, were thus to be feasted on before the LORD.—Scott.

Ver. 19. Forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest.—Hebrew, "All thy days." The Levites having no inheritance of their own, were quartered upon the other tribes; and being constantly employed either in the service of God or the instruction of the people, it was but reasonable they should be supported by them. See 1 Cor. ix. 7—14.

Ver. 22. The unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike.—All animals slain for food in the wilderness, were ordered to be brought as peace-offerings to the door of the tabernacle; so that the unclean were, in fact, at that time

4 Ye shall <sup>f</sup> walk after the LORD your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his <sup>g</sup> voice, and ye shall serve him, and <sup>h</sup> cleave unto him.

5 And <sup>i</sup> that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath <sup>j</sup> spoken to turn you away from the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in. So <sup>k</sup> shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee.

6 <sup>l</sup> If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the <sup>m</sup> wife of thy bosom, or thy <sup>n</sup> friend, which <sup>o</sup> is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers;

7 Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth;

8 Thou shalt not <sup>p</sup> consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him:

9 But thou shalt surely kill him; thy <sup>q</sup> hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

10 And thou shalt stone him with stones that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of <sup>r</sup> bondage.

1 God's children are not to disgrace themselves in mourning. 3 What may, and what may not, be eaten. 22 Of tithes.

of any one, even the nearest relation or friend, who attempted to persuade him to idolatry. Yet it is observable that parents and husbands are not expressly mentioned, in the list of those who were to be thus accused; perhaps out of deference to the divine appointment of authority and subordination in families.—This singular institution would powerfully operate to produce an abhorrence of idolatry, and to render every one afraid of harbouring a thought in his heart, which he could not disclose to his nearest relations without risking his life.—Israel was under a peculiar covenant, of which idolatry was the grand forfeiture; and this could not be prevented from becoming a national sin, unless individuals, and even cities, that were guilty of it, were punished by public authority. They were in a special manner under the government of God as a nation, and this crime was, as it were, high treason. They were also a single nation surrounded by idolaters, and prone to idolatry themselves in a surprising degree.—These reasons for punishing this crime by death do not now exist: and there is no command or precedent in the New Testament, commanding or authorizing magistrates to use the sword of public justice, in punishing their subjects for matters merely of conscience towards God; nor does it seem at all to accord with the spirit of Christianity: much less can this law authorize persecution in general. Even the Israelites were not commanded nor allowed to punish idolaters as such; but merely apostates from the worship of the true God to idolatry, within the limits of their own nation: nor were they required or allowed thus to propagate the worship of JEHOVAH.—T. Scott.

ters as such; but merely apostates from the worship of the true God to idolatry, within the limits of their own nation: nor were they required or allowed thus to propagate the worship of JEHOVAH.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1–29. Israel to be distinguished from others.—Those whom God hath chosen to be his children, he will form to be a holy people, of a peculiar and heavenly disposition, and “zealous of good works.” As they are so highly distinguished from other people, they must be careful to set an example of holy moderation in all their affections, and to avoid every thing which may disgrace their profession.—Having a Father in heaven, who ever liveth to supply all their wants and to make up every loss, they need not mourn for earthly friends disconsolately, as others do.—The Lord prohibits us nothing but in a wise and kind regard to our welfare. The language of his prohibitions, rightly interpreted, is, “Do thyself no harm; do not wound thyself; do not ruin thy health, thy reputation, thy domestic comfort, thy peace of mind; especially do not murder thy soul; be not the vile slave of thy appetites and passions; do not render all around thee miserable, and thyself the most wretched of all; but aspire at that which is noble, excellent, permanent, and useful.” Considering these prohibitions, in connexion with the manifold indulgences which he allows us, we must acknowledge that we should all be happy, if we consulted our own refutation of all pretences to inspiration. The fulfilment of a prediction, therefore, like those of Nostrodamus, or the immortal Moore, if inclining to idolatry, was to be at once rejected, though by possibility it might come true. By a sign, Dr. Clarke understands some miracle, or portentous sign, as an eclipse, which before the laws of astronomy were known, was considered as a miraculous event; and by a wonder, some typical or emblematical representation to entice them to idolatry, as the image of the great goddess Diana, who, as was pretended, “fell down from Jupiter.” Acts xiii. 35.

Ver. 5. That prophet (that is, that pretender to prophetic powers) shall be put to death.—It must be remembered, that the religion of the children of Israel was founded upon miracles, by which the unity of God, being once established, as well as by the principles of common sense, opposite evidence was utterly inadmissible. Further, Jehovah was the King of Israel, and every attempt to introduce an idol was high treason, which in all countries is a capital offence. So it here is considered, for in ver. 3, where we read, “He hath spoken to turn you away,” the Heb. reads, (as in our margin,) “He hath spoken revolt against the Lord:” thus every temptation to idolatry was an incitement to revolt.

Ver. 6. If thy brother, &c.—This is a law unquestionably of great strictness and severity.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt surely kill him.—Not tumultuously, nor by assassination; but by a regular enforcement of the law. The LXX. say, “Thou shalt certainly inform against him;” and as the principal witness was to cast the first stone, he was, in fact, the executioner, though not till the sentence of the magistrate had been pronounced.

Ver. 13. Children of Belial.—That is, of wickedness, or of the wicked one. 2 Cor. vi. 15. Compare John viii. 44.—Margin, “Naughty men.”

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1. Ye shall not cut yourselves.—Neither your flesh nor hair; see Levit. xix. 27, 28. (See notes.) [The heathen nations not only did these things in honour of their gods, but in grief for the death of a relative. The Scythians, as we are informed by Herodotus, were accustomed to slash themselves on the death of their king: and Virgil represents the sister of Dido, “tearing her face with her nails, and beating her breast with her fists.” The Persians even now cut and lacerate themselves when celebrating the assassination of Hossein.]—Bagster.—Nor make any baldness between your 22 ¶ Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.

23 ¶ And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always.

CHAPTER XV.

1 The seventh year a year of release for the poor. 7 It must be no let of lending or giving. 12 Hebrew servant, 16 except he will not depart, must go forth free and well furnished.

At the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release.

2 And this is the manner of the release:

and each other's welfare, as much as the law of God does.—Making that our rule of enjoyment, we should use providential blessings in subserviency to religious edification, to our own inward peace and satisfaction, to the promotion of brotherly love, and to our mutual usefulness. That "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness," is a truth, of which every man will have experimental proof in proportion to his devotedness to God. May we then choose and pursue this happiness, and compassionate and pray for those deluded millions who seek for pleasure in sin, which is the only cause of all the misery in the universe: and let us learn to value every earthly advantage, as enabling us to glorify God, by disseminating the knowledge of his truth, and by communicating to the relief of our distressed brethren and fellow-creatures.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—23. The laws of the sabbatical year, and of servitude.—The laws of the sabbatic year have been already briefly stated, as also the regulations under which slavery was permitted, and the means by which it was incurred. (Exod. xxi. 1, &c.) There was, however, an important distinction between the Hebrew and foreign slaves. The latter were either prisoners eyes.—Harmer remarks, that the eastern nations endeavour to make the hair of the eyebrows meet; to separate them, therefore, might be a sign of mourning. See Jer. xvi. 6.

Ver. 5. The word Dr. Shaw considers this as a generic word, including all the species of the deer kind.—The roebuck—(Hebrew, Tschi) according to Dr. Shaw and others, the gazel, or antelope, receiving its Hebrew name from its loveliness, or beauty.—The fallow deer.—Either the bubalus or buffalo, or a species of red deer.—The wild goat.—(Arabic) the goat-deer, a very timorous species; or perhaps the rock-goat.—The pygarg.—White-mountain, or white-tail, a species of antelope; perhaps the addax of the ancients.—The urix.—Or uryx; a large species of stag.—And the chamois.—Some species of goat probably for the chamois is only to be found in cold countries. For these names, see Dr. Clarke in loc., Calmey by Taylor, and Harris's Nat. Hist. of the Bible. Several of these names occurring here only, the species remain very doubtful. For the rest of the animals and birds in this chapter, see notes on Levit. xi.

Ver. 21. Any thing that dieth of itself.—The prohibition from eating these was given before, Lev. xvii. 15, but the permission to give or sell it to a stranger or an alien seems extraordinary, since we consider such animals unwholesome, as the subjects of disease. There were, however, among the heathen taken in war, or their children, born in servitude; but even these were not left wholly at the master's discretion, with the power of life and death, as among the heathen; but were protected by sundry salutary laws. The servitude spoken of in this chapter, relates chiefly, if not entirely, to Hebrew servants, which were situated much like apprentices with us. The means by which this servitude was incurred, were either purchase, or the forfeiture of liberty by debt. A poor man without the means of subsistence, might sell either himself or his family; or, if deeply involved in debt, the creditor might claim their services: but in both cases it was only to the sabbatic, which was every seventh year. At the end of this, he must go free, with his wife and family; nor must he go empty handed, but be furnished with the means of at least temporary support. "Remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day." When Israel was brought out of Egypt, the Lord gave them such favour in the eyes of the Egyptians among whom they dwelt, that they came away loaded with presents; and therefore it is commanded, that they should show equal poor wretches, as already remarked, (on Lev. xvii. 15.) who were glad to eat flesh at any rate; and this permission shows the very contemptuous light in which they were regarded by the Hebrews.

Ver. 26. For strong drink.—(Hebrew, sikera) any kind of fermented liquor, whether made from corn or fruits. (Dr. Clarke.) This was forbidden to the Nazirites altogether, Numb. vi. 3; to the priests when on duty, Lev. x. 9; and the excess of it, so as to produce intoxication, to all, Deut. xxix. 12, but within the bounds of sobriety and moderation, it was allowed, and sometimes prescribed, Prov. xxxi. 6.

1 Ver. 28. Tithe increase.—[As the Levites had no inheritance, the Israelites were not to forget them, but truly tithe their increase. For their support, the Levites had, 1. The tenth of all the productions of the land; 2. Forty-eight cities, each forming a square of 4000 cubits. 3. Two thousand cubits of ground round each city; total of land 53,000 acres. 4. The first-fruits, and certain parts of all the animals killed in the land.—Canaan contained about 11,264,000 acres; therefore the portion possessed by the Levites was rather less than as 1 to 212; for 11,264,000, divided by 53,000, quotes only 212.8-53. But though this was a very small proportion for a whole tribe that had consented to annihilate its political existence, that it might wait upon the service of God, yet, let it be considered, that what they possessed was the best of the land: and while Every <sup>b</sup> creditor that lendeth ought to his neighbour, shall release it; he shall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; because it is called the Lord's release.

3 Of a <sup>c</sup> foreigner thou mayest exact it again: but that which is thine with thy brother thy hand shall release:

4 Save <sup>d</sup> when there shall be no poor among you; for <sup>e</sup> the Lord shall greatly bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it:

5 Only if thou carefully hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all these commandments which I command thee this day.

6 For the Lord thy God blesseth thee, as he promised thee: and thou shalt <sup>f</sup> lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee.

7 ¶ If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, <sup>g</sup> thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand from thy poor brother:

8 But <sup>h</sup> thou shalt open thy hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.

9 Beware that there be not a <sup>i</sup> thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine <sup>j</sup> eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought; and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be <sup>k</sup> sin unto thee.

10 Thou shalt surely give him, and thy heart shall not be <sup>l</sup> grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall <sup>m</sup> bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thy hand unto.

11 For the <sup>n</sup> poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thy hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.

12 ¶ Anà if <sup>o</sup> thy brother, a Hebrew man, or a Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years; then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee.

liberality when they sent away their own bond slaves. (See Exod. xii. 35, 36.) A case, however, is here supposed, which under this mitigated state of slavery, is by no means improbable. It is supposed that some of their Hebrew slaves, who were treated equal to hired servants, might feel themselves so comfortable as to wish to continue in servitude; such a one was to be taken before a magistrate, and by the ceremony of boring his or her ear, either male or female became a servant for ever; that is, perpetually, until the year of jubilee, when every Hebrew servant must be released. (Levit. xxv. 39—41.)

In treating of debts in consequence of loan, Moses informs us they also were to be released in the sabbatic year, except only when the nation should rise to that prosperous situation as to have no poor among them, then the sabbatic year is not to be pleaded in bar of payment. But how is this to be reconciled (it may be said) with a following passage, (ver. 11.) which says, "the poor shall never cease out of the land?" This is not difficult; the term poor is relative, and does not always imply distress. This may be illustrated by the state of the Society of Friends, who are commonly said to have "no poor," because their poorest members are so taken care of by the more wealthy, that they are never seen in rags or wretchedness; though, at the same time, there are never wanting objects of sympathy or generosity. Thus our Lord himself explains the passage, "The

it was a slender remuneration for their services, yet their portion was such as rendered them independent, and kept them comfortable; so that they could wait on God, and labour in his work, without distraction."—Bagster.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 4. Save when there be no poor.—Margin. "To the end that there be no poor." So the LXX. Both translations may be harmonized. The release is granted to prevent absolute distress; but it is granted to those only who needed. It is the privilege of the rich to lend, not to borrow. See ver. 6, 7. [Houbigant follows the marginal reading, to which he joins the end of the third verse, considering it as explanatory of the law; as if he had said, "Thou shalt not exact the debt that is due from thy brother, but thy hand shall release him, for this reason, that there may be no poor among you through your severity." He justly contends that the phrase ephes kee, can here only mean, "to the end that."—Bagster.

13 And when thou sendest him out free from thee, thou shalt not let him go away empty

14 Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine press: of that wherewith the Lord thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him.

15 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day.

16 And it shall be, if he say unto thee, I will not go away from thee; because he loveth thee and thy house, because he is well with thee;

17 Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant for ever. And also unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise.

18 It shall not seem hard unto thee, when thou sendest him away free from thee: for he hath been worth a double hired servant to thee, in serving thee six years: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all that thou doest.

19 ¶ All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep.

20 Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year in the place which the Lord shall choose, thou and thy household.

21 And <sup>a</sup> if there be any blemish therein, as if it be lame, or blind, or have any ill blemish, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the Lord thy God.

22 Thou shalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean person shall eat it alike, as the roe-buck, and as the hart.

23 Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof; thou shalt pour it upon the ground as water.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The feast of the passover, 9 of weeks, 13 of tabernacles. 18 Of judges and justice. 21 Groves and images are forbidden.

OBSERVE <sup>a</sup> the month of Abib, and keep the passover unto the Lord thy God: for in the month of Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by <sup>b</sup> night.

2 Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover poor ye have always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." (Mark xiv. 7.)

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—22. Three times in the year—namely, at the feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles, every Israelite was to appear at the tabernacle; or, after it was erected, at the temple at Jerusalem. Of these great feasts we have already spoken. It is enough here to observe their general import and design. 1. The Passover to the nation generally was a commemoration of their redemption from Egypt; to believers, the true seed of Abraham, it also pointed out that atonement by which we, as well as they, are redeemed from sin and hell. 2. The feast of weeks, or of the barley harvest, was an acknowledgment of the goodness of Providence in supplying us with daily food; and intended to excite believers to bring forth "the fruits of the Spirit," in every good word and work. Accordingly it was at this season (the day of Pentecost) that the Holy Spirit was conferred on the apostles and disciples at Jerusalem. 3. The feast of Tabernacles at the close of the vintage, and of the ingathering of all their fruits. This followed within a few days of the great day of atonement, and seems designed to teach the people, and us also, that the only just foundation of rejoicing is in the forgiveness of our sins.

But these feasts appear to have had also a farther design in promoting brotherly love and domestic harmony. "I was glad Ver. 13. Go away empty.—[This is a most humane and merciful addition to the law in Ex. xxi. 2, 11; enforced upon the Israelites by the consideration of their Egyptian bondage. As a faithful servant has made no property for himself while honestly serving his master, so now, when he quits his service, he has nothing to begin the world with except what the kindness of his master may bestow upon him as a remuneration for his zeal and fidelity. Though what was to be bestowed upon servants is not fixed, yet they were to be liberally supplied. ver. 14.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Maid-servant.—[Hence it appears that female servants were sometimes purchased for labour, without any purpose of espousing them: and that they were under the same law as the men-servants.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Observe the month of Abib.—The first fifteen verses of this chapter are little more than what we have had before. 1. On the pass-unto the LORD thy God, of the flock and the herd, in the <sup>a</sup> place which the LORD shall choose to place his name there.

3 Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction; (for thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt in haste;) that thou mayest remember the day when thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt, all the days of thy life.

4 And there shall be no leavened bread seen with thee in all thy coasts seven days; neither shall there any thing of the flesh, which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain all night until the morning.

5 Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee:

6 But at the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the <sup>b</sup> passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt.

7 And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents.

8 Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread: and on the <sup>c</sup> seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the LORD thy God: thou shalt do no work therein.

9 ¶ Seven <sup>m</sup> weeks shalt thou number unto thee: begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn.

10 And thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the LORD thy God <sup>n</sup> with a tribute of a free-will-offering of thy hand, which thou shalt give unto the LORD thy God, <sup>o</sup> according as the LORD thy God hath blessed thee:

11 And <sup>p</sup> thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the LORD thy God hath chosen to place his name there.

12 And <sup>q</sup> thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in Egypt: and thou shalt observe and do these statutes.

13 ¶ Thou shalt observe the feast of <sup>r</sup> tabernacles seven days, after that thou hast gathered in <sup>s</sup> thy corn, and thy wine.

14 And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates:

15 Seven <sup>t</sup> days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD shall choose: because the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thine increase, and in all the works of thy hands, therefore thou shalt surely rejoice.

16 ¶ Three <sup>v</sup> times in a year shall all thy males appear before the LORD thy God in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles: and they shall not appear before the LORD <sup>w</sup> empty:

17 Every man shall give <sup>x</sup> as he is able, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee.

18 ¶ Judges <sup>y</sup> and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment.

19 Thou <sup>z</sup> shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for <sup>a</sup> a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the <sup>b</sup> words of the righteous.

20 That <sup>c</sup> which is <sup>d</sup> altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest <sup>e</sup> live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

21 ¶ Thou shalt not plant thee a <sup>f</sup> grove of any trees near unto the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

22 Neither shalt thou set thee up <sup>g</sup> any image; which the LORD thy God <sup>h</sup> hateth.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The things sacrificed must be sound. 2 Idolaters must be slain. 8 Hard controversies are to be determined by the priests and judges. 14 The election, 16 and duty of a king.

THOU shalt not sacrifice unto the LORD thy God any bullock, or a sheep, <sup>b</sup> wherein is blemish, or any evil favouredness: for that is an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

2 ¶ If <sup>c</sup> there be found among you, within any of thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee, man or woman that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the LORD thy God, in <sup>d</sup> transgressing his covenant,

3 And hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them, either the sun, or moon, or

(says the Psalmist) when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord, whither the tribes go up . . . to give thanks unto the name of the Lord." (Ps. cxxii. 1-4.) "The LORD thy God shall bless thee (says the inspired legislator) in all thine increase, and in all the works of thine hands, therefore thou shalt surely rejoice." Nor was this all. Gratitude to God was not to be expressed in words only: "They shall not appear before the LORD empty. Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God, which he hath given thee." And this also affords the just measure of our benevolence. God gives us before we can give at all, and we should be liberal as he is gracious.

The concluding verses of this chapter enjoin a rigid equity in administering judgment. "Justice! Justice!" as the margin reads, should be the ground of all our decisions between man and man. But while we are taught this, we are taught also that this is not the whole of our duty: we must have a regard not only to the rights of man, but to the rights of God, whose honour must not be compromised by mingling in any shape or degree the services of idolatry with the worship of JEHOVAH.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1-20. Provision respecting a kingly government.—All the adjacent nations being monarchies, surrounded with splendour in different degrees, it was natural to anticipate that the Israelites, who were but too fond of imitating them, would, in course of time, also want a king; and without blaming or commending this form of government, provision is here made to direct their conduct. The government introduced by Moses, usually called the "Hebrew Republic," differed very materially from all others, in that it was under the supreme control of heaven, and was therefore called a Theocracy. Consider Moses as the president and director of this republic, still he was only the agent and servant of JEHOVAH, whose will was a law in no case to be disputed; whose throne on earth was erected between the cherubim; but who at the Ver. 10. A tribute.—Margin, "A sufficiency." The Hebrew Missah, which is only found in this place, is a contribution, as Mas is often used for a tribute. (Ainsworth.) In the chapter preceding, (ver. 8.) the same learned commentator remarks, "Sufficient for his need," is by the Chaldee expounded Misath, the very word here used by them; and he infers, that beside the rigid demands of the ritual law, something was expected as a proof of their ready and cheerful obedience.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast. &c.—There was a law similar to this enacted at Athens, by Ceroops, who ordained that the master of every family should, after harvest, make a feast for his servants, and eat together with them who had taken pains for him in tilling his ground; for God delighted in the honour done to servants, in consideration of their labour. This law it is probable he borrowed from Moses.

Ver. 13. In all thy gates.—This expression probably refers to the gate of the city being the forum or place of public concourse among the Israelites, where a court of judicature was held for trying all causes and deciding all affairs. The same practice obtained among other Eastern nations. The Ottoman court, it is well known, derived its appellation of the Porte, from the distribution of justice, and the dispatch of public business at its gates. And the square tower which forms the principal entrance to the Athmanra, retains to this day the appellation of the Gate of judgment, from its having been the place where justice was at one period summarily administered. —Bagster.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. Wherein is blemish.—This had been repeatedly enjoined, as in Levit. xxii. 20. Deut. xv. 21. The spirit of the law is, to devote to the Lord the best of our property and of our talents. See Numb. xxviii. 7.

any of the host of heaven, which I have not commanded;

4 And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and inquired diligently, and behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel:

5 Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, which have committed that wicked thing, unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shalt stone them with stones, till they die.

6 At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death; but at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death.

7 The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people. So thou shalt put the evil away from among you.

8 ¶ If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy within thy gates: then shalt thou arise, and get thee up into the place which the Lord thy God shall choose;

9 And thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and inquire; and they shall show thee the sentence of judgment:

10 And thou shalt do according to the sentence, which they of that place which the Lord shall choose shall show thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee:

11 According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall show thee, to the right hand, nor to the left.

12 And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the Lord thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die: and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel.

13 And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.

14 ¶ When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me;

15 Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16 But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.

17 Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.

18 And it shall be when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites.

19 And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them:

20 That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment to the right hand or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 The Lord is the priests' and Levites' inheritance. 2 The priest's due. 3 The Levite's portion. 4 Christ the Prophet is to be heard. 5 The presumptuous prophet is to die.

THE priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings same time had a throne in heaven, which controlled the universe.

The great misfortune of absolute governments is, that the head of them is always imperfect in wisdom and prudence, and often also in moral probity; but here was a Sovereign equally perfect in wisdom, in equity, and in goodness. But the Jews had the same objection to their King as men have in general to their Maker; he was too great, too wise, too much exalted above themselves. Every man naturally loves a god partaking of the same frailties with himself, in the hope of meeting with indulgence to his vices.

"A God full-orb'd
In his whole round of attributes complete,"

was never contemplated by the heathen world, nor ever exhibited, but in the Bible. Indeed the idea would be intolerable to ourselves, were it not for the doctrine of a Mediator and his atonement.

In the choice of a king, no special qualification is stated, but that he should be a brother; for which the first and great reason probably was, to prevent the introduction of idolatry; though in this a regard was doubtless had also to the preservation of their civil and religious liberties. The choice was, however, to lie with the Almighty himself, and so the people understood it; for when they wanted a king, they applied to Samuel, the prophet, and said, "Give us a king;" (1 Sam. viii. 6.) and he was afterwards chosen by lot, "the appointment whereof is of the Lord," as in a following chapter. (Chap. x. 20, &c.) When the king should be chosen, it was particularly enjoined that he should neither multiply horses, nor wives, nor riches. Not the first, that they might not make an excuse to return to Egypt, which was famous for the finest breed of those animals; nor the second, that they might not be drawn into idolatry; nor the latter, that he might not be tempted to avarice or ambition. Solomon unhappily fell into all these snares; he brought a number of horses out of Egypt; he married a multitude of heathen wives, and his heart was thereby turned to folly and idolatry; and as to riches, "the king made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees in the vale for abundance." (1 Kings x. throughout.)

As a guard against these errors, (which it is to be feared Solomon neglected,) the king was commanded to write out a copy of the law with his own hand; whether of this book of Deuteronomy only, or of the whole Mosaic law, commentators are not agreed. Either way the following objects would be secured. 1. He must be a scholar, able to write the language correctly. 2. He would become acquainted with that divine code of laws by which his conduct was to be regulated. 3. His time would be employed in this useful manner, instead of a course of dissipation and idleness; or curious inquiries into the customs of his idolatrous neighbours, which was forbidden. (Chap. xii. 30.)

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—22. The great prophet, like unto Moses.—The modern Jews have generally applied this to Joshua, the successor of Moses, but it seems evident that it was not so understood for many years after Moses, for in the

Ver. 4. And if it be told thee.—On the punishment of idolatry, see ch. xiii. Ver. 6. Two witnesses, &c.—"Great weight is laid on this throughout Scripture," says Scott; and it is matter of serious inquiry, whether in any case, "when the life of man is at stake," one unsupported witness should be depended on.

Ver. 16. Multiply horses.—[Multiplying horses for chariots of war and cavalry, or for luxury, would increase the splendour of the monarch, and form a ground of confidence distinct from a proper confidence in God, and inconsistent with it, and with considering him as the glory of Israel. Egypt abounded in horses. Besides, they might be tempted to extend their dominion by means of cavalry, and so get scattered among the surrounding idolatrous nations, and thus cease to be that distinct, separate people, which God intended they should be.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Copy the law.—[Mishneh hattorah hazzoth, "a duplicate of this law," translated by the Septuagint, this Deuteronomy. From this version, both the Vulgate, and all the modern versions, have taken the name of this book; and from the original word, the Jews call it Mishneh. Some have supposed, that this command refers only to the Book of Deuteronomy; but it is most probable, that the whole law is intended; and if Moses, with his immense engagements, found time for compiling and writing the whole, it could not be an intolerable task imposed upon any future prince to transcribe it.]—Bagster.—[Out of that which is before the priests.—That is, the autograph, or original text, kept in the tabernacle.]—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 20. He and his children.—"From hence it has been inferred, that the crown in Israel was designed to be hereditary, and this is very probable."—Dr. Clarke.

of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance.

2 Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren: the LORD is their inheritance, as he hath said unto them.

3 ¶ And <sup>a</sup> this shall be the priest's due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep; and they shall give unto the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.

4 The <sup>a</sup> first-fruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the first of the fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give him.

5 For the LORD thy God hath chosen <sup>a</sup> him out of all thy tribes, to stand to minister in the name of the LORD, him and his sons for ever.

6 ¶ And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Israel, <sup>a</sup> where he sojourned, and come with all the <sup>a</sup> desire of his mind unto the place which the LORD shall choose;

7 Then he shall minister in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which stand there before the LORD.

8 They shall have like <sup>a</sup> portions to eat, beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.

9 ¶ When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

10 There <sup>a</sup> shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,

11 Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

12 For all that do these things are an abomination unto the LORD: and because of these abominations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee.

13 Thou shalt be <sup>a</sup> perfect with the LORD thy God.

14 For these nations, which thou shalt <sup>a</sup> possess, hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the LORD thy God hath not <sup>a</sup> suffered thee so to do.

15 ¶ The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a <sup>a</sup> Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; <sup>a</sup> unto him ye shall hearken.

16 According to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb in the <sup>a</sup> day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not.

17 And the LORD said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken.

18 I <sup>a</sup> will raise them up a <sup>a</sup> Prophet from among their brethren, <sup>a</sup> like unto thee, and <sup>a</sup> he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.

19 And it shall come to pass, that <sup>a</sup> whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

20 ¶ But <sup>a</sup> the prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall <sup>a</sup> die.

21 ¶ And if thou say in thy heart, How shall <sup>a</sup> we know the word which the LORD hath not spoken?

22 When a <sup>a</sup> prophet speaketh in the name of the LORD, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that <sup>a</sup> is the thing which the LORD hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of <sup>a</sup> him.

concluding chapter of this book, written either by Joshua in the close of his life, or by Ezra, when compiling the canon of the Old Testament, it is expressly said, "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face," &c. Moses himself also makes an important distinction at the first appointment of Joshua, in stating, that instead of immediate communication with the Lord, as Moses himself had, he was to stand before the high priest when he required counsel from God. (Numb. xxvii. 21.) Still farther, Moses alone was honoured in the delivery of a code of laws, and he also was the mediator of the Sinai covenant. These circumstances all lead us to look for the great prophet here spoken of in the person of the Messiah; and both St. Peter and St. Stephen apply the prediction expressly to Jesus Christ, who is also represented as the antitype of Moses by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. (Acts iii. 22; vii. 37. Heb. viii. 6, &c.) Dr. Jortin, who (in his Remarks on Ecclesiastical History) has drawn a parallel between Moses and Christ in a great number of particulars, concludes with these words: "Let us search all the records of universal history, and see if we can find a man so like to Moses as Christ was, and so like to Christ as Moses was. If we cannot, then have we found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, to be Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of God."

As the Great Prophet of Israel is placed in contrast with the conjurers of the heathen, so is he also opposed to false prophets among the Jews, who in some ages were very numerous. They are here divided into two classes, those who spake in the name of Jehovah, and those who spake in the name of other gods. Though we are not exactly in their situation, there is no people on earth, perhaps, so easily deluded with pretended prophecies as the English; witness the strange predictions of the maniac

Brothers, and of poor deluded Johanna Southcott. These, indeed, professed to believe the Scriptures, but they applied them in a way quite foreign to their meaning, and disgraceful to their sacred origin. In most instances this has been done to produce certain political effects, by exciting groundless alarms among the people; and there has always been found a party ready to encourage them, from such motives. The great mass of disciples, however, has generally been found among the lower classes, and especially the weaker sex.

Another class of false prophets are the astrologers, whose predictions are clothed in mystical emblems, which they take care never to explain till the year after; and not then, unless some event occurs which they can mould to their own purpose. All these pretended prophets, having no authority from above, speak presumptuously, what "the Lord hath not spoken;" Israel, therefore, were not to be afraid of them, nor should we. The character of a prophet must be attested, either by miracles, or the unequivocal fulfilment of his predictions, before they can command either belief or reverence.

Deeply connected with these impostures, and especially with astrology, is the notion of lucky and unlucky days, by which many simple people are intimidated from their duty, and interrupted in their labours; and it is wonderful how much this folly prevails, even in Christian countries. Those, however, who fear God, should remember, that they have nothing to fear from malignant planets, or unlucky days, but may sing with Watts,

"Let all the baneful planets shed
Their mingled curses round my head;
Let but the king of heaven look through the clouds,
And bless me with his eyes."

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 6. If a Levite come, &c.—The meaning of this law seems to be, that if a priest or Levite, residing in a distant part of Canaan, wished to come and devote himself to the service of the tabernacle, he should be at liberty so to do, and receive the same allowance as the rest.

Ver. 8. Beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.—That is, beside the produce arising from the sale of any private property of his fathers. See Scott.

Ver. 10. Maketh his son . . . to pass through the fire.—See exposition and note on Levit. xx. 2.—That useth divination—by auguries, or omens, as Balaam did, Numb. xxiv. 1.—An observer of times.—That is, an astrologer, predicting by the planets, &c.—An enchanter.—One who pretended to charm or enchant serpents, and divine by them. See Esai. lviii. 4, 5.—A witch.—The nature of witchcraft will be inquired into when we come to the history of Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3, &c.

Ver. 11. A charmer.—One dealing in charms and incantations.—A consultor with familiar spirits, &c.—These were not perhaps all different characters; but their various names are here mentioned to include all pretenders to the black art, of every description. See Dr. Clarke.

The heathen eve, were, and still are, great observers of days and times. In Japan, they have a table of fortunate days, which every person consults on setting out upon a journey. In China, the president of the College of Mathematics points out the proper days for marriages and other business. The Hindoos mark their almanacs with lucky and unlucky days, for the like purposes; and the Mexicans are said to have been very particular in calculating the nativities of children, to ascertain their good or bad fortune. This is quite in character with Paganism; but the writer has been lately much surprised to find in London one person who was fearful to begin any undertaking on a Wednesday; and another who refused to close an advantageous bargain, because the day was Friday! Sailors have, to a large extent, formerly regarded Friday as unlucky, but a happy change has taken place.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 The cities of refuge. 14 The land-mark is not to be removed. 15 Two witnesses at the least. 16 The punishment of a false witness.

WHEN <sup>a</sup> the LORD thy God hath cut off the nations, whose land the LORD thy God giveth thee, and thou <sup>b</sup> succeedest them, and dwellest in their cities, and in their houses;

2 Thou shalt separate <sup>c</sup> three cities for thee in the midst of thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

3 Thou shalt prepare thee a way, and divide the coasts of thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to inherit, into three parts, that every slayer may flee thither.

4 ¶ And this is the case of the slayer, which shall flee thither, that he may live: Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not <sup>d</sup> in time past;

5 As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the <sup>e</sup> head slippeth from the <sup>f</sup> helve, <sup>g</sup> and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of these cities, and live:

6 Lest the avenger of blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and <sup>h</sup> slay him; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in <sup>i</sup> time past.

7 Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee.

8 And if the LORD thy God enlarge thy coast, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he <sup>k</sup> promised to give unto thy fathers;

9 If thou shalt keep all these commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in his ways; then shalt thou add <sup>l</sup> three cities more for thee, besides these three:

10 That <sup>m</sup> innocent blood be not shed in thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee.

11 ¶ But <sup>n</sup> if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him <sup>o</sup> mortally that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities:

12 Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.

13 Thine eye shall not pity him, but <sup>p</sup> thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

14 ¶ Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's <sup>q</sup> land-mark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

15 ¶ One <sup>r</sup> witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth; at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

16 ¶ If a false witness rise up against any man to testify against him <sup>s</sup> that which is wrong;

17 Then both the men between whom the controversy is shall stand before the LORD before the priests and the judges, which shall be in those days;

18 And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and behold, <sup>t</sup> if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother;

19 Then <sup>u</sup> shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put the evil away from among you.

20 And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you.

21 And thine eye shall not <sup>v</sup> pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

CHAPTER XX.

1 The priest's exhortation to encourage the people to battle: 10 how to use the cities that accept or refuse the proclamation of peace: 16 what cities must be devoted.

WHEN thou goest out to battle against thine enemies, and seest <sup>w</sup> horses, and chariots, and a people more than thou, be not afraid of them: for the LORD thy God <sup>x</sup> is with thee, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

2 And it shall be when ye are come nigh unto the battle, that the priest shall approach and speak unto the people,

3 And shall say unto them, Hear, O Israel,

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—21. Cities of Refuge.—In conveying instruction, familiar examples and illustrations, though taken from the most ordinary occupations or scenes of life, are of very great use, to give determinate ideas of the thing to be inculcated: and in laws especially, precision should be studied, that the distinction between the innocent and the guilty, and between a man's crime and his calamity, may be as plainly specified as it is possible. For whether the criminal escape unpunished, or the innocent suffer, injustice is committed; and in case of bloodshed, guilt is brought upon the land where it takes place. On such occasions compassion for the offender may become cruelty to numbers: it must therefore be moderated; or counteracted by the fear of God, the love of justice, and general benevolence. But to avoid the horrid crime of murder, we must watch and pray against the first emotions of hatred and anger: and to be preserved from injustice, we must beware of covetousness, which is wonderfully ingenious in devising such methods of defrauding as may escape detection, censure, or human punishment. Alas! what a reproach is it to the whole human species, that God himself forbids the testimony of any one man to be taken in things of consequence! Verily he judges all men to be liars, and none absolutely and in all cases to be trusted; which is not only a caution to judges and juries, but a reason for watchfulness and humiliation to us all.—Few crimes are more atrocious in their nature, pernicious in their effects, or affronting to God, than bearing false witness in matters of great importance; and with us especially, since it is always connected with perjury. It is greatly to be wished that it was more commonly and severely punished by man, according to this most excellent and equitable law: but it will assuredly meet with its due punishment from a righteous God! Let all Christians however be cautious not only in bearing public testimony, but also not to propagate private slanders; and let those whose consciences accuse them of these or other crimes, without delay flee for refuge to the hope set before us in Jesus Christ.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—20. The laws of Jewish warfare.—In these laws, or regulations, several things demand our notice.

1. The Israelites had a divine sanction in their wars, to subdue the Canaanites and other nations here specified; but what other nation can show a like authority for conquest? 2. They were called upon to display the most undaunted courage in pursuing this just and necessary war. 3. Allowance was to be made for persons in peculiar circumstances, who were liable to be intimidated, and to have their courage damped in considering domestic circumstances; such as having built a house that was not dedicated, contracted a marriage which was not consummated, &c. 4. That in a warfare so arduous as this, it was desirable to have no faint-hearted soldiers; those CHAP. XIX. Ver. 2. Three cities for thee.—That is, for refuge. For the nature and design of these cities, see exposition of Numb. xxxv. Three cities had been already named on the east of Jordan, Deut. iv. 41—43, and when they had entered Canaan, three more were to be named, in the interior of the country.

Ver. 3. Thou shalt prepare thee a way.—Maimonides says, "The senate were bound to prepare the ways to the cities of refuge, to make them fit and broad; and to remove out of them all stumbling-blocks and offences; . . . and at the partition of ways, they set up in writing, 'Refuge, Refuge,' that the man-slayer might know, and turn thitherward."

Ver. 14. Land marks.—Before the extensive use of fences, landed property was marked out by stones or posts, set up so as to ascertain the divisions of family estates. It was easy to remove one of these land-marks, and set it in a different place; and thus a dishonest man might enlarge his own estate by contracting that of his neighbour. Hence it was a matter of considerable importance to prevent this crime among the Israelites; among whom removing title-deeds of an estate among us. Accordingly, by the Mosaic law, it was not only prohibited in the commandment against covetousness, but we find a particular curse expressly annexed to it in ch. xxvii. 17. A similar law existed among the Greeks, as appears from Plato; and Numa Pompilius made this crime capital. Josephus considers this law a general prohibition intended not only to protect private property, but also to preserve the boundaries of kingdoms and countries inviolable.—Eagles ye approach this day unto battle against your enemies: let not your hearts <sup>b</sup> faint, fear not, and do not <sup>c</sup> tremble, neither be ye <sup>d</sup> terrified because of them;

4 For <sup>e</sup> the LORD your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you.

5 ¶ And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying, What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not <sup>f</sup> dedicated it? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.

6 And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not <sup>g</sup> yet <sup>h</sup> eaten of it? let him also go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man eat of it.

7 And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? <sup>i</sup> let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and <sup>j</sup> another man take her.

8 And the officers shall speak farther unto the people, and they shall say, What <sup>k</sup> man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted? let him go and return unto his house, <sup>l</sup> lest his brethren's heart <sup>m</sup> faint as well as his heart.

9 And it shall be, when the officers have made an end of speaking unto the people, that they shall make captains of the <sup>n</sup> armies to lead the people.

10 ¶ When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim <sup>o</sup> peace unto it.

11 And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein, shall be tributaries unto thee, and <sup>p</sup> they shall serve thee.

12 And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it:

13 And when the LORD thy God hath delivered it into thy <sup>q</sup> hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword:

the <sup>a</sup> cattle, and all that is in the city, even a! the spoil thereof, shalt thou <sup>b</sup> take unto thyself: and <sup>c</sup> thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

15 Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations.

16 ¶ But of the cities of these people which the LORD thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive <sup>d</sup> nothing that breatheth:

17 But thou shalt utterly destroy them, namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee:

18 That <sup>e</sup> they teach you not to do after all their abominations which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the LORD your God.

19 ¶ When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an axe against them; for thou mayest eat of them: and thou shalt not cut them down (for <sup>f</sup> the tree of the field is man's life) <sup>g</sup> to employ them in the siege:

20 Only the trees which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat, thou shalt destroy and cut them <sup>h</sup> down; and thou shalt build bulwarks against the city that maketh war with thee, until it <sup>i</sup> be subdued.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 The expiation of an uncertain murder. 10 The usage of a captive taken to wife. 15 The first-born is not to be disinherited upon private affection. 18 A stubborn son is to be stoned to death. 22 The malefactor must not have all night on a tree.

IF one be found slain in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it, lying in the field, and it be not known who hath slain him:

2 Then thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain:

3 And it shall be that the city which is next unto the slain man, even the elders of that therefore whose hearts failed or fainted, were at liberty to return home, rather than to dispirit others. 5. They were then to choose among themselves captains of the most able and courageous, to lead them on to battle. 6. Before a blow was struck, they were to proclaim peace to the enemy, on condition of their submitting, and becoming tributary. 7. If they did not submit, they were to be subdued, but with this distinction: if the enemy were inhabitants of Canaan, in this case of resistance they were to be utterly destroyed; but if nations without the boundary of Canaan, the men only, that is to say, the soldiers; for in rude nations every able man is a soldier.

The only question arising on this chapter, relates to the devoted nations, and that has been already considered in the Introduction to this book (Deuteronomy); but the writer begs leave to add, that in a farther consideration of this very grave and awful subject, he is confirmed in the opinion there given, and has the satisfaction to find, that Scott, (certainly a most judicious commentator,) inclines to the same meaning. But a question has been raised here, whether the subdued Canaanites were compelled to become proselytes to Judaism? To this we answer, without hesitation, 1. That no man was allowed to worship idols within the territory of Judea. (Deut. xii. 2, 3.; xvii. 2, 3.) Yet, 2. was no man compelled to the worship of Jehovah. (Exod. xii. 48, 49. Num. xi. 14.)

The conclusion of this chapter relates to a circumstance of no great interest to us, but as to its principle. "Trees for meat," or fruit trees, were not to be destroyed to carry on a siege, (by building ramparts, &c.) but only trees that afforded no meat, as forest trees: from which we may infer, that the evils of war should be mitigated when practicable, and no wanton mischief done. The Canaanites, as usurpers, were to be expelled, and, as under the curse of idolatry, destroyed, such only excepted as submitted to tribute and to slavery.

In the practical improvement of this subject, we shall merely remark, that this war being undertaken by command of God, gives no sanction to wars originating in the lusts of pride, of ambition, or revenge; on the contrary, there is but one war to which this exterminating principle may be applied, and that is, an internal war against these and all the other criminal passions of the human heart, which must be utterly subdued before we can enter into the heavenly Canaan.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—23. The punishment of a stubborn and rebellious son.—Some have censured this law as "inhuman and brutish." To this the late Bishop Watson very properly replies by remarking, that "the paternal power amongst the Romans, the Gauls, the Persians, and other nations, was of the most arbitrary kind; that it extended to the taking away the life of the child. I do not know (says the Bishop) whether the Israelites, in the time of Moses, exercised this paternal power; it was not a custom adopted by all nations, but it was by many; and in the infancy of society, before individual families had coalesced into communities, it was probably very general. Now Moses, by this law, which you, (Mr. Paine,) esteem brutal and inhuman, hindered such an extravagant power from being either introduced or exercised amongst the Israelites. This law is so CHAP. XX. Ver. 5. Hath not dedicated it.—It hence appears to have been a general, and certain, and most pious custom, to dedicate to God every new house. See the title of Psalm cxxv.

Ver. 7. Betrothed a wife, &c.—It was customary among the Jews to contract matrimony, espouse, or betroth, for a considerable time to leave the parties in the houses of their respective parents; and when the bridegroom had made proper preparations, then the bride was brought home to his house, and the marriage consummated. The provisions in this verse refer to a case of this kind; though the Jews extend it to him who had newly consummated his marriage, and even to him who had married his brother's wife. It was deemed a peculiar hardship, for a person to be obliged to go to battle, who had left a house unfinished, newly purchased land half tilled, or a wife with whom he had just contracted marriage. Homer represents the case of Proteus as being as afflictive, who went to, and was first killed in the Trojan war, leaving a wife in the deepest distress, and his house unfinished.—Bæster.

Ver. 10. Proclaim peace unto it.—It was a part of the political system of the ancient Indian kings, that they never entered the territories of their neighhours in a hostile manner, but on the most urgent occasions; and then they first made overtures of peace.—Orient. Lit. No. 331.

Ver. 17. Utterly destroy them.—Hebrew, "Destroying, destroy them." The original term implies the execution of God's curse (cherem) against them. See Gen. ix. 25. Deut. vii. 26.; xiii. 17.

Ver. 19. For the tree of the field is man's life.—Margin, "O man, the tree of the field is man's life.—(Or, for, O man, the tree of the field is to be employed in the siege. The original is exceedingly obscure, and has been variously translated: see haadam, atz, hassadach, lavo mippaneycha dematzor; which the LXX. render, "Is the tree in the field a man, to enter the trench before thee?" Vulgate: "For it is a tree, and not a man, neither can it increase the number of those who war against thee!" Onkelos, "For the tree of the field is not as a man, that it should come against thee in the siege, and to the same purpose the Arabic, Philo, and Josephus, who says, "If trees could speak, they would cry out, that it is unjust that they who were no cause of the war should suffer the miseries of it." So also R. Bechut, Abayrinel, and Grotius. However rendered, the sense is sufficiently clear: and it is a city shall take a heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke;

4 And the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor sown, and shall strike off the heifer's neck there in the valley;

5 And the priest the sons of Levi shall come near, (for <sup>a</sup> them the LORD thy God hath chosen to minister unto him, and to <sup>b</sup> bless in the name of the LORD,) and by <sup>c</sup> their word shall every <sup>d</sup> controversy and every stroke be tried;

6 And all the elders of that city that are next unto the slain man, <sup>a</sup> shall wash their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley:

7 And they shall answer and say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it.

8 Be merciful, O LORD, unto thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed, and lay not <sup>f</sup> innocent <sup>g</sup> blood unto thy people of Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them.

9 So shalt thou put away <sup>h</sup> the guilt of innocent blood from among you, when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the LORD.

10 ¶ When thou goest forth to war against thine enemies, and the LORD thy God hath delivered them into thy hands, and thou hast taken them captive,

11 And seest among the captives a beautiful <sup>i</sup> woman, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldest have her to thy wife:

12 Then thou shalt bring her home to thy house, and she shall <sup>j</sup> shave her head, and <sup>k</sup> pare her nails:

13 And she shall put the raiment of her captivity from off her, and shall remain in thy house, and bewail her <sup>l</sup> father and her mother a full month: and after that, thou shalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and she shall be thy wife.

14 And it shall be, if thou have no delight in her, then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but thou shalt not <sup>m</sup> sell her at all for money; thou shalt not make merchandise of her, because thou hast <sup>n</sup> humbled her.

15 ¶ If a man have two wives, one <sup>o</sup> beloved, and another <sup>p</sup> hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the first-born son be her's that was hated:

16 Then it shall be, when he maketh his sons

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Of humanity toward brethren. 5 Divers laws. 13 The punishment of him that slandereth his wife. 20, 22 Of adultery, 25 of rape, 28 and of fornication. 30 Luca is forbidden.

THOU <sup>a</sup> shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep go astray, and <sup>b</sup> hide thyself from them: thou shalt in any case bring them again unto thy brother.

2 And if thy brother be not nigh unto thee, or if thou know him not, then thou shalt bring it unto thine own house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it, and thou shalt restore it to him again.

3 In like manner shalt thou do with his ass; and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and with all lost things of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found, shalt thou do likewise: thou mayest not hide thyself.

far from countenancing the arbitrary power of a father over the life of his child, that it takes from him the power of accusing the child before a magistrate; the father and the mother of the child must agree in bringing the child to judgment; and it was not by their united will that the child was to be condemned to death, the elders of the city were to judge whether the accusation was true; and the accusation was to be not merely, as you insinuate, that the child was stubborn, but that he was 'stubborn and rebellious, a glutton and a drunkard.' Considered in this light, you must allow the law to have been a humane restriction of a power improper to be lodged with any parent." (Apology for the Bible.)

merciful provision to spare all the fruit trees for the support of both the besieged and besiegers.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 4. Rough valley.—[As the word nachal, signifies both a torrent, and the valley or glen through which it flows, exactly corresponding to the term ready among the Arabs, nachal altham, may be rendered, as it is by Maimonides, the Rabbins, Michaëls, and others, a rapid torrent. Many torrents in Judea are dry during a great part of the year; when not only their banks but their beds may be ploughed and yield a crop. Hence there is no impropriety in specifying that such a place should be one that "is neither eared nor sown;" while the circumstance that the elders were to wash their hands over the heifer, whose head had been struck off into the stream, confirms this interpretation. The spot of ground where this sacrifice was made, must be uncontaminated, because it was considered as a sacrifice for the atonement of murder, and, consequently, would pollute the land. This ordinance was calculated to keep murder in abhorrence, and to make the magistrates alert in discharging the duties of their office, that delinquents might be discovered and punished, and thus public expense saved.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Shall wash their hands.—This ceremony was intended to protest their innocence of the murder. Compare ver. 8, 9, with Matt. xxvii. 24.

Ver. 12. Shave her head, and pare her nails.—Hebrew, "Make (or dress) her nails," but our translators have intimated, in the margin, that it is uncertain whether the expression means to pare her nails, or make them grow: "those who read dress, refer it to colouring them (with al-henna) at a saffron colour. To shave the head and let the nails grow, are generally considered signs of mourning; but as she is commanded to put off "the raiment of her captivity," Dr. Clarke considers this as a mark of proselytism; as every Christian who turns Mahometan has his head shaven, and is so publicly exhibited. When it is said, she shall do this, it may be to intimate that she acts voluntarily in this matter, and is not forced.

Ver. 15. Hated.—It might be properly rendered "disliked" or "an object of disgust." So the same word is used in Psalm cxxxix. 21, 22, and in other places, where it ought to be translated disgusted with, or by some equivalent phrase.

Ver. 20. A glutton.—The Hebrew word denotes "debauched," or abandoned to gluttonous company. At Canton, in China, if children grow incorrigible, and despise the threats or admonitions of their parents, according to law, the parents are to complain of them to the magistrate, and on full conviction, the magistrate will severely correct them. For if a son break the established laws, the parent suffers punishment as well as the criminal son, if he had not before made the magistrate acquainted with his son's vices.—Orient Lit. Ver. 23. He that is hanged, is accursed.—The Jews never hung any person alive, but always after stoning; his being hung was therefore a sign that he had suffered "the curse of God," and the penalty of the law. See Gal. iii. 13.

word might be omitted. Equity and benevolence would teach us, not to regard trouble and expense in doing a kind action to our neighbour; and would remind us, that we can have no property in any thing that is found, so long as there is a probability of discovering the owner. If a merciful man would assist another's beast that was fallen down, much more should we hasten to the relief of a brother, who is fallen into distress or poverty; and above all we should be ready to restore in the spirit of meekness, him who has been overcome by temptation, and has fallen into sin; conscious that we may soon want the same gentleness and assistance.—If we would approve ourselves to be the peculiar people of God, we must have respect to his will and glory, and not to the vain fashions of the world. Even in putting on our garments, as well as in eating and drinking, all must be done with a serious regard to the preservation of our own go astray.—These humane precepts are a sort of comment on Ex. xxiii. 4, 5. See Luke xiv. 5.

Ver. 5. The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth to a man.—[This prohibition was no doubt intended to exclude the idolatrous customs of the heathen, as well as to prevent the evil which would be produced by the introduction of such customs. Nothing was more common among idolaters, than for men, in the worship of their gods, to put on the garments worn by women, and the women those worn by men; particularly in the worship of Venus, to which that of Ashtaroth among the Canaanites bore a striking resemblance, the women were accustomed to appear in armour before her, and the men in women's apparel. But independently of this, the practice has produced the greatest confusion in society, and has been productive of the grossest crimes. Hence Claudius, who dressed himself as a woman, that he might mingle with the Roman ladies in the feast of the Bona dea, was universally and justly execrated.]—Bagster. If used only for meriment, they are highly indecorous, and very likely to lead to scandalous actions.

Ver. 7. Let the dam go, &c.—[The extirpation of any species of birds, whether edible, or birds of prey, is often attended with serious consequences, and is always productive of evil; to prevent which was the object of this law. Palestine is situated in a climate producing poisonous snakes and scorpions, and between deserts and mountains from which it would be inundated by them, as well as with immense swarms of flies, locusts, and mice, if the birds which feed upon them were extirpated. (See Michaelis on the Laws of Moses.)] In a moral point of view, it may have been intended to inculcate a spirit of mercy and kindness, and to prevent the exercise of cruelty even towards a sparrow; for he who is guilty of such cruelty will, in circumstances be favourable, be cruel to his fellow-creatures.]—Bagster. The poet Phocylides has a maxim in his admonitory poem, very similar to that in the text:

"Nor from a nest take all the birds away;
The mother spare, she'll breed a future day."

Ver. 8. A battlement.—The eastern houses being built with flat roofs for walking upon, made this necessary; and he that neglected it was answerable for consequences, if any accident occurred.

Ver. 9. Divers seeds.—The covetous practice of sowing a temporary crop elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her, 17 And lo, he hath given occasions of speech <sup>a</sup> against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these <sup>b</sup> are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city.

18 And the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him;

19 And they shall amerce him in a hundred <sup>c</sup> shekels of silver, and give <sup>d</sup> them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; <sup>e</sup> he may not put her away all his days.

20 But if this thing be true, <sup>f</sup> and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel:

21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die; because she hath wrought <sup>g</sup> folly in Israel, to <sup>h</sup> play the whore in her father's house: so <sup>i</sup> shalt thou put evil away from among you.

22 ¶ If <sup>j</sup> a man be found lying with a woman married to a husband, then they shall both of them die, <sup>k</sup> both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman: so shalt thou put away evil from Israel.

23 ¶ If a damsel <sup>l</sup> that is a virgin be <sup>m</sup> betrothed unto a husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her;

24 Then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel, because she cried not, <sup>n</sup> being in the city; and the man, because he hath <sup>o</sup> humbled his neighbour's wife: so <sup>p</sup> thou shalt put away evil from among you.

and others' purity in heart and action; that our garb may testify whose servants we are, and remind us what our conduct ought to be. Our obedience should also be universal, and not only to the weightier, but even to the minuter matters of the law, that it may be well with us. Yea, our eye should be single, our heart simple, and our behaviour in all things consistent.—The violation of chastity, being so great a wickedness, and in females especially of such fatal consequences, how cautious should they be what company they keep, what places they frequent, to what language they listen, what books they read, and into what situations they venture! Indeed, both men and women should seriously and daily meditate on God's abhorrence of unchastity; on the certain detection and punishment of the wicked in a future state, and the fatal effects which will probably follow in this world: that their minds may be fortified between the rows of vines, would exhaust the land, harbour vermin, and injure the vine roots. The penalty was confiscation of the whole produce.

Ver. 10. Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together.—This precept was no doubt founded in humanity, as the ass would be overworked; and from their unequal height it must be painful to both. So an ancient writer on agriculture says, "Let no cattle be yoked together except they match." Plautus alludes to this circumstance, when he makes old Euclio say, when addressing Magadoras, "If I were to give my daughter to you, it occurs to me, that I should be the ass, and you the ox."—Orient. Lit. No. 357. The late C. Taylor suggests another reason for this prohibition; one being a clean animal, the other unclean.—Expos. Index, p. 74. Possibly St. Paul might allude to both circumstances, when he forbade Christians to be "unequally yoked with unbelievers." 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15.

Ver. 11. A garment of divers sorts.—Linen garments, embroidered with woollen yarn, were used in Egypt as idolatrous symbols. See the figures in Belzoni's and Richardson's Travels. See also note above, on Le. xix. 13.

Ver. 12. Make thee fringes.—See note on Numb. xv. 38. Instead of the superstitious amulets which were common among the heathen, the Israelites were to wear instructive words, or sentences, worked in the hems of their upper robes.

Ver. 15. Tokens of the damsel's virginity.—D'Arvieux describes the bridegroom on the wedding night, as retiring with the bride into the tent where the marriage was to be consummated, and afterwards returning to supper with his friends, taking with him the proofs of her virginity, which, after being shown, were carefully preserved, lest her honour should be aspersed. Dr. Russell (History of Aleppo) says, these tokens "are expected by all sects in this country, but more indecently exposed by the Turks than any other."—Orient. Lit. No. 338.

Ver. 25. Force her.—Margin, "Take strong hold of her." Rape and adultery were both capital offences under the Mosaic law.

Ver. 30. Father's wife.—[This is to be understood as referring to the case of a step-mother. A man in his old age may have married a young woman, and on his dying, his son by another, or former wife, may desire to espouse her, which is here forbidden.]—Bagster.

26 But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter:

27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel cried, and there was none to save her.

28 ¶ If <sup>a</sup> a man find a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found;

29 Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife; because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

6 Thou <sup>h</sup> shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever.

7 ¶ Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian, because <sup>k</sup> thou wast a stranger in his land.

8 The children that are begotten of them shall <sup>i</sup> enter into the congregation of the LORD in their third generation.

9 ¶ When the host goeth forth against thine enemies, then <sup>m</sup> keep thee from every wicked thing.

10 ¶ If <sup>n</sup> there be among you any man that is not clean by reason of uncleanness that chanceth him by night, then shall he go abroad out of the camp, he shall not come within the camp:

11 But it shall be, when <sup>o</sup> evening cometh on, he shall <sup>p</sup> wash himself with water: and when the sun is down, he shall come into the camp again.

12 ¶ Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad:

13 And thou shalt have a paddle upon thy weapon: and it shall be when thou wilt <sup>q</sup> ease thyself abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shall turn back, and cover that which cometh from thee:

14 For the LORD thy God <sup>r</sup> walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy: that he see no <sup>s</sup> unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee.

15 ¶ Thou shalt not deliver unto his master <sup>t</sup> the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee:

against temptation, by a dread of sin and of its consequences. How carefully should parents keep out of the sight and way of their children, whatever can pollute their imaginations or inflame their passions! and how should all join in execrating those wretches, who wantonly bring ruin upon their fellow-creatures for the sake of gratifying a mean sensual inclination! Nor is the cruelty of those much less to be abhorred, who rob the innocent of their reputation by infamous slanders, from malice or any other base passion.—We should never forget the peculiar atrociousness of adultery in every form, and the punishment which awaits those who are guilty of it. We may also recollect, that deception in contracting marriage is both very wicked, and a source of future misery; that the nearer we stand related to God, the more inexcusable are our crimes, “folly in Israel” being worse than elsewhere; and that the most favourable construction should be put on doubtful actions, and a discrimination made between different degrees of criminality. Finally, our purity should be dearer to us than our life; and our cry to God for help in temptation should be no less earnest, than the cry of a person in danger of being murdered. When we thus call upon him, he is ever near and ready to assist us, and his grace will be always sufficient for us.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1–25. Miscellaneous laws.—We ought to value the privileges of the Lord's people, both for ourselves and for our children, above all other advantages; and should carefully avoid whatever may throw a hinderance in the way of their possessing them. No personal blemishes, no crimes of progenitors, no difference of nations, can exclude us from these blessings: but an unsound heart will deprive us of them; and a bad example, an improper education, and even unsuitable marriages, may occasion the loss of them to our children.—The conduct of God, as the righteous Governor of the universe, is not recorded for the imitation of private persons; but all men ought to follow the example of his patience, lenity, readiness to forgive, and kindness to his enemies. Nor should we ever forget how he turns the curses of opposers into blessings, in behalf of those whom he loves, and teaches to love him.—The more imminent and evident the danger we are exposed to, the greater should be our watchfulness, diligence in self-examination, and earnestness in prayer for forgiveness, peace with God, and protection from him: and the scourge of war should remind the governors of kingdoms, and the commanders of armies, to exert themselves for reformation, and an attendance upon the ordinances of God. Nor can the help of the Lord be warrantably depended on by societies, or by individuals, while iniquity is indulged and connived at.—No natural filthiness is so loathsome to our senses, as the uncleanness of the heart is offensive to a holy God: in vain therefore do men, by pompous forms of godliness, costly oblations, or multiplied acts of showy beneficence, strive to compensate for their iniquity, while they

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1, &c. He that is wounded.—The persons here excluded from the rights of Israelitish citizenship are, 1. Eunuchs of two kinds, the one made by compulsion, the other by excision. 2. Children of prostitutes: but some think that the word denotes a propane corrupter. (It is evident that this law was not meant to exclude such Israelites, either from the common benefits of civil society, or any essential religious advantages; but merely to lay them under a disgraceful distinction. This would tend to discourage parents from thus treating their children; a practice which was exceedingly common in those ages and countries. To this they were induced by the custom which prevailed, of employing such in the houses of the great and the courts of princes: so that they often rose to the highest posts of honour and authority. Some expositors therefore consider the phrase, “shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord,” as meaning, that they should be incapable of bearing any office in that government, which was placed over the people of God, who must thus enter a protest against this custom, and deliver selfish parents from this temptation.)—Bagster.

Ver. 2. A bastard.—LXX. and Vulgate, “Child of a harlot,” the word is emphatical, and does not mean merely illegitimate, but base-born; probably the child of a Canaanitish slave or of any incestuous connexion, and hence placed on a par with the following—

Ver. 3. An Ammonite or Moabite.—These nations originated in the incest of Lot's daughters, Gen. xix. 36–38. This did not, however, disqualify them from becoming proselytes; for Ruth, who was a Moabitess, was married to Boaz, and became one of the progenitors of our Lord.]—Bagster.—Unto the tenth generation.—That is, for many generations, or for ever.

Ver. 5. The Lord thy God turned the curse into a blessing.—See the history, Numb. xxii.—xxiv.—Since considering the above chapters, the Editor has met with an infidel objection, to this effect, that the messengers of Balak, travelling with Balaam, must have seen the angel as well as the prophet. It is very possible, however, that Balaam might be in the rear of the procession, and the angel might not appear till they had passed; or if they did see the light, they might see no more, nor hear any thing that passed. Compare Acts ix. 7.

Ver. 12. Thou shalt have a place, &c.—These directions (says Dr. Clarke) may appear trifling, but they were necessary in present circumstances. Decency and cleanliness promote health, and prevent diseases.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt not deliver, &c.—That is, a servant who had left a heathen master to avoid idolatry, might not be given up, or sent back. Isaiah xvi. 3, 4. Obad. 14. 17 ¶ There shall be no <sup>w</sup> whore * of the daughters of Israel, nor a <sup>v</sup> sodomite of the sons of Israel.

18 Thou shalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow: for even both these are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

19 ¶ Thou <sup>z</sup> shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury:

20 Unto a <sup>a</sup> stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury: <sup>b</sup> that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all that thou settest thy hand to in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

21 ¶ When thou shalt vow <sup>c</sup> a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the LORD thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee.

22 But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee.

23 That <sup>d</sup> which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform; even a free-will-offering, according as thou hast vowed unto the LORD thy God, which thou hast promised with thy mouth.

24 ¶ When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel.

25 When thou comest into the standing-corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest <sup>e</sup> pluck the ears with thy hand: but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

1 Of divorce. 6, 10 Of pledges. 7 Of man stealers. 8 Of leprosy. 14 Of justice. 19 Of charity.

WHEN a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath * found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a <sup>b</sup> bill of <sup>c</sup> divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

indulge unlawful inclinations. Such services are an attempt to bribe the Judge of the earth to "acquit the wicked;" but he abhors the blasphemous endeavour. It is the bounden duty of legislators and magistrates, to do all in their power, to prevent, to repress, and extirpate, the recesses of licentiousness here forbidden; and surely immensely more might be done, than is so much as attempted in Christian countries, or in this land, and its great cities: but whether they can or cannot banish such pernicious criminals, God will exclude for ever from the holy city, and shut up for ever in the lake of fire, all who persist in or encourage them.—The people of God must also keep at a distance from cruelty and oppression: and ever be ready to patronize the cause of the oppressed. Fidelity to their engagements, and liberality without grudging to all around them, should mark their characters; for God is able to make all sufficiency to abound towards them: and at the same time they should be the last persons to encroach upon others. In fine, temperance, chastity, purity, equity, mercy, and truth, are the never-failing fruits of that Spirit which dwells in all the true disciples of Jesus Christ.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—22. Law of divorces.—Divorces were always a deviation from the original institution of marriage, consequent upon man's depravity as a fallen creature, arising from the inconstancy of his mind and the impetuosity of his passions. This customary deviation God did not please, in the judicial law, the magistrate's rule, totally to prohibit; lest it

Ver. 21. When thou shalt vow.—Numb. xxx. 1, &c.
CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. Some uncleanness.—Hebrew, "Matter of nakedness," i. e. indecency, (see ch. xxii. 14.) or want of delicacy and propriety, without any charge of criminality; and this license was so far abused, that the Jewish doctors held that a man might put away his wife almost for any cause, however trifling. See Matt. v. 31, &c.; xix. 3, &c.

Ver. 4. She is defiled.—The husband parted with her under that pretence, and must not take her back: she is not to be bandied backward and forward to humour his caprice.

Ver. 5. When a man hath taken a new wife.—It is remarkable, that Alexander the Great, in his expedition against Persia, nearly conformed to this law; for after the battle of the Granicus, and before he went into winter quarters, he ordered all his army that had married that year, to return into Macedonia and spend the winter with their wives; appointing three captains over them, to lead them home, and to bring them back at the time appointed. See Prideaux's Connexion.—Neither shall be charged with any business.

2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife.

3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife;

4 Her former husband which sent her away, may not take her <sup>d</sup> again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the LORD: and thou shalt not cause the <sup>e</sup> land to sin, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

5 ¶ When <sup>f</sup> a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to <sup>g</sup> war, neither shall he be charged with any business: but he shall be free at home one year, and shall <sup>h</sup> cheer up his wife which he hath taken.

6 ¶ No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

7 ¶ If <sup>i</sup> a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die; and thou shalt put <sup>j</sup> evil away from among you.

8 ¶ Take heed in the plague of <sup>k</sup> leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do.

9 Remember what the LORD thy God did unto <sup>l</sup> Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.

10 ¶ When thou dost <sup>m</sup> lend thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge:

11 Thou shalt stand abroad, and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee:

12 And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge:

should occasion the cruel treatment, or even the murder, of those women, who were become disagreeable to their husbands. The uncleanness, on account of which the Israelites were "suffered," for the hardness of their hearts, to put away their wives, was not adultery, or any suspicion of it; for both these cases were otherwise provided against: (ch. xxii. 22. Le. xxi. 10, but some ceremonial uncleanness, or diseases, or some natural or moral objection which formed a real grievance.—In the days of Christ, the Jewish teachers, having construed the permission into a commandment, extended it to the most frivolous matters; so that a licentious mind could not desire more allowance. Hence divorces prevailed to the disuse of polygamy, and to the still greater hardship of the women, who were sent away, one after another, under colour of this law, on various pretences, to make way for a new object of the roving affections. This accounts for the discourses of Christ being more explicitly against divorces; though the reason of them equally determines against polygamy; "for from the beginning it was not so."—But whilst divorces were allowed, they were also regulated. A man could not in a fit of anger send away his wife, but must have time for reflection, while the legal instrument was preparing. For he must give her a bill of divorce properly authenticated, and properly specifying the reason; and we may suppose some provision was also made her out of her husband's substance. And it was no part of God's law to prohibit either party from marrying again; which restraint, when imposed by an absurd policy, —Hebrew, "Not any thing shall pass upon him;" which the Vulgate justly explains, "No public business shall be enjoined him."

Ver. 6. The upper millstone.—[Small handmills, formed of two stones, which were worked upon one another by one or two persons, were formerly in use among the Jews for grinding their corn, and are still used in many parts of the East. As they generally ground at one time only a sufficient quantity for a day's consumption; hence they were forbidden to take either of the stones to pledge, because if they did, they would be deprived of the means of preparing their necessary food, and the family be without bread. On this account they are called in the text, a man's life. The same reason holds good against receiving in pledge, or distraining for debt, any instrument of labour, by which men earn their livelihood.]—Bagster.
Ver. 9. Remember what the Lord did unto Miriam.—Miriam's leprosy was inflicted for her contempt of the authority of Moses. See Numb. xii. 10, and compare Luke xvii. 32.

Ver. 10. Fetch his pledge.—[This, as Bp. Patrick remarks, was a very merciful provision for the poor, whose houses he would have so privileged, that no man might enter into them without their consent, and there choose what he pleased for the security of his debt. But he was to take what the borrower could best spare.]—Bagster.

13 In <sup>a</sup> any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, and <sup>b</sup> bless thee; and it shall be <sup>c</sup> righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God.

14 ¶ Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates:

15 At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and <sup>a</sup> setteth his heart upon it: lest he <sup>c</sup> cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee.

16 The <sup>a</sup> fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

17 ¶ Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor <sup>c</sup> take the widow's raiment to pledge:

18 But <sup>a</sup> thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

19 ¶ When <sup>a</sup> thou cuttest down thy harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thy hands.

20 When thou beatest thine olive-tree, thou shalt not <sup>a</sup> go over the boughs again: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow.

21 When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it <sup>a</sup> afterward: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow.

22 And <sup>a</sup> thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in the land of Egypt: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

IF there be <sup>a</sup> a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them; then they shall <sup>b</sup> justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked.

2 And it shall be, if the wicked man be <sup>a</sup> worthy to be <sup>c</sup> beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number.

3 Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed: lest if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem <sup>a</sup> vile unto thee.

4 ¶ Thou <sup>a</sup> shalt not muzzle the ox when he <sup>c</sup> treadeth out the corn.

5 ¶ If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her <sup>a</sup> husband's <sup>b</sup> brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her.

6 And it shall be, that the first-born which she beareth, shall <sup>a</sup> succeed in the name of his brother which is <sup>b</sup> dead, that his name be not put out of Israel.

7 And if the man like not to take his <sup>a</sup> brother's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.

8 Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her,

9 Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house.

10 And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

11 ¶ When men strive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets:

12 Then thou shalt cut off her hand, thine eye shall not pity her.

13 ¶ Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers <sup>a</sup> weights, a great and a small:

14 Thou shalt not have in thy house divers <sup>a</sup> measures, a great and a small:

15 But <sup>a</sup> thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have; that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

16 For <sup>a</sup> all that do such things, and all that is often no better than authorizing fornication. The woman might marry again and again, if set at liberty; but she must never more return to her former husband. This restriction, while it would operate as a check to inconstancy and rashness in the husband, would prevent the shameful practice of exchanging and lending wives, which prevailed in many nations. Israel would be preserved from that national guilt which such crimes enhance: and, as far as these regulations were adhered to, some of the worst effects of divorces would in good measure be prevented.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1.—19. Punishments, &c.—In administering justice, impartiality in distinguishing between the innocent and the guilty, and proportioning punishments to crimes, is peculiarly requisite; but it is generally advisable to incline towards Ver. 13. Sleep in his own raiment.—(The raiment here referred to was probably exactly the same as the hyke of the Arabs, a long kind of blanket, resembling a Highland plaid, generally about six yards in length, and five or six feet broad, in which they often carry their provisions as well as wrap themselves in, in the day, and sleep in at night, it being their only substitute for a bed. (See Shaw's Travels.) How necessary, then, it was to restore the hyke to a poor man before the going down of the sun, that he might have something to repose on, will sufficiently appear from these considerations. It is probable, however, that the pledge, restored in the evening, was brought back to the creditor next morning.—Bagster.

Ver. 15. At his day thou shalt give him his hire.—Hired servants were paid daily, not weekly. See Matt. xx. 8.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 3. Forty stripes.—To prevent excess, they gave one less than forty, as St. Paul testifies, 2 Cor. xi. 24. and this they gave by a scourge of three cords, which reduced the strokes to thirteen, and these must be given in presence of the magistrate. It were well if Christian governments showed the like humanity, both at home and abroad.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.—“It is customary in Arabia, and among the Moors in Barbary, to tread out the corn with cattle. The sheaves lie open and expanded on the threshing-floor, and the side of lenity rather than that of severity, aiming at the reformation, and not the destruction of the criminal, as far as public security will admit. Every punishment should be inflicted with solemnity, and in most cases publicly, that all the spectators may be impressed with dread, and be warned not to offend in like manner.—And though criminals must be put to shame, as well as to pain, for their warning and humiliation; yet care should be taken, if possible, that they do not appear totally vile: lest having no farther reputation to lose, they should become desperate.—Kindness is due not only to men, but even to the beasts; and every living creature which contributes to our ease, pleasure, or advantage, should receive from us such reciprocal satisfactions as it is capable of, in proportion to the benefits conferred: much more then should servants and lathe cattle continually move round on them. The natives of Aleppo still religiously observe the ancient practice of permitting the oxen to remain unmuzzled when they separate the corn from the straw.”—Shaw's Travels. Russell's Nat. Hist. of Aleppo.

Ver. 9. Loose his shoe.—This law, and the ceremonies attending it, will be fully illustrated in the history of Ruth, chap. iv.—Spirit in his face.—Rather, “In his presence,” before his face. The prefix beth is so used, Josh. xxi. 44; xxiii. 9. Esther ix. 2, &c.

Ver. 13. Divers weights.—Hebrew, “A stone and a stone.” The original weights were doubtless stones; hence a particular weight is with us called a stone; i. e. 8 lb. It should seem that fraudulent persons bought by different weights to what they sold by.

Ver. 14. Divers measures.—[An ephah and an ephah.—Alphah waalphah; for this was the most common measure among the Israelites, by which all the others were made and adjusted. They are not only forbidden to use divers weights and measures, one large or heavy to buy with, and another small or light to sell with, but they were even not allowed to keep such in the house. It is observable also, that these too common, but dishonest actions, are branded as “an abomination to the Lord,” equally with idolatry and other scandalous crimes.]—Bagster.

17 Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt;

18 How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary: and he feared not God.

19 Therefore it shall be, when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it.

CHAPTER XXVI.

AND it shall be, when thou art come in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and possessest it, and dwellest therein;

2 That thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the earth, which thou shalt bring of thy land that the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt put it in a basket, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to place his name there.

3 And thou shalt go unto the priest that shall be in those days, and say unto him, I profess this day unto the LORD thy God, that I am come unto the country which the LORD swore unto our fathers for to give us.

4 And the priest shall take the basket out of thy hand, and set it down before the altar of the LORD thy God.

5 And thou shalt speak and say before the LORD thy God, A Syrian ready to perish as my father; and he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous:

6 And the Egyptians evil-entreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage:

looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppression:

8 And the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with great terribleness, and with signs, and with wonders;

9 And he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 And now, behold, I have brought the first-fruits of the land, which thou, O LORD, hast given me. And thou shalt set it before the LORD thy God, and worship before the LORD thy God:

11 And thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the LORD thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thy house, thou and the Levite, and the stranger that is among you.

12 When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase the third year, which is the year of tithing, and hast given it unto the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled:

13 Then thou shalt say before the LORD thy God, I have brought away the hallowed things out of my house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments which thou hast commanded me: I have not transgressed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them:

14 I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean use, nor given ought thereof for the dead: but I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me.

15 Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

16 This day the LORD thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgmentors be suitably recompensed; and, by parity of reason, ministers, who are instrumental to men's salvation, should be maintained comfortably at their expense.—In all our actions we ought to aim at the good of those around us, especially of the Lord's people; and to promote the continuance of true religion in the next generation, and its diffusion into those places which are at present destitute of it: and in contracting marriage particularly we should "seek a godly seed," who may preserve the name of deceased believers, and fill up their places in the church; in every way showing respect to dead, and kindness to living relatives: for whatever disgrace we, without cause, put upon others, will in the event rebound upon ourselves.—A solemn and testified ratification ought to distinguish the honourable relation of marriage from all illicit connexions; and married persons should be known as such, to preserve them and others from temptation: and though affections cannot be forced, yet they should be subordinated to reason and religion.—The customs and manners of different ages may render that consistent with female delicacy at one time, which would not be deemed so at another: but there are certain outrages to modesty, which no age can tolerate, no provocation or extremity palliate; but which must ever be branded with infamy, and should be punished with un pitying severity.—Every kind and degree of fraud is abhorred by the righteous God, and should be dreaded by us; for dishonest gain always brings a curse upon men's property, families, and souls: and the day of judgment will bring strange things to light in this respect. Happy they who now judge themselves; and thus repent, and forsake their sins, that they may not be condemned at that awful season.—Let every persecutor and injurer of the Lord's people hear, and take warning from the example of the Amalekites: however they now cast off the fear of God, and behave with cruelty and despite to the meek and poor; he will one day plead the cause of his servants, avenge all the injustice done them, and "blot out the name of every enemy from under heaven:" and the longer judgment tarrys, the more dreadful will be its execution at last.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—19. The covenant between Israel and their God.—The law of first-fruits we have had before; (Exod. xxiii. 19.; xxxiv. 26. Num. xviii. 13.) but there is something very pathetic and devotional in the manner in which the subject is here introduced; for the words in fact contain the confession which every Israelite was to make when he brought his basket of first-fruits, and set it down before the altar. "A Syrian ready to perish was my father." The three great patriarchs were in fact all Syrians, (or Aramites;) but this evidently refers to the case of Jacob, when he fled from the face of his brother Esau, and with his staff only passed the Jordan, and was glad to enter the service of his uncle Laban as a shepherd, for subsistence. The purport of this confession is an acknowledgment of their humble origin, and that they owed all their increase, both in numbers and property, to the fostering hand of that kind Providence, which had led them in all their wanderings, guarded them in all their dangers, and supplied them in all their necessities; and is therefore entitled to the first-fruits of their fields and of their vineyards.

But joy and benevolence must be mingled with our gratitude: and certainly no man enjoys the blessings of Providence like him who possesses a grateful and a generous heart. The ungrateful man loses the zest of his enjoyments: while the Ver. 19. Blot out the remembrance of Amalek.—This was done in the death of Haman, the Amalekite, and his ten sons. Esther vii. 10.; ix. 13, 14. For the crime of Amalek, see expos. of Exod. xvii. 8—16.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 5. A Syrian.—[Aramnee ovoid avse, which has been variously rendered both by ancient and modern translators. The LXX. has, "My father abandoned Syria;" Vulgate, "A Syrian persecuted my father;" Targum of Onkelos, "Laban the Syrian sought to destroy my father." Houbigant renders it, "Famine oppressed my father, who went down into Egypt."

The common version, however, is preferable; Jacob being called a Syrian from his long residence in Padan-aram.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. When thou hast made an end of tithing, &c.—This relates to the second tithing, mentioned chap. xiv. 22—29. The very learned Mede thus explains the different tithings: "Two years together they paid the Levites' tithe, and the festival tithe; but in the third year, they paid the Levites' tithe, and the poor man's tithe; that is, what was wont in other years to be spent in feasting, was wholly spent every third year upon the poor." See Bp. Patrick.

ments: thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

17 Thou hast <sup>a</sup> avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his <sup>v</sup> statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice:

18 And the LORD <sup>a</sup> hath avouched thee this day to be his <sup>a</sup> peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst <sup>b</sup> keep all his commandments;

19 And to make thee <sup>c</sup> high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour; and that thou mayest be a holy <sup>d</sup> people unto the LORD thy God, as he hath spoken.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The people are commanded to write the law upon stones, 5 and to build an altar of whole stones. 11 The tribes divided on Gerizim and Ebal. 14 The curses pronounced upon mount Ebal.

AND Moses with the elders of Israel commanded the people, saying, Keep all the commandments which I command you this day.

2 And it shall be on the <sup>a</sup> day when ye shall pass over Jordan unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, that thou shalt set thee up great stones, and plaster them with plaster:

3 And <sup>b</sup> thou shalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over, that thou mayest go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee.

4 Therefore it shall be when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye shall set up these stones, which I command you this day, in mount <sup>c</sup> Ebal, and thou shalt plaster them with plaster.

5 And there shalt thou build an altar unto the LORD thy God, an altar of stones: thou shalt not lift up <sup>any</sup> iron tool upon them.

6 Thou shalt build the altar of the LORD thy God of whole stones: and thou shalt offer burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD thy God:

7 And thou shalt offer peace-offerings, and shalt eat there, and <sup>d</sup> rejoice before the LORD thy God.

8 And thou shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law, very plainly.

9 ¶ And Moses and the priests the Levites charitable and benevolent have a double relish of them, in partaking and in communicating.

In what follows, the Israelite was required to declare his conformity to the injunctions of the Mosaic law, particularly in his regard to the rights of charity:—"to the Levite who had no inheritance, to the stranger who had no home, and to the poor who had no property."

The prayer in ver. 15, "Look down from thy holy habitation," &c. is very sublime; and the following summary of the covenant between Israel and Jehovah their God, needs no commentary to render it most interesting to every Christian, as it points out the great design of God as to us, and the summary of our duty as to God, in one word—Holiness!

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—26. The law to be written on stones.—Inscriptions on pillars are the most ancient and durable monuments of history; and the stones here placed together are ordered to be plastered with plaster—not only to cement

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 2. Great stones, and plaster them.—[Houbigant and others are of opinion that the original words, tesadad uhom besעד, should be rendered, "thou shalt cement them with cement," because this was intended to be a durable monument. Some suppose that the writing was to be in relievo, and that the spaces were to be filled up by the mortar or cement; as is frequently the case with eastern inscriptions.]—Bastler. Dr. Clarke mentions a large slab of basalt (two feet long by sixteen inches wide) in which is an inscription in three languages; the Persian and Arabic in relievo, &c. in raised letters; the Tameel indented. Two Arabic marbles in the University of Oxford have also their inscriptions in relief. How many stones were here employed we are not told, or this would enable us to judge of the extent of the inscription; but as they were to be written very plainly, the letters of course could not be small.

Ver. 3. This law.—[This law probably means only the blessings and curses mentioned in this and the following chapter; which indeed contain an excellent epitome of the whole law.]—Bastler.

spake unto all Israel, saying, Take heed and hearken, O Israel; <sup>a</sup> this day thou art become the people of the LORD thy God.

10 Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day.

11 ¶ And Moses charged the people the same day, saying,

12 These shall stand upon mount Gerizim to bless the people, when ye are come over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin:

13 And these shall stand upon mount <sup>c</sup> Ebal to curse; Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.

14 ¶ And the <sup>e</sup> Levites shall speak, and say unto all the men of Israel with a loud voice, 15 Cursed <sup>be</sup> the man that <sup>b</sup> maketh <sup>any</sup> graven or molten image, an abomination unto the LORD, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and putteth <sup>it</sup> in a <sup>i</sup> secret place. And all the people shall answer and say, Amen.

17 Cursed <sup>be</sup> he that <sup>k</sup> removeth his neighbour's land-mark. And all the people shall say, Amen.

18 Cursed <sup>be</sup> he that maketh the <sup>i</sup> blind to wander out of the way. And all the people shall say, Amen.

21 Cursed <sup>be</sup> he that lieth with any manner of <sup>o</sup> beast. And all the people shall say, Amen.

them, but to form a smooth surface for the inscription; as it is highly probable they were rough stones like those used for the altar (ver. 6), on which it was not permitted to employ an iron tool; it seems also likely that the inscription was to be on the plaster; but whether the letters were raised or indented is very doubtful, as both are of very ancient use.

The grand question, however, is, What are we to understand by "this law," which was to be inscribed upon these stones? Certainly not all the Books of Moses, nor even this book of Deuteronomy; but the "Ten Words," or Commandments given at Sinai, and already inscribed on "tables of stone," deposited within the ark; with, possibly, the addition of the curses here following against transgressors.

The two hills here mentioned, were both in Samaria, (the territory of Ephraim,) and near Shechem, with a valley of only two hundred paces between them, so that the blessings and curses might be heard from one hill to the other, as well

Ebal. Dr. Kennicott has laboured to prove that the Samaritan is the true reading; but his arguments have been examined, and the force of them, at least, greatly lessened, by Dr. Parry, Verschuër, and others; but the question is now of little consequence. It has been remarked, that Gerizim is very fruitful, and Ebal very barren, from which some have drawn an argument in favour of the Jews, but it is by no means conclusive.

Ver. 15. Cursed be, &c.—These curses are not to be considered as wishes or prayers, but as denunciations of God's judgments on the incorrigible transgressors of his law; particularly the Ten Commandments, with which they have been stated to correspond, as follows:—First three Commands, ver. 15; Fourth, ver. 16; Fifth, ver. 16; Sixth, ver. 24; 25; Seventh, ver. 20—23; Eighth, ver. 17; Ninth, ver. 19; Tenth, ver. 26.

Ver. 26. Cursed is every one that confirmeth not all the words, &c.—The word all, inserted in italics in our text, is not found in any printed edition of the Hebrew; but it is in a few MSS. in the Samaritan text and the LXX., and in the quotation of St. Paul, Gal. iii. 10. It is, however, evidently implied when not expressed, for the curse is applied to the breach of each of the commands, as above shown.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 The blessings for obedience. 15 The curses for disobedience.

AND it shall come to pass, if " thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day: that the LORD thy God will set thee on " high above all nations of the earth:

2 And all these blessings shall come on thee, and " overtake thee, if " thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God.

4 Blessed shall be the " fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.

5 Blessed shall be thy basket and thy " store.

6 Blessed shalt thou be " when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

7 The LORD shall cause thine " enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way, and " flee before thee seven ways.

8 The LORD shall " command the blessing upon thee in thy " store-houses, and in all that thou settest thy hand unto: and he shall bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

9 The LORD shall " establish thee a holy people unto himself, as he hath " sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in his ways.

10 And all " people of the earth shall see that thou art " called by the name of the LORD; and they shall be " afraid of thee.

11 And " the LORD shall make thee " plentiful in goods, in the fruit of " thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers to give thee.

12 The LORD shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain " unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thy hand: and thou shalt " lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow.

as by the people in the valley between; for it should seem that the heads only of the tribes were upon the tops of the hills with certain Levites (singers) with loud voices, to read the law and pronounce the curses which form the rest of this chapter; and which observably correspond with the Ten Commandments. The object of these curses (Scott thinks) was to operate as a restraint from secret crimes, which the temporal penalties of the law could not reach; and the Amen appended to each curse, was intended, not to fix it upon their neighbours, but to bring it home to their own consciences; as much as to say, "God forbid that I should commit this sin!" or, if guilty, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—68. Promises to encourage obedience, and threatenings against the disobedient.—The general purport of this chapter is very similar to that of Leviticus xxvi.; it is, however, too excellent to be wholly passed over. It contains a copious enumeration of all the blessings which constitute the portion of those who fear and serve God, contrasted with the effects and consequences of disobedience;

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 5. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store.—Hasseltius informs us, that baskets made of the leaves of the palm tree, are used by the people of the East on journeys, and in their houses. [Hermes thinks that rain, in this place, means their travelling baskets; and mishalreth, (store) their leather bags; in both which they were wont to carry things in travelling; and that " understood in this manner, the passage promises Israel success in their commerce, as the next verse (the 6th) promises them personal safety in their going out, and in their return. In this view, the passage appears with due distinctness, and a noble extent." By basket, however, we may understand the olive-gathering and vintage, in which it was employed; and by the store or remainder, all laid up for future use, or prepared for present consumption.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. The head and not the tail.—See Isa. ix. 15. "The ancient and honorable, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail."

Ver. 15. All these curses.—[The same variety of expression is used in these terrible curses, as in the preceding blessings, to intimate every kind of prosperity or adversity, personal, relative, and public. The succeeding history of the Israelites shows, that as long as they adhered to the service of God, they were uniformly prosperous; but, when disobedient, these awful curses have " over-and the latter part of it, in particular, contains a prophetic catalogue of the miseries which have fallen on this favoured nation, partly accomplished in the captivities recorded in the Scriptures, but more fully in the total destruction of their city, and the dispersion of their nation by the Romans.

One thing important to be borne in mind is, that the Israelites are here spoken of as a nation; and the rewards and punishments here mentioned, are temporal and national: still, as their national character strongly indicated their moral state as individuals, so their temporal happiness or misery as a people, shadowed out that state of future happiness or misery which awaits, in another world, the righteous and the wicked.

On the general tenor of this chapter, we may remark, that when one is blessed of God, he is wholly blessed, and every where; in the city and in the field—in his family and in his farm—in his basket and his store—at home and on his journey. "Riches and honour are with him;" "he is the head and not the tail:" he is elevated above all his enemies. On taken them," even to the present day. Consulting the marginal references will generally lead to the best exposition of the terms employed; and will frequently point out the fulfilment of the promises and threatenings.]—Bagster.

Ver. 23. And thy heaven (the sky above them, which in the East is seldom obscured with clouds) shall be brass.—That is, reflect a glowing, intolerable heat, like burning brass.—And the earth that is under thee shall be iron.—That is, equally impervious to culture, and unfavourable to vegetation, with the iron ore.

Ver. 24. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust.—An extract from Sir T. Roe's Embassy, will greatly illustrate this. "Sometimes there (in India) the wind blows very high in hot and dry seasons, raising up into the air, a very great height, thick clouds of dust and sand. These dry showers most grievously annoy all those among whom they fall, enough to smite them all with a present blindness, filling their eyes, ears, nostrils, and mouths too, if they be not well guarded; searching every place, as well within as without, so that there is not a little key-hole of any trunk or cabinet, if it be not covered, but receives some of the dust into it." The celebrated Tournefort, in his Travels in the Levant, mentions the same phenomena.

26 And thy carcass shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall fray them away.

27 The Lord will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed.

28 The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart:

29 And thou shalt grope at noon-day, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways: and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore, and no man shall save thee.

30 Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her: thou shalt build a house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof.

31 Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them.

32 Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and fail with longing for them all the day long: and there shall be no might in thy hand.

33 The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up: and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway:

34 So that thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

35 The Lord shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a sore botch that cannot be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the top of thy head.

36 The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone.

37 And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the Lord shall lead thee.

38 Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in: for the locust shall consume it.

39 Thou shalt plant vineyards and dress them, but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes: for the worms shall eat them.

40 Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit.

41 Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them: for they shall go into captivity.

42 All thy trees and fruit of thy land shall the locust consume.

43 The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high; and thou shalt come down very low.

44 He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

45 Moreover, all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed: because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee:

46 And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever.

47 Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things;

48 Therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee.

49 The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand;

50 A nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favour to the young:

51 And he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until they be destroyed: which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee.

52 And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land which the Lord thy God hath given thee.

53 And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee:

54 So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eyes shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and toward the remnant of his children which he shall leave:

55 So that he will not give of them

Ver. 32. Thy sons and daughters.—[In several countries, particularly in Spain and Portugal, the children of the Jews have been taken from them, by order of the government, to be educated in the Popish faith. There have been some instances of such cruelty even in Protestant countries.]—Bagster.

Ver. 36. Serve other gods.—[The Israelites, who were carried captive by the Assyrians, and many of the Jews in Chaldea, were finally incorporated with the nations among whom they lived, and were given up to their idolatry. It is probable, however, that this refers to Jews being compelled, in Popish countries, to conceal their religion, and profess that of the Romish Church.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. The worms shall eat them.—This threatening has often been fulfilled, to the great disappointment of those who cultivate the vine. An insect called the vine-weevil, (a small beautiful beetle,) is extremely hurtful to vines; so is the caterpillar, which mines or cuts the leaves of the vine.

Ver. 49. A nation from far, from the ends of the earth.—Language in part very similar was applied by the prophet Jeremiah to the Chaldeans; (chap. v. 15,) but the whole is applicable to the Romans, and some parts almost exclusively; though it is very possible, that a prophecy, as well as a promise, may

Ver. 53. Thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body.—This was fulfilled in Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 28, 29, and in Jerusalem, when besieged by the Romans, as is related by Josephus.

Ver. 54. Wife of his bosom.—[The Roman armies at length besieged, sacked, and utterly desolated Jerusalem; and during this siege, the famine was so extreme, that even rich and delicate persons, both men and women, ate their own children, and concealed the horrible repast lest others should tear it from them: "Women snatched the food out of the very mouths of their husbands, and sons of their fathers, and (what is most miserable) mothers of their infants."—Josephus.] In every house, if there appeared any semblance of food a battle ensued, and the dearest friends and relations fought with one another; snatching away the miserable provisions of life."—Ibid.]—Bagster.

no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest; but the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind.

66 And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee: and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life:

67 In the <sup>a</sup> morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thy heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

CHAPTER XXIX.

2 Moses exhorteth them to obedience: 10 all are presented before the Lord to enter into his covenant. 29 Secret things belong unto God.

THESE <sup>a</sup> are the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, beside the covenant which he <sup>b</sup> made with them in Horeb.

2 ¶ And Moses called unto all Israel, and said unto them, Ye have seen all that the LORD did <sup>c</sup> before your eyes in the land of Egypt unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his land;

3 The great <sup>d</sup> temptations which thine eyes have seen, the signs, and those great miracles:

4 Yet the LORD hath not given you a <sup>e</sup> heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day.

5 And I have led you forty years in the wilderness: your <sup>f</sup> clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot.

6 Ye have not <sup>g</sup> eaten bread, <sup>h</sup> neither have ye drunk wine or strong drink: that ye might know that I am the LORD your God.

7 And when ye came unto this place, <sup>i</sup> Sihon the king of Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, came out against us unto battle, and we smote them:

8 And we took their land, and gave it for an

the curse of Almighty God. All events are absolutely at his disposal, all creatures are his servants, and he can make us as happy or as miserable as he pleases. If he determine to bless us, he can command a confluence of health, riches, and reputation; and will give fruitful fields, flourishing families, and peaceful habitations, in case these be good for us. . . . On the other hand, if the Lord purpose to inflict vengeance, what miseries can his curse inflict, even in this present world! An assemblage of dreadful diseases, racking pains, pinching poverty, and dreary famine, with armies of victorious enemies, exercising every cruelty, enhanced by galling insult, are ready to obey his mandate! . . . The sinner's own wretchedness will be also aggravated by witnessing the distress of friends, relatives, and children, rendered miserable through his crimes. And all this (alas!) is but the beginning of sorrows to those who are under the curse of God: what will then be their unabating and everlasting misery, in that world where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched? "God be merciful to us miserable sinners!"

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 1—29. Another review of the Lord's dealings with Israel, with farther exhortations to obedience.—The Lord being about to confirm his covenant with the new generation, before their entrance on Canaan, warns them solemnly against trifling or hypocrisy; for, in proportion as their blessings were accumulated, the abuse of those mercies would bring upon them accumulated judgments, both as a nation and as individuals; for in both respects are we to consider them. The covenant renewed, was substantially the same as that made with their fathers at Horeb; a national covenant, founded on temporal promises. (See exposition of chap. v.) At the same time it must be recollected, that nations are composed of families, and families of individuals; personal piety must therefore be considered as the soul of national religion. Thus at the era of the Reformation we must by no means suppose the whole, or even the majority of the English nation, consisted of pious individuals; but through the circulation of the Scriptures, and the preaching of the Reformers and their agents, with the blessing of God, there was such a number of true Christians as gave a cast of seriousness and devotion to that generation of Protestants, which seldom has been equalled since. Thus our Lord teaches us that true believers are "the salt of the earth;" (Matt. v. 13.) and a happy mixture of them in any generation gives it, as it were, the relish of piety and devotion, and at the same time preserves the bulk of the people from degenerating to open profaneness and irreligion, as otherwise might be expected.

Rebellious as the former generation were, we are far from supposing that there were among them no true children of Abraham and of God. On the contrary, in the matter of Baal-peor, after all that had been slain by Phinehas and his host, and by the plague which followed, there were still upwards of 600,000 men, which shows, that though the insurgents were

Ver. 62. Ye shall be left few in number.—To say nothing of the slaughter in former captivities and wars, Josephus calculates that 1,100,000 perished by the invasion of the Romans.

Ver. 63. Plucked from off the land.—Titus carried away 90,000; Adrian soon after slew 500,000, and the senate joined with him in a decree, that no Jew should ever come within Judea, on pain of death.

Ver. 64. Gods, even wood and stone.—Such were the gods of the Greeks and Romans; and they were also, on pain of death, more recently required to worship the images of saints, in Spain and Portugal.

Ver. 68. The Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again.—When Titus took Jerusalem, many of the young were sent to the public works in Egypt; and great numbers were sold almost for nought. See Psalm xlv. 13.—And no man shall buy.—Adrian sold them in a fair, like horses; and they were profited in such multitudes, that sometimes there were no buyers. See Bishop Newton on the Prophecies.

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 1. These are the words, &c.—In some copies of the Hebrew Bible, this verse is added to the preceding chapter. So Dr. Boothroyd.

Ver. 3. The great temptations, &c.—See note on ch. vii. 19.

Ver. 5. Your clothes are not waxen old.—See note on ch. viii. 4.

Ver. 6. Ye have not eaten bread.—They lived chiefly on manna in the wilderness, and they had no opportunity to cultivate the vine.

inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh.

9 Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

10 ¶ Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel,

11 Your little ones, your wives, and thy stranger that is in thy camp, from the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water:

12 That thou shouldest enter into covenant with the Lord thy God, and into his oath, which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day:

13 That he may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself, and that he may be unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.

14 Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath;

15 But with him that standeth here with us this day before the Lord our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day:

16 (For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt; and how we came through the nations which ye passed by;

17 And ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which were among them:)

18 Lest there should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the Lord our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood;

19 And it come to pass, when he heareth the words of this curse, that he bless himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my heart, to add drunkenness to thirst:

20 The Lord will not spare him, but then the anger of the Lord and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and the Lord shall blot out his name from under heaven.

remarkably active and daring, and many of them, perhaps, persons of extensive influence, still they formed but a tithing, as it were, of the whole nation. And in the new generation, though there might be a much larger number of true believers, yet, speaking of the people generally, the Lord had not given them "a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear," unto the very day on which Moses wrote; but there were still among them both individuals and families in whom there was "an evil heart of unbelief," (Heb. iii. 12,) a root bearing "gall and wormwood." Such a one might "bless himself in his heart," and say, as all hypocrites are wont to do, "I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my heart, to add drunkenness to thirst," &c. Such may deceive themselves, but the Lord will not spare them in the day in which he visits, either for national sins or personal transgressions.

The closing verse of this chapter contains a most important admonition, though its connexion with the rest is not very clear. The author of this exposition would connect it thus: should any curiously inquire the time when these judgments might be expected, or question the equity of the divine proceedings in their infliction, the inspired writer silences all such inquiries by saying, "The secret things (such as he hath not revealed) belong unto the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed to us and to our children for ever, that we

21 And the Lord shall separate him unto evil out of all the tribes of Israel, according to all the curses of the covenant that are written in this book of the law:

22 So that the generation to come of your children that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses which the Lord hath laid upon it;

23 And that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom, and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger and in his wrath:

24 Even all nations shall say, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?

25 Then men shall say, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt:

26 For they went and served other gods, and worshipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them:

27 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this book:

28 And the Lord rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, as it is this day.

29 The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

CHAPTER XXX.

I Great mercies promised unto the repentant. II The commandment is manifest. 15 Life and death are set before them.

AND it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to a mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee,

2 And shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul;

(and they) may do all the words of this law;" a reproof not dissimilar to that which our Lord, in a certain case, gave to his disciples, "What is that to thee? follow thou me." (John xxi. 22.) So again, when they asked him, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" his reply was, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." (Acts i. 6, 7.) It is always impertinent for servants to inquire into the designs of their masters, or into the motives of their conduct; into those of the Almighty, angels dare not pry, and mortals ought not. Speaking of the volume of the divine decrees, which he represents Gabriel himself as not presuming to look therein.

"Not Gabriel asks the reason why,
Nor God the reason gives;
Nor dare the favourite angel pry
Between the folded leaves."—Lyrics, Hv. 3.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1—20. Promises of mercy to Israel, on their repentance.—This short recapitulatory chapter gives encouragement to hope, that after all the judgments that Israel had brought upon themselves, their destruction would not be final; and that hope is so much strengthened by various passages in the prophets, and especially in St. Paul's Epistle ness;" and then it implies the insatiableness of men's sinful passions, which hanker for more and more indulgences after the greatest excesses. 1—Bagster. Ver. 23. The whole land is brimstone, and salt, and burning.—The effect of salt, where it abounds, on vegetation is described by burning. Thus Vulney, speaking of the borders of the Asphaltic Lake, or Dead sea, says, "The true cause of the absence of vegetables and animals is, the acid saltness of its waters, which is infinitely greater than that of the sea."—Orient. Cust. No. 71. Ver. 28. Whom he had not given unto them.—Margin, Or, "who had not given (Hebrew, divided) unto them (any portion)" i. e. gods from whom they had received no benefits; no manna, no quails, no miraculous interferences no promised land.

Ver. 12. That thou shouldest enter into covenant.—To enter into a covenant is, literally, to pass between the parts of the sacrifice slain on these occasions. See the exposition of Gen. xv. 12—21.

Ver. 18. Gall.—Margin, or, "a poisonous herb." A gall, in natural history, is an excrescence formed by insects on the trunks of trees, &c.; those of the oak are used in making black ink, and sometimes in medicine, as a powerful astringent; some are probably very bitter, whence the proverb.

Ver. 19. Add drunkenness.—A very forcible metaphor, denoting the natural progress and increasing avidity of sinful passions and depraved inclinations: which lead men to drink down iniquity as the drunkard does his liquor, without regard to consequences. Some render, "to add thirst to drunkenness."

3 That then the LORD thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the LORD thy God hath scattered thee.

4 If <sup>a</sup>any of thine be driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the LORD thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee:

5 And the LORD thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it: and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers.

6 And the LORD thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live.

7 And the LORD thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee.

8 And thou shalt return and obey the voice of the LORD, and do all his commandments which I command thee this day.

9 And the LORD thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thy hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the LORD will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers:

10 If thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law, and if thou turn unto the LORD thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul.

11 ¶ For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off.

12 It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

13 Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

14 But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

15 ¶ See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil;

16 In that I command thee this day to love the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

17 But if thy heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them;

18 I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it.

19 I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live:

20 That thou mayest love the LORD thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him: for he is thy life, and the length of thy days: that thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 Moses encouraged the people: 7 he encourages Joshua: 9 he delivereth the law unto the priests, to read it in the seventh year to the people. 14 God giveth a charge to Joshua, 19 and a song to testify against the people. 24 Moses delivereth the book of the law to the Levites to keep.

AND Moses went and spake these words unto all Israel.

2 And he said unto them, I am a hundred and twenty years old this day; I can no more go out and come in: also the LORD hath said unto me, Thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

3 The LORD thy God, he will go over before thee, and he will destroy these nations from before thee, and thou shalt possess them: and Joshua, he shall go over before thee, as the LORD hath said.

4 And the LORD shall do unto them as he did to Sihon, and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and unto the land of them, whom he destroyed.

5 And the LORD shall give them up before your face, that ye may do unto them according unto all the commandments which I have commanded you.

6 Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the LORD thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

7 ¶ And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou must go with this people unto the land which the LORD hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it.

8 And the LORD, he it is that doth go before to the Romans, as to leave little or no doubt of a national repentance and return to God, though when, and to what extent, and by what particular means, are circumstances which remain unrevealed, or at least of difficult interpretation; and this does not seem the place for investigation. As a particular inducement to obey the divine command, it is particularly stated, that there is no difficulty either in obtaining or in understanding it. They were not to go up to heaven, to receive it "by the ministry of angels," as at mount Sinai; nor had they to cross the sea, to go back to Egypt. "It is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart." So it was enjoined on them, (chap. vi. 6, 7.) "These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, &c." (Compare Rom. x. 6, &c.)

The close of the chapter is particularly eloquent and sublime; and that fine sentiment, "The Lord is thy life, and the length of thy days," is equally applicable to us Christians as to the literal seed of Abraham. "In him we live, and move, and have our being," temporally; and spiritually, life and salvation are alone from God our Saviour.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1—30. Moses takes his farewell of the people, and delivers a charge to Joshua.—Moses having brought the children of Israel to the very border of the promised land, is yet not permitted to enter it. "When we have finished what we came for, (says Bishop Hall,) it is time for us to be gone. This earth is made for action, not for fruition. The services of God's children would be ill rewarded, if they must stay here always. Let no man think much that those are fetched away which are faithful: their services would be ill rewarded, if they were to stay here always." The death of Moses out of the promised land, is denounced as a punishment, or correction of his fault at Meribah. (Numb. xx. 12.) But the mercy of God turns all our afflictions into blessings. Moses is excluded from the earthly Canaan, but he is admitted into CHAP. XXX. Ver. 4. From thence, &c.—[As this promise refers to a return from a captivity among all nations, consequently it cannot be exclusively the Babylonish captivity which is intended; and the repossession of their land must be different from that which was consequent on their return from Babylon. Nor at that period could it be said that they were multiplied more than their fathers, or, as the Hebrew imports, made greater than their fathers, when after their return, they were tributary to the Persians, and afterwards fell under the power of the Greeks, under whom they suffered much; nor have their hearts, as a nation, yet been circumcised.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Is not hidden.—Not wonderful, or difficult of comprehension: for though there are mysteries, and deep ones, in the doctrines of divine truth, there are none in the moral precepts here referred to; nothing can be plainer than the Ten Commandments.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 2. A hundred and twenty years.—[The life of Moses the great prophet of Jehovah and lawgiver of the Jews, was exactly the same in length as the time Noah employed in preaching righteousness to the antediluvian world. These one hundred and twenty years were divided into three remarkable periods. Forty years he lived in Egypt, in the court of Pharaoh, acquiring all the learning and wisdom of the Egyptians, (Ac. xvii. 20, 23.) forty years he sojourned in Midian, in a state of preparation for his great and thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed.

9 ¶ And Moses wrote this law, and <sup>m</sup> delivered it unto the priests the sons of Levi, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and unto all the elders of Israel.

10 And Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of <sup>n</sup> release, in the <sup>o</sup> feast of tabernacles, 11 When all Israel is come to <sup>p</sup> appear before the LORD thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt <sup>q</sup> read this law before all Israel in their hearing.

12 Gather <sup>r</sup> the people together, men, and women, and children, and thy stranger that <sup>s</sup> is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the LORD your God, and observe to do all the words of this law:

13 And that their <sup>t</sup> children which have not known any thing, may hear, and learn to fear the LORD your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it.

14 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold, thy days approach that thou must <sup>u</sup> die: call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a <sup>v</sup> charge. And Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And <sup>w</sup> the LORD appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle.

16 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt <sup>x</sup> sleep with thy fathers, and this people will <sup>y</sup> rise up, and go a <sup>z</sup> whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land, whither they go <sup>a</sup> to be among them, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them.

17 Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I <sup>b</sup> will forsake them; and I will <sup>c</sup> hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles <sup>d</sup> shall befall them, so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God <sup>e</sup> is not <sup>f</sup> among us?

18 And I will surely hide my face in that day for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods.

19 Now therefore write ye this song for you, and teach it the children of Israel: put it in their mouths, that this song may be a witness for me against the children of Israel.

"a better country, even a heavenly one." Before his death, however, he is ordered to deliver a charge to Joshua, to "Be strong, and of good courage;" assuring him that the Lord would go before, to prepare his way.

Moses having finished his inspired writings, appoints the public reading of them every seventh or sabbatic year, at the feast of tabernacles, in the ears of all the people. He is then

Ver. 10. At the end of every seven years.—We read but of three instances of this being attended to, Josh. viii. 30. 2 Chron. xvii. 7. i. xxxiv. 30. Mich. viii. 7. Those commentators are, however, too hasty, who conclude that these were the only instances in which this was done. These are recorded, probably, as instances of the practice being restored, after some considerable intermission.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt sleep with thy fathers.—Hebrew, "Shalt lie down;" ["lying down" it signifies to rest, take rest in sleep, and metaphorically to die. Though much stress cannot be safely laid upon this expression to prove the immortality of the soul, or that the people, in the time of Moses, had a distinct notion of its separate existence; yet, it was understood in this sense by Jonathan, who paraphrases the words thus: "Thou shalt lie down in the dust with thy fathers; and thy soul shall be laid up in the treasury of the life to come, with thy fathers."]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Hide my face.—(Though this may allude to the withdrawing of the Shechinah, or visible appearance of Jehovah, yet the general meaning of the 20 For when I shall have brought them into the land which I swear unto their fathers, that floweth with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten and <sup>d</sup> filled themselves, and waxen fat; then will they turn unto other gods, and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant.

21 And it shall come to pass, <sup>e</sup> when many evils and troubles are befallen them, that this song shall <sup>f</sup> testify against them as a witness: for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed: for I <sup>g</sup> know their imagination which <sup>h</sup> they go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I swear.

22 Moses therefore wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel.

23 ¶ And he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I swear unto them: and I will be with thee.

24 ¶ And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished,

25 That Moses commanded the Levites which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, saying, 26 Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, that it may be <sup>i</sup> there for a witness against thee.

27 For I know thy rebellion, and thy stiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been <sup>j</sup> rebellious against the LORD; and how much more after my death?

28 Gather <sup>k</sup> unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and <sup>l</sup> call heaven and earth to record against them.

29 For I know that after my death ye will utterly <sup>m</sup> corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; and <sup>n</sup> evil will befall you in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

30 And Moses spake in the ears of all the congregation of Israel the words of this song until they were ended.

enjoined to compose a sacred song, or poem, containing a recapitulation of the history of Israel, and of the Lord's dealings towards them. This was to be learned by heart, and sung by them, in order to be a warning to them against the repetition of their former rebellions. This very beautiful composition we shall find in the following chapter.

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 1—29. Moses celebrates the divine per-

Ver. 19. Write ye this song.—(The inimitable song which follows in the next chapter. Things of great importance, and of general concern, were, among the ancients, put into verse; as this was found, not only attractive and agreeable, but the best method of fixing and retaining them in the memory; especially in those early times when writing was but little practised. For this purpose, Jehovah was pleased to adapt his instructions. A sacred song, containing the substance of the preceding addresses, was appointed to be composed by Moses, doubtless under divine inspiration; which the people were required to learn, and teach to their children from generation to generation. This song would, when its predictions were verified, testify that they had been sufficiently warned; bear witness to the justice of God; and form a powerful call to repentance.]—Bagster. It is most certain that the ancients sang (or rather chanted) their poetry, and sometimes prose. Homer sung his poems to the harp, or lyre. So did the bards of the Druids, Celts, Germans, British, &c.—Aristotle says that the Greeks sung their laws and histories.

4 He is the <sup>a</sup>Rock, his work is <sup>a</sup>perfect: for all his <sup>a</sup>ways are judgment: a God of <sup>a</sup>truth and without iniquity, just and right is he.

6 Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? is not he thy father that hath <sup>a</sup>bought thee? hath he not made thee, and established thee?

7 ¶ Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee: thy elders, and they will tell thee.

8 When the Most High <sup>a</sup>divided to the nations their inheritance, when he <sup>a</sup>separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel.

16 They provoked him to <sup>a</sup>jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger.

17 They <sup>a</sup>sacrificed unto <sup>b</sup>devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not.

18 Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast <sup>a</sup>forgotten God that formed thee.

19 And when the Lord saw it, he <sup>a</sup>abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons, and of his daughters.

20 And he said, I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith.

21 They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will <sup>a</sup>move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation.

23 I will heap mischiefs upon them; I will spend mine <sup>a</sup>arrows upon them.

24 They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with <sup>a</sup>burning heat, and with bitter destruction: I will also send the <sup>a</sup>teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust.

25 The sword without, and <sup>a</sup>terror within, shall <sup>a</sup>destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also with the man of gray hairs.

Justices, and laments the corruption of the people.—Greatness, justice, and truth, are primary attributes of the Deity, of whom "the rock" is the established emblem. David says, (2 Sam. xiii. 3.) "The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me:" and the same image was applied to the idols of the heathen: "For their rock is not as our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges." (ver. 31.) The leading idea of the figure is safety, or salvation; hence those words are often joined together, "The Lord is my rock and my salvation." He is a sure foundation for our hopes, a safe defence against our enemies, and a refuge from shipwreck and from storm. As the primitive rocks, moreover, are the very foundation of our earth, Maimonides and other critics have taken the figure in the sense of origin, or first cause, and this certainly corresponds best with the following sentence, "His work is perfect."

Of Israel it is said, "They have corrupted themselves, their spot is not the spot of his children;" the latter clause of which is attended with some difficulty, as may be seen in the notes: but our present version, compared with the margin, gives a very good sense, and probably the true meaning of the passage: "They have corrupted themselves," as flesh is corrupted by disease and death: their blemishes are not of that superficial nature as to be washed out, even "with nitre and much soap," but are the marks of putrefaction; "they are a perverse and

CHAP. XXXII. Ver. 5. They have corrupted themselves, &c.—Hebrew, "He (i. e. Israel) hath corrupted himself."—Their spot is not the spot of his children.—Margin, "They are not his children; that is their blot." The last clause is variously rendered and explained. Bishop Lathrop renders it, "Their evil disposition hath corrupted his children, which indeed are no longer his;" but adds, in a note, that the sense adopted by the LXX., the Samaritan, and Syriac, is perhaps nearer the truth: "They are corrupted, they are not his; (they are) sons of error, or blemish," which is also partly confirmed by Antia, Vulgate, and Symmachus. Some explain the word spot, as referring to the stigma, or mark, impressed by idolaters on their foreheads; but nothing like this was allowed in Israel. They were not to cut or paint themselves. The sense given in the exposition was suggested by considering, that the word used for corruption, is applied to the change which takes place in a dead body, (Psalm xvi. 10.) and is, in fact, only the universal profluence of that putrefaction which first appears in spots. The same idea is perhaps suggested in Jer. li. 23, (above referred to,) where the Jews are described as polluted with idolatry, and their "iniquity marked" with a spot, or blot, that could not be eradicated.

Ver. 6. Is he not thy father that hath bought thee?—That is, who redeemed thee. See Isa. lx. 16.

Ver. 8. According to the number of the children of Israel.—The meaning is, (says Dr. Boothroyd,) "that when God fixed the boundaries of other nations, he allotted also a land sufficiently large to contain the children of Israel; and he so favoured them, by revealing his will to them, and dwelling among them, that they may be said to be his own inheritance." Hence it does not appear that the Canaanites had any claim to this country, but by possession, probably by conquest: and by the same means were they dispossessed. See the quotation from Bryant, in the introduction to this book.

Ver. 10. He found him in a desert land.—To this it has been objected, that the Lord did not find them in the desert, but led them thither. But the expression is poetical; the narrative begins, or finds them there. Compare Exod. xviii. 8. Num. xx. 14. margin. He led him about.—Margin, "Compassed him about." The same pillar of cloud and fire which directed, also protected him, as in the passage of the Red sea.

Ver. 13. Honey out of the rock.—(i. e. wild honey,) and oil out of the flinty rock.—Maudrell, speaking of Judea, says, "The most rocky parts of all, which could not well be adjusted for the production of corn, might yet serve for the plantation of vines and olive-trees, which delight to extract, the one its fatness, the other its sprightly juice, chiefly out of such dry and flinty places."

Ver. 14. The fat of kidneys of wheat.—In allusion to this expression, Forbes observes, that some of the greatest delicacies in India are made from the roings of flour, which is called the heart, or kidney, of wheat.—Pure blood of the grape.—That is, wine not weakened by water.

Ver. 15. Jeshurun.—Hebrew, "the upright;" i. e. that nation whose ancestors were upright before God, became corrupt.

Ver. 17. They sacrificed unto devils.—The original word, shedim, has been variously interpreted. "The Vulgate, LXX., Arabic, Persic, Coptic, and Anglo-Saxon, have devils, or demons."—Dr. Clarke. These were worshipped under the notion of their presiding over nature, and shedding down (as Parkhurst explains) to the blessings of rain and dew, &c. This was connected with the ancient astrology.

Ver. 19. He abhorred them because of the provoking, &c.—Margin, "He despised;" or, "He was disgusted with them, because of the provocation;" or because his sons and daughters provoked him by their idolatries.

Ver. 20. Children in whom is no faith.—That is, faithless, fickle, not to be depended on.

Ver. 22. The lowest hell.—The deepest destruction; alluding to the earthquake and the volcano.

Ver. 23. I will spend mine arrows upon them.—The judgments of God in general are termed the arrows of God; Job vi. 4. Ps. xxxviii. 2, 3; xci. 5. Ezek. v. 16. Jer. i. 14. 2 Sam. xxii. 14, 15. The heathens did the same. Apollo is ever represented as bearing a bow and quiver full of deadly arrows.—Hom. Il. l. 45.

The following beautiful passage, quoted by Dr. Clarke from an oriental writer, will well illustrate this metaphor. "It was once demanded of the fourth Khaleefeh, (on whom be the mercy of the Creator!) if the canopy of heaven were a bow; and if the earth were the cord thereof; if calamities were arrows; if mankind were the marks for those arrows, and if Almighty God, the tremendous and glorious, were the unerring Archer; to whom could the sons of Adam flee for protection?" The Khaleefeh answered, "The sons of Adam must flee unto the Lord."

26 I said, I would *scatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men;

27 Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, *Our hand is high, and the LORD hath not done all this.

28 For they are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them.

29 Oh *that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!

30 How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight, except their Rock had *sold them, and the LORD had shut them up?

31 For *their rock is not as our Rock, *even our enemies themselves being judges:

32 For their vine *is of the *vine of *Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter:

33 Their wine is the *poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of *asps.

34 Is not this laid *up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures?

35 To *me belongeth vengeance, and recompense; their *foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at *hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste.

36 For the LORD shall judge his people, and *repent himself for his servants; when he seeth that their *power is gone, and there is none shut up, or left.

37 And he shall say, Where are their gods, their rock in whom they trusted, 38 Which did eat the fat of their sacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings? let them *rise up and help you, and be *your protection.

39 See now that I, *even I, am he, and there is no god with me: I *kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.

40 For I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever.

44 ¶ And Moses came and spake all the words of this song in the ears of the people, he and *Hoshea the son of Nun.

45 And Moses made an end of speaking all these words to all Israel:

46 And he said unto them, *Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law.

47 For it is not a vain thing for you: because it is your *life; and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it.

48 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses that self-same day, saying, crooked generation," of whose reform there appeared no more hope, than of curing a body already putrefied.

The goodness of God is, in the writings of Moses, constantly contrasted with the baseness and ingratitude of his professing people. His care over them is compared to that of the royal bird, (the eagle,) in rearing and fostering her young; their ingratitude is compared to the ungrateful hind, "Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked;" and the more they were nourished, the more ingratitude they discovered, until at length they turned their back upon Jehovah, and sacrificed to demons, the idols of the heathen. Well might the prophet say, "They are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them. O that they were wise, that they understood this! that they would consider their latter end!"

This, indeed, is a subject of universal interest, no less so to us than to them; but the ablest commentators are of opinion, as this refers to the nation, that it does not so properly refer to the death of individuals, as to the judgments denounced against them as a people; as if the prophet had said, "O that they would consider the consequences of their disobedience!"

Ver. 30. One chase a thousand.—This was promised Levit. xxvi. 7, 8, and would doubtless have been fulfilled, had the people remained faithful and obedient. —Except their Rock had sold them.—In slave countries, the slaves are penned up like cattle, till they are sold, and then delivered up to their purchasers. It is remarkable, that when Titus had taken Jerusalem, he was so struck with the strength of the place, that he acknowledged, if God had not delivered it into his hands, the Roman armies never could have taken it.

Ver. 32. Their vine is of the vine of Sodom.—Margin, "Is worse than the vine of Sodom." Michaelis thinks that the vine of Sodom is the solanum, or nightshade, which bears a considerable resemblance to the vitis, or white vine, in its leaves and fruit, which is vinous, but poisonous, and which the Arabs call fox-grapes. —Poison of dragons.—Many critics contend that the Heb. Tannin, here used, refers to the crocodile; but this creature, terrible as it is, is not poisonous; it is evident, therefore, that it must mean something else in this place. The late Editor of Calmet contends for the Geecko, a creature much like the chameleon, but whose poison is very fatal; and so is that of some species of serpents; but the moral sense, as above given, is unquestionable, and most important.

Ver. 34. Is not this laid up in store with me?—Namely, vengeance and recompense, as in the verse following.

So the prophet Jeremiah laments over Jerusalem; "She remembered not her latter end, therefore she came down wonderfully." (Lam. i. 9.)

Ver. 30—52. Moses laments over the ingratitude of Israel, and is himself ordered to prepare to die.—The pathetic lamentation of Moses connects with this part of the chapter, as well as of the former. "O that they were wise, and that they understood this!" namely, the advantages of obedience, and the miseries which must necessarily result from a contrary conduct. Turning toward the idolatrous Canaanites, Moses justly says, "Their rock is not as our Rock;" their gods are not as our God, "even our enemies themselves being judges." So Rahab confessed to the spies; "We have heard how Jehovah dried up the water of the Red sea, when ye came out of Egypt," &c. (Josh. ii. 10, 11.)

As to the idolatrous nations, they are compared to the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, whose sins they copied: and are said, therefore, to have produced poisonous fruits, whose wine is compared to the poison of dragons and of asps; that is, the principles of idolatry are as destructive to pure

Ver. 35. Their foot shall slide in due time.—"In the time their foot shall slide." (Ainsworth.) So the Psalmist tells us, the wicked stand in "slippery places," whence they are cast "down unto destruction."—Ps. lxxiii. 18. Calmet thinks this passage refers to the devoted nations, and we conceive justly.

Ver. 42. And that with the blood, &c.—The words "and that," are supplementary, and would be better omitted. —From the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.—The word paroth, rendered revenges, a sense in which it never seems to be used, has rendered this passage very obscure. As the word parot, signifies the hair of the head, both in Hebrew and Arabic, Parichut and others render mairosh paroth, "from the hairy head;" but to have this sense, the words should rather have been mipparoth rosh, according to the Hebrew idiom. The word faron, in Arabic, however, also denotes a prince or chief; and the words may be literally rendered, with the LXX, "from the head of the chiefs of the enemies." The hyperbaton, or transposition of words from their grammatical order, is very observable in this verse; the third member forming a continuation of the first, and the fourth of the second. —Bagster.

Ver. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations.—Margin, "Sing ye (or praise) his people, ye nations." The textual reading is justified by St. Paul, as above quoted.

Ver. 44. Hoshea.—That is, Joshua. See note on Numb. xiii. 16

1 The majesty of God. 6 The blessings of the twelve tribes. 26 The excellency of Israel.

AND this is the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death.

3 Yea, he <sup>d</sup> loved the people; all his saints are in thy <sup>e</sup> hand: and they sat down at thy feet; every one shall <sup>f</sup> receive of thy words.

4 Moses commanded us a law; even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob.

5 And he was <sup>g</sup> king in Jeshurun, when the heads of the people and the tribes of Israel were gathered together.

6 ¶ Let <sup>h</sup> Reuben live, and not die; and let not his men be few.

7 ¶ And this is the blessing of Judah: and he said, Hear, LORD, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people: let his hands be sufficient for him, and be thou a <sup>i</sup> help to him from his enemies.

morals, and to the true interests of mankind, as the venom of those creatures is to human life. The people of Israel are described by the prophet Isaiah as the vineyard of the Lord of hosts, which had been cultivated and fenced round; but, saith the Lord, "when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, it brought forth wild grapes." (Isa. v. 1-7.) But these idolaters brought forth not only wild but poisonous fruits; for idolatry not only violated the precepts of the first, but of the second table; it not only dishonoured the divine perfections, but it encouraged the crimes that poisoned the sources of human existence and of knowledge, and sapped the foundations of society. Against these vengeance is denounced. The Lord is arising to judgment; to avenge his people of their enemies, to give them their allotted inheritance, and dispossess the idolaters who had usurped it; and the poem concludes with calling upon the nations to unite with his people, and praise Jehovah for his mercies; "for he will be merciful to his land and to his people." This St. Paul quotes as a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles; "Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people." And this justifies our interpretation of these verses as favourable to Israel, the surrounding nations (the Canaanites excepted) being called upon to rejoice with them.

Moses having recited this song in the ears of all the people, concludes with this pointed and pathetic address: "Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day. . . For it is not a vain thing, it is your life; and through this ye shall prolong your days in the land whither ye go over Jordan to possess it."

CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 1-12. Moses blesses the tribes of Israel.—Moses, though not allowed to enter the promised land, was privileged before his death, not only to view that goodly country, but by the spirit of prophecy to foresee and to predict the fate and future circumstances of the several tribes, in which we shall now follow him: comparing, occasionally, his predictions with those of good old Jacob in circumstances very similar.

The introduction is very sublime, and places us at the foot of Mount Sinai, where the Lord first appeared in glory; and then successively at Seir, at Paran, and at Meribah Kadesh. St. Stephen tells us that "the Law was given by the disposition of angels," (Acts vii. 53.) with which "the ten thousands of saints," or "holy ones," seems here naturally to correspond, though in the following clause it appears to be applied to the people of Israel. The Hebrew term for saints signifies, 1st. persons separated for the service of God; and, therefore, 2dly. sanctified, or holy persons; in both which senses it is applicable, and actually applied, both to angels in heaven and saints on earth. To the latter he gave a "fiery law," or a law from the midst of Sinai's flame, and which law was as rigid in its enactments, as it was terrible in the form of its delivery.

The Law was "given by the hand," or instrumentality of Moses, but neither was he lawgiver, nor king, in any proper sense of these terms, both being appropriated to Jehovah; as saith the prophet Isaiah, "The Lord is our judge; the Lord is our lawgiver—our king; he will save us;" and so the apostle James, "There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy." (Isa. xxxiii. 22. James iv. 12.) Notwithstanding, therefore, the fiery nature of this law, and the flaming glory with which it was accompanied, still "he loved the people." God showed his love in the gift of a law equally calculated to make his people happy as to make them holy: and we are required to show our love to him, by an obedience both implicit and universal.

If the term "King in Jeshurun," (that is, Israel,) be applied to Moses, it must be in the sense of God's viceregent, presiding, which he certainly did, "when the heads of the people and the tribes of Israel were gathered together," as appears to have been the case at this time, while Moses blessed them.

On Reuben, he pronounces the blessing of an extensive population, with which he certainly was favoured. (See note on Num. xxvi. 51.)

For Judah, he implores an answer to his prayers, which in this case are supposed to be for victory: so the Chaldee here explains it; "Receive, O Lord, the prayer of Judah, when he goeth forth to war." It may be recollected that Jacob had compared this tribe to "a lion's whelp;" (Gen. xlix. 9.) and it was doubtless for its bravery, as well as numbers, that Judah marched in the front of the army. On this account, also, probably Moses prays, "Bring him to his people!" that is, as the Targum of Jonathan explains it, "Bring him from the battle in peace;" for as his was the post of honour, so was it also the past of danger.

Of Levi he said, "Thy Thummim and thy Urim" (that is, the oracular breast-plate) "be with thy Holy One;" not Aaron the high priest, but the Angel of the Covenant, with whom the people strove at Massah and at Meribah; and in allusion to which the Apostle Paul says, "They tempted Christ, and were destroyed." (1 Cor. x. 8-12.) The following words (ver. 9.) are certainly difficult of interpretation; but they are supposed to refer to the indifference which this tribe showed to all the ties of nature and relationship, whenever those ties interfered with their duty toward God: of which some remarkable instances may be referred to, Levit. xxi. 11, 12. Exod. xxxii. 26-28; and in which particular (as well as many others) the high priest was typical of our Saviour Christ. (Matt. xii. 46-50.)

And of Benjamin he said, "The beloved of the Lord (alluding to Benjamin being his father's favourite) shall dwell in safety by (or near) him;" under his wing, as it were, and he "shall cover him all the day long; and he (Benjamin) shall dwell (or rest) between his shoulders;" i. e. rest upon his bosom. The imagery seems to refer to the care and fondness of his father Jacob, which he was now to receive from his heavenly parent, who had allotted him his portion in the centre of the kingdom, and in the vicinity of the temple.

Ver. 13-29. Moses continues the prophetic blessings to the other tribes.—The next tribe, that of Joseph, is a favourite subject for enlargement, as well with Moses as with Jacob, have introduced the word not in italics, which seems as great a license as rejecting the word Moses in ver. 4. The name of Simeon, we may observe, is not to be found among the tribes, some say, because already greatly diminished; namely, more than 17,000 in forty years. (See note on Numb. xxvi. 51.) Simeon's name is, indeed, to be found in several copies of the Septuagint, but was perhaps inserted only to get over the difficulty. The present text is very perplexing; Dr. Clarke says, probably the text anciently stood thus: "Let Reuben live and not die; and let the men of Simeon be few;" which certainly was the fact, though the emendation is very doubtful.

Ver. 8. Thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one.—That is, under his direction. On this mysterious subject we shall offer some inquiry, on 1 Sam. xxviii. 6.

CHAP. XXXIII. Ver. 2. With ten thousands of saints—Or holy ones. The original words here used are so similar to the proper names Meribah Kadesh, (differing only in two letters, and one of them very similar,) that Dr. Kennicott, and other learned commentators, think it an error in transcribing, especially as Meribah Kadesh is mentioned in the close of the preceding chapter. But the allusions to this event by St. Stephen and St. Paul, above quoted, and some other passages, lead rather to the common reading. See Heb. ii. 2. Jude 14.—From his right hand.—That is, from the pillar of cloud.

Ver. 4. Moses.—Dr. Kennicott thinks this word introduced by the mistake of the transcribers (for which he very plausibly accounts,) but it is dangerous to alter the text merely from conjecture, without the support of MSS.

Ver. 6. Let not his men be few—Here it may be observed, our translators

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 Moses from mount Nab-vieweth the land: 5 he dieth there: 6 his burial: 7 his age. 8 Thirty days' mourning for him. 9 Joshua succeedeth him. 10 The praise of Moses.

AND Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the though they employ different imagery. The blessing of Joseph comprehends the rains and dew from heaven; the springs within the earth; the fruits that the earth produces; the cedars that adorn the mountains, and the ores and precious stones that grow within; but, above all, "the good-will of Him that dwelt in the bush," (Exod. iii. 4-6.) which is the crowning blessing of the whole. The closing verse of this blessing compares Joseph to the "unicorn," and its two tribes to its horns, which possess a singular and irresistible strength in driving its enemies before it.

Zebulun and Issachar were both situated on the sea-coast; it is therefore promised, that, "they shall suck of the abundance of the sea, and of treasures hid in the sand," which is most usually explained of their enjoying abundance of fish, which seems, indeed, by the New Testament, to have been the chief food of the Galileans, their descendants. By "treasures hid in the sand," some, however, understand the murex, a shell-fish, from which the celebrated purple dye was extracted; and others, the vitreous sand of which glass is formed, and which, according to Tacitus, was found on the Jewish coast. But the following anecdote will illustrate the former interpretation, which seems the most natural, though it need not exclude the others.

"I recollect (says an ingenious writer) an instance in a history of some who fled from persecution to that then wild desert, America. Among many other hardships, they were sometimes in such straits for bread, that the very crusts of their former tables in England would have been a dainty to them. Necessity drove the women and children to the sea-side, to look for a ship expected to bring them provisions; but no ship for many weeks appeared; however, they saw in the sand vast quantities of shell-fish, since called clams, a sort of muscles. Hunger impelled them to taste, and at length they fed almost wholly on them, and to their own astonishment were as cheerful, fat, and lusty, as they had been in England with their fill of the best provisions. A worthy man, one day after they had all dined on clams without bread, returned God thanks for causing them to 'suck of the abundance of the seas, and of treasure hid in the sand,' a passage in Deuteronomy, till then unobserved by the company, but which ever after endeared the writings of Moses to them." Robinson's Vill. Disc.

Gad is compared to a lion, who secured for himself the first prey, the lands of Sihon and Og, of which he took possession before the tribes passed over Jordan; notwithstanding which he failed not to come over with the heads of the people and assist his brethren. The courage and fierceness of this tribe are particularly celebrated, 1 Chron. xii. 8.

Dan is compared to a lion's whelp, which leaped from Bashan, a well known retreat for lions; and Dan in fact did overleap his boundaries, and procured an accession to his territories. (Josh. xix. 47.)

Naphtali is described as rich and contented; Asher as fruitful, both in possessions and posterity: and the last clause, though difficult of interpretation, seems to imply diligence and perseverance, length of days, and vigour of constitution. All which, though in the first instance to be interpreted literally, may be properly and profitably improved with reference to our exertions for God, and the strength which he affords us under such exertions.

The concluding verses are no less sublime in diction than the beginning; and the last verse is the language of triumph and exultation. We indeed have a different class of trials and of conflicts; but he who armed Israel for the fight, and gave them the final victory, blessed be his name! hath promised us a more important conquest over sin and Satan, death and the grave. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ!

CHAP. XXXIV. Ver. 1-12. The death and character of Moses.—In the close of the 32d chapter, the prophet received his summons to prepare to die. "And Moses went out from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah. . . . And the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead," &c. "So Moses died, according to the word of the Lord," without a fear, and without a murmur; affording to us, Christians, a happy example both of faith and submission to the divine will.

Moses died, and was buried, and was lamented; such is the utmost we can say of the greatest man on earth. The pomps which follow them to the tomb may be admonitory to others, but is lost on them; and in this case there is an important reason for their omission; for such was the proneness of Israel to idolatry, that there is no room to doubt, but that the very men who so often slighted his authority and disobeyed his laws, would have been the first to idolize him. For this reason, the

Ver. 14. Precious things put forth by the moon.—The ancients seem to have been of opinion, that the moon, as well as the sun, had a considerable influence on vegetation. gam, the sea; but it does not appear that Naphtali had any possession on the coast of the Mediterranean, or Great Western sea. By the maps, this tribe appears to have been seated between the lake of Semachon on the N.E., and that of Genesareth on the south; consequently in the north of Judæa. The Editor can only say with Dr. Wall, "How the word 'south' is to be applied, I know not: it was south from mount Lebanon."

Ver. 24. Dip his foot in oil.—See Job xxxix. 6.

Ver. 25. Thy shoes (Margin. Under thy shoes) shall be iron and brass.—That is, as hardy military men, the soles of their sandals should be of these metals: a metaphorical expression, intimating hardihood and perseverance. Lord buried him in a valley unknown to mortal eye; and "no man [says the historian] knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day;"—a phrase which evidently implies that this account of the death of Moses was written several years after the event; but whether by Joshua, or Samuel, or some other prophet, cannot now be certainly ascertained.

The age of Moses, at his death, is stated at 120 years, and his life was divided into three equal periods: 40 years in the

Ver. 6. Buried him in a valley.—It is probable, that the reason why Moses was buried thus privately was, lest the Israelites, prone to idolatry, should

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON DEUTERONOMY.

[Thus ends the Book of Deuteronomy, and with it the Pentateuch, commonly called the LAW OF MOSES; a work every way worthy of God its author, and only less than the NEW TESTAMENT, the Law and Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Its antiquity places it at the head of all the writings in the world; and the various subjects it embraces render it of the utmost importance to every part of the civilized world. Its philosophy, history, geography, and chronology entitle it to the respect of the whole human race. The title of theology, and religion demonstrably prove it to be a revelation from God. The Law of Moses is more properly the Law of Jehovah, torah yehovah, the grand title of the Pentateuch. Could we conceive Moses to have been the author of this system, we must consider him more than mortal:—no wisdom of man has ever yet invented such a Code of Laws. His merit, however, has been disputed, and his laws severely criticised, by persons whose interest it was to prove religion a cheat, because they had none themselves. To some, whose mental taste and feeling are strangely perverted, every thing in heathenism wears not only the most fascinating aspect, but appears to lay claim to, and possess every excellence; and hence they have called up Confucius, Menu, Zoroaster, and Mohammed himself, to dispute the palm with Moses!]

On this subject in general, it may be just necessary to remark, that the utmost that can be said of all laws, merely human, is, that they restrain vice, and enforce virtue. It alone brings man to the footstool of his Maker; and keeps him dependant on the strong for strength, on the wise for wisdom, and on the merciful for grace. It abounds with promises of support, and salvation for the present life, which no false system dared ever to propose: every where, Moses, in the most confident manner, pledges his God for the fulfilment of all the exceeding great and precious promises, with which his laws are so plentifully interspersed; and while they were obedient they could say, "Not one word hath failed us, of all the good things which the Lord our God spake concerning us." Who that dispassionately reads the Pentateuch, that considers it in itself, and in its reference to that glorious Gospel which it was intended to introduce, can for a moment deny it the palm of infinite superiority over all the systems ever framed or imagined by man? Well might the Israelitish people triumphantly exclaim, "There is none like the God of Jeshurun!" and with what striking propriety does the glorious legislator add, "Happy art thou, O Israel! who is like unto thee? O people saved of the Lord?"

Finally, the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, which are amassed in these five books, have enriched the whole civilized earth, and, indeed, greatly promoted that very civilization. They have been a kind of text-book to almost every writer on geology, geography, chronology, astronomy, natural history, ethics, jurisprudence, political economy, theology, poetry, and criticism, from the time of Moses to the present day. Books to which the choicest writers and philosophers in Pagan antiquity have been deeply indebted; and which were the text-books to all the prophets—books from which the flimsy writers against Divine Revelation, have derived their natural religion, and all their moral excellence:—books written in all the energy and purity of the incomparable language in which they are composed; and lastly, books, which for importance of matter, variety of information, dignity of sentiment, precision of facts, impartiality, simplicity, and sublimity of narration, tending to improve and ennoble the intellect, and ameliorate the physical and moral condition of man, have never been equalled, and can only be paralleled by the GOSPEL of the Son of God! Fountain of endless mercy, justice, truth, and beneficence! how much are thy gifts and bounties neglected by those who do not read this law; and by those who having read it, are not morally improved by it, and made wise unto salvation.—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF JOSHUA.

It is not certain whether this book received its name from Joshua, as the author, or as the hero of it. It is reasonable to believe that Joshua would keep minutes of events in which he had so considerable a share; and yet, as several passages occur in this book which were evidently written after his time, it is likely that some subsequent prophet, most probably Samuel, collected and arranged these memorials, and added those passages which Joshua could not have written, and which yet must have been written before the times of David and Solomon. (See chap. xv. 63; xvi. 10.)

However this may have been, "The Book of Joshua (as Dr. Clarke observes) is one of the most important writings in the Old Covenant, and should never be separated from the Pentateuch, of which it is at once both the continuation and completion. Between this book and the five books of Moses, there is the same analogy as between the four Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. The Pentateuch contains a history of the acts of the great Jewish legislator, and the laws on which the Jewish church should be established. The Book of Joshua gives an account of the establishment of that church in the land of Canaan, according to the oft-repeated promises and declarations of God. The gospels give an account of the transactions of Jesus Christ, the great Christian Legislator, and of those laws on which his church should be established, and by which it should be governed. The Acts of the Apostles give an account of the actual establishment of that church, according to the predictions and promises of its great Founder."

The foundation of the Jewish church and polity being laid, there are two peculiar circumstances, which, though they have been already hinted at, now claim a more distinct remark.

1. The Hebrew government, as just established, was a Theocracy: that is, God (Theos) was himself the Supreme Governor of the nation; the high priest his prime minister (if we may so speak); and Joshua, and his successors, the judges, his commanders in chief. Every tribe had its elders, who were magistrates, or members of the police; and the army was officered in the same way, by commanders of tens, of fifties, of hundreds, and of thousands. (Exod. xviii.

21. Deut. i. 15.) These were in all cases to abide by the written Mosaic law; and if any case occurred which that did not appear to reach, the high priest was to put on his mysterious breast-plate, and to appear before the most holy place, (without-side the veil,) and there to receive an oracular answer. This was the original constitution of the Hebrew government; but as it was foreseen that a kingly government, and a human monarch, would be required in process of time, provision was made for such a change, as we have seen in the 17th chapter of Deuteronomy, and latter part. Still, however, the choice was with the Lord; and when chosen, the king had no right to make any alteration in the laws; but in all difficult cases, himself, as well as the judges, was to ask counsel of God, by the medium of the high priest. (1 Sam. xiv. 37.)

The Hebrew government, though divine, appears founded in covenant between God and Israel; (Exod. xix. 3–6. Deut. xix. 10–18.) the fundamental principle of which was, the worship of Jehovah, and the utter extirpation of idolatry from all the land of Israel. The sanctions of this law, both in its rewards and punishments, were all temporal, (as among ourselves,) and necessarily must be so, as nations have no existence in a future state. This does not prove, however, that the Hebrews had no knowledge of such a state, though it is probable that the bulk of the nation acted as little under its influence as the mass of nominal Christians among our countrymen. (as the progress of truth generally is,) was like the rising of the sun, which "shineth more and more unto the perfect day." It is impossible to account for the faith and piety of the early patriarchs, on the supposition that they knew nothing of a future state. Could Abel or Noah walk with God, as they are represented to have done, under the impression that the moment of death should separate them from him for ever? Could Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, die in faith, as the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews (chap. xi.) informs us they did, without any assurance of an hereafter? Could Moses "esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt," because "he had respect to the recompense of reward," when his whole life was a series of "afflictions" when he was not even supposed to set his foot within the promised land, had he not "looked for a better country, even a heavenly" one? Indeed the apostle hath fully decided this question, when he tells us, God hath "prepared for them a city;" for what city was prepared for these venerable patriarchs, except that New Jerusalem to which we all aspire? Indeed, it is ridiculous to suppose that any man can live under the impression of a religious principle, who expects at his death to perish like a dog.

II. We are called to consider the true nature of the Hebrew Ritual. The enemies of revelation describe it as a mere record of ceremonies, unmeaning, if not ridiculous; but the learned and ingenious Lowman, who has deeply investigated this subject, has shown that it was calculated to answer the most important purposes; as, in particular, to represent the true character of the Deity, and to guard the Israelites against idolatry. On this subject we shall quote the following interesting extract, from his "Rationale of the Hebrew Ritual."

"It was far from the design of the ritual to teach only a ceremonial holiness; the intention of it appears plainly to set the holiness of God, as one of his governing perfections, in a full and strong light; to teach the high importance of being holy, as God is holy, as well as of being holy because God is holy; but this intention of the ritual will appear more clearly as we proceed."

"The wisdom of the ritual, to make the knowledge it teaches concerning the one only true God more useful, teaches him to be merciful, at the same time it represents him to be a holy God, therefore proclaimed his name, 'The Lord, gracious and merciful, long-suffering, abundant in loving-kindness, goodness, and truth; keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquities, transgressions, and sins.' Not only is God represented as gracious and merciful, but his mercy and grace are exemplified in pardoning iniquity, transgressions, and sins; or all kinds of offences committed against him. The ritual, to encourage the hope of a sinner in the mercy of God, teaches him that there is mercy with God, that he may be feared; that when he shall return unto God with his whole heart, he shall be received graciously, and restored to favour. This ritual yet farther instructs in the wise method wherein God has appointed to show mercy, supporting, at the same time, the honour of his perfections and government. The ritual therefore appointed propitiatory sacrifices, or atonements, washings and purifications, to teach the guilt of sin, the punishment due to sin from a holy God, and righteous governor of the world; to teach the sinner to honour God by such acknowledgment and confession, which was to accompany his sin-offering and atonement; and also to express his hope in the mercy of God, his trust in the promise of God, that, returning to God with his whole heart, his sin shall be forgiven. Hence the Psalmist concludes, 'For thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy, to all them that call upon thee.' It is observable, that the Hebrew ritual encouraged the Hebrew nation to hope for mercy and favour as God's favourite people."

Mr. Lowman proceeds:—

"In like manner, the whole ritual very plainly taught, that a pure heart, as well as clean hands, were requisite in the worship of Jehovah. The very washings, which purified from the filthiness of the flesh, taught, by an easy meaning, the necessity of being cleansed from all filthiness of the spirit, to appear in the presence of the most holy God. The ritual actions were manifestly designed to express a moral and spiritual meaning. The bare consideration of the ritual itself, the general use of ritual actions in those times, the exposition of the ritual in the other parts of their law, and by their prophets, put it out of all doubt, that the outward actions were always to be accompanied with inward suitable tempers and affections."

Nor was this all. The Hebrew ritual must be considered as "a plan of a better state of religion in the times of the promised Messiah," as is fully shown by the inspired author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, who proves at length, that all the Levitical sacrifices had reference to the atonement offered by our Saviour; and that the tabernacle, and all its holy utensils, in one way or other prefigured Christ, or some circumstance connected with Christianity. We have already noticed this as respects the paschal lamb, the scape-goat, the red heifer, and various other types; and when we come to the above Epistle, we shall have occasion to enter more fully into the subject; in the mean time, what is here said, may be enough to justify the divine character of the Mosaic ritual.

There is one circumstance, however, which demands our particular attention; namely, the minuteness and exactness with which all the directions must be complied with, and that under the severest penalties. How is this to be accounted for? There may be reasons unknown to us; but the following seems obvious and important. The apostle Paul represents the Jews before Christ as in a state of bondage, and under the law as a "schoolmaster." (Gal. iii. 23—25.) Now this not only suggests a state of severe discipline, but implies, that, like children, they were to be taught obedience to the authority of the schoolmaster, without being acquainted with the reasons on which his precepts were founded, and thus taught a system of implicit obedience, a circumstance of the highest importance in our Christian education; for as the apostle to the Hebrews argues, if, when children, we were subjected to the discipline and instruction of parents and preceptors, who chastised us for their pleasure, much rather should we be "in subjection to the Father of spirits, and live." (Heb. xii. 7—9.)

Moses died, and Joshua succeeded him, in the year of the world 2553, and 1451 years before the birth of Christ, as it is commonly reckoned. But respecting the time of the death of Joshua there is some doubt, as we shall notice when we come to that event.

CHAPTER I.

1 The Lord appointed Joshua to succeed Moses. 3 The borders of the promised land. 5, 9 God promiseth to assist Joshua: 8 he giveth him instructions: 10 Joshua prepareth the people to pass over Jordan.

NOW after the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, it came to pass, that the Lord spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying,

2 Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel.

3 ¶ Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses.

4 From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast.

5 ¶ There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: for as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

6 Be strong and of a good courage: for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them.

7 Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right

10 ¶ Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying,

11 Pass through the host and command the people, saying, Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye shall pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land which the Lord your God giveth you to possess it.

12 ¶ And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manasseh, spake Joshua, saying, 13 Remember the word which Moses the servant of the Lord commanded you, saying, The Lord your God hath given you rest, and hath given you this land.

14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall remain in the land which Moses gave you on this side Jordan; but ye shall pass before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and help them;

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—18. Joshua commissioned to lead Israel into Canaan.—Joshua was now probably on some part of mount Nebo, where Moses died, and within view of the places here referred to; and the scene is thought to be "from the wilderness south, to Lebanon on the north; and from the Euphrates, east, to the great sea, west;" an extent of country which, however, the Israelites do not appear to have possessed before the time of David. (2 Sam. viii. 3; 2 Chron. ix. 26.) Of their enemies, the Hittites are particularly mentioned, as inhabiting the mountains on the south side of Canaan, and perhaps the most brave and hardy of all the Canaanites: of these, however, it was promised not a man should be able to stand before Joshua, if he would but strengthen himself in the Lord his God.

The two tribes and a half which had settled on the outside

CHAP. I. Ver. 10. Commanded the officers.—[The shoterim, or officers, were different from the shophetim, who were the judges among the people. The shoterim have been supposed to be subordinate officers, whose business it was to see the decisions of the shophetim carried into effect. Calmet conjectures, that the shoterim here may have been the heralds of the army, like those so often met with in Homer, who were called the messengers both of the gods of Jordan, are here reminded of their engagement with Moses; (Numb. xxxii. 20—28,) and promise not only to fulfil that, but in all cases to obey the commands of Joshua, in which they were probably joined by the other tribes; and whoever disobeyed, or mutinied, was to be put to death, as is usual under martial law.

But the most interesting part of this chapter, is the injunction laid on Joshua to study the law of God for his direction. "This book shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate in it by day and by night, that thou mayest observe to do all that is written therein; for then shalt thou make thy way prosperous, and then shalt thou have good success." On this passage we make remarks, 1. That if the five books of Moses were thus interesting and valuable, how much more the whole Scriptures, with which we are favoured. 2. The and men; who bore sceptres; and whose persons were sacred.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Prepare you victuals.—Or provisions, for three days' march. This injunction was perhaps not given till after the return of the spies from Jericho.

Ver. 14. Armed.—Hebrew, "marshalled by five," the number which probably marched abreast but it implies military array.

15 Until the LORD have given your brethren rest, as he hath given you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them: then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and enjoy it, which Moses the LORD's servant gave you on this side Jordan toward the sun-rising.

16 ¶ And they answered Joshua, saying, ' All that thou commandest us, we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us, we will go.

17 According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee: only the LORD thy God be with thee, as <sup>a</sup> he was with Moses.

18 Whosoever he be that doth rebel against thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death: " only be strong and of a good courage.

CHAPTER II.

1 Rahab receiveth and concealeth the two spies sent from Shittim. 8 The covenant between her and them. 23 Their return and relation.

AND Joshua the son of <sup>a</sup> Nun sent out of Shittim two men to <sup>b</sup> spy secretly, saying, Go view the land, even Jericho. And they went, and came into a harlot's house, named <sup>c</sup> Rahab, and <sup>d</sup> lodged there.

2 And it was told the king of Jericho, saying, Behold, there came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel, to search out the country.

3 And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, saying, Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entered into thy house: for they be come to search out all the country.

4 And <sup>e</sup> the woman took the two men, and hid them, and said thus, There came men unto me, but I wist not whence they were:

5 And it came to pass about the time of shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out: whither the men went, I wot not: pursue after them quickly; for ye shall overtake them.

6 But <sup>f</sup> she had brought them up to the roof of the house, and hid them with the stalks of flax, which she had laid in order upon the roof.

7 And the men pursued after them the way to Jordan unto the fords: and as soon as they which pursued after them were gone out, they shut the gate.

8 ¶ And before they were laid down, she came up unto them upon the roof;

9 And she said unto the men, I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your <sup>e</sup> terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land <sup>h</sup> faint because of you.

10 For we have heard how the LORD <sup>i</sup> dried up the water of the Red sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt; and <sup>j</sup> what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites, that <sup>k</sup> were on the other side Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed.

11 And as soon as we had heard <sup>l</sup> these things, our <sup>m</sup> hearts did melt, <sup>n</sup> neither did there remain any more courage in any man, because of you: for <sup>o</sup> the LORD your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath.

12 Now therefore, I pray you, swear unto me by the LORD, since I <sup>p</sup> have showed you kindness, that ye will also show kindness unto my <sup>q</sup> father's house, and give me a true <sup>r</sup> token:

13 And <sup>s</sup> that ye will save alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death.

14 And the men answered her, Our <sup>t</sup> life for yours, if ye utter not this our business. And it shall be, when the LORD hath given us the land, that we will deal <sup>u</sup> kindly and truly with thee.

15 Then she <sup>v</sup> let them down by a cord through the window: for her house <sup>w</sup> was upon the town-wall, and she dwelt upon the wall.

16 And she said unto them, Get you to the mountain, lest the pursuers meet you; and hide yourselves there three days, until the pursuers be returned: and afterward may ye go your way.

17 And the men said unto her, We <sup>x</sup> will be <sup>y</sup> blameless of this thine oath which thou hast made us swear.

18 Behold, <sup>z</sup> when we come into the land, thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window which thou didst let us down by:

Bible is important to all ranks and classes, even to military men, and we are happy to find that there are some who duly estimate its excellency, both in our army and our navy. 3. That where the word of God is properly appreciated, it will give a relish to our converse: <sup>a</sup> and it will be in our mouth. 4. That the Scriptures are not only to be read, but they must form the grand theme of our meditations, both by day and night. 5. That this is the way to prosperity in all our undertakings.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—24. Rahab entertains the spies, and secretes them.—There is no doubt but Rahab kept a house of entertainment for travellers; and probably she had likewise been a woman of loose character, a harlot, as such persons among the heathen often were; at this time, however, she seems to have been under serious impressions, and a believer in the God of Israel, as we may infer from her own confession, as well as from the assurance of the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. (Chap. xi. 31.) This led her to consider it her duty to conceal the spies sent to Jericho, even at the expense of truth: and those who know how often Christians have been tempted to make the same sacrifice, will not wonder that a heathen, who had so recently known the name of Jehovah, and perhaps had never heard of such a precept as, "Thou shalt not bear false witness," should have been tempted to "do evil that good might come." The example of this ignorant woman, however, but justly convicted of the evil of idolatry, and that the God of Israel was the only true God, ought never to be pleaded in excuse by any person educated in the truths of Christianity: and who is there that could plead, as she might, that she did it to save not only the lives of the spies, but the lives of her parents, and of all her father's house? Nothing but infidel perversity can draw from such an extraordinary fact an apology for lying, for which certainly we can have no excuse.

"Dare to be true: nothing can need a lie;

The fault that needs it most grows two thereby."

G. Herbert.

The spies were saved by being let down by a scarlet line, (probably the line that fastened her window-curtain,) and some ancient writers who are fond of allegory, have supposed this typical of salvation by the blood of Christ; but this seems rather fanciful than solid, though it certainly admits of a very ingenious interpretation, corresponding, in some respects, to the blood of the paschal lamb, that was placed upon the door-post of every Israelite, by way of protection, when the destroying angel was passing through Egypt. Such allusions

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. A harlot's house.—"Some pretend, that in Joshua, &c. where Rahab is spoken of, the word should be interpreted a hostess; but the LXX. in all those places, render it (porne) a harlot, and so St. Paul and St. James. (Heb. xi. 31; James ii. 25.) Indeed nothing more may be intended by the epithet, than that she had formerly been so."—Parkehurst. Admitting this, however, it does not follow that she was not a hostess. Buchanan says, "Among the ancients, women generally kept houses of entertainment," particularly "among the Egyptians."

Ver. 3. The king of Jericho sent.—"Keeping a house of entertainment, the persons under her roof were sacred, according to the universal custom of the Asiatics, and could not be molested on any trifling grounds."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 6. With the stalks of flax.—As Rahab appears to have been a person of some substance, it is probable she reared flax, and dried it on the top of her house, (all the houses having flat roofs,) and there being a considerable quantity of it, the spies were easily concealed. Flax stalks were probably dried to burn. See Harmer's Observations.

Ver. 13. Save alive, &c.—[It is observable that in this enumeration of her kindred, there is no mention made of a husband. It is most likely that she was a single woman or a widow, who obtained an honest livelihood by keeping a house for the entertainment of strangers; and not a woman of ill fame, as some have supposed. The spies sent on this occasion were certainly some of the most confidential persons that Joshua had in his host, and their errand was of the greatest importance; it is then not most likely that they lodged at an inn?—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Upon the wall.—Or, "above the wall," and having a window (or Kiosk) that looked over the surrounding country, she was hence enabled to afford the spies means of escape. Probably her house was close against the wall, for had it been built on it, it must have fell with it.

Ver. 18. This line of scarlet thread.—In the first epistle inscribed to Clement Romanus, the companion of St. Paul, this circumstance is explained as "Showing that by the blood of our Lord, there should be redemption to all that believe and hope in God."

and thou shalt bring thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy father's household home unto thee.

19 And it shall be, that whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we will be guiltless: and whosoever shall be with thee in the house, his blood shall be on our head, if any hand be upon him.

20 And if thou utter this our business, then we will be quit of thine oath which thou hast made us to swear.

21 And she said, According unto your words, so be it. And she sent them away, and they departed: and she bound the scarlet line in the window.

22 And they went, and came unto the mountain, and abode there three days, until the pursuers were returned: and the pursuers sought them throughout all the way, but found them not.

23 ¶ So the two men returned, and descended from the mountain, and passed over, and came to Joshua the son of Nun, and told him all things that befell them:

24 And they said unto Joshua, Truly the Lord hath delivered into our hands all the land; for even all the inhabitants of the country do faint because of us.

CHAPTER III.

1 Joshua cometh to Jordan. 2 The officers instruct the people for the passage. 7 The Lord encourageth Joshua. 9 Joshua encourageth the people. 14 The waters of Jordan are divided.

AND Joshua rose early in the morning; and they removed from Shittim, and came to Jordan, he and all the children of Israel, and lodged there before they passed over.

2 ¶ And it came to pass after three days, that the officers went through the host;

3 And they commanded the people, saying, When ye see the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, and the priests the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place, and go after it.

may sometimes afford beautiful illustrations, but must never be drawn into arguments; nor are they needed.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—17. Israel pass over Jordan, being preceded by the ark.—Archbishop Usher fixes the date of this event on the 28th of April, in the year of the world 2553, being the fortieth year after the Exodus. The ark was to pass on about three quarters of a mile before the people, in order to render the miracle of passing the river more conspicuous and decided. For the same reason, the time of the river overflowing was fixed upon for the passage, that it might not be pretended to have been a natural event.

But it may be said, Why did not the Canaanites oppose their passage? In the first place, if they heard of the attempt, it would be likely to provoke their ridicule; and when they saw the miracle, they would naturally be intimidated and terrified, as it appears (by the account of Rahab) was the case with the inhabitants of Jericho, who had heard of the passage of the Red sea, and would not be willing to risk the same destruction as Pharaoh and his host met with on that occasion. The primary object of this miraculous passage was, to convince both the people of Israel and their enemies, that JEHOVAH, their God, was with Joshua, as he had been with Moses; that the one might be animated with courage and with confidence, and the other intimidated in opposing them.

The New Testament authorizes us to consider Canaan as a type of heaven, though, like all other types, very inferior to the antitype, even as Joshua to our Saviour Jesus. Canaan was,

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Jordan.—[Jordan, called by the Arabs El Sharia, takes its rise in Anti-Libanus, about twelve miles north of Casarea Philippi, now Bania; and, having run about twelve miles southward, it receives a considerable stream, which is now called the Motet Hasbeia. About 15 miles farther, it forms the waters of Merom or Semechon, now Houle; and, after running about 28 miles more, it passes through the lake of Gennesareth, and thence runs southward till it loses itself in the Dead sea; its whole course being about 160 miles.]—Bastier.

Ver. 3. When ye see the ark.—In all other cases, the ark was to move in the centre of the camp, (as shown in the Plate,) but now it was to move before them, at the distance of 2000 cubits, or nearly three quarters of a mile, that the whole camp might view it as their guide.

Ver. 4. The priests bearing it.—This office belonged in general to the Levites of the family of Kohath, Numb. iv. 15, but on this and some other special occasions, the priests were commanded to bear it, probably for the greater solemnity.

4 Yet there shall be a space between you and it, about two thousand cubits by measure: come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye must go; for ye have not passed this way heretofore.

5 ¶ And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves: for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you.

6 And Joshua spake unto the priests, saying, Take up the ark of the covenant, and pass over before the people. And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people.

7 ¶ And the Lord said unto Joshua, This day will I begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel, that they may know that as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee.

8 And thou shalt command the priests that bear the ark of the covenant, saying, When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, ye shall stand still in Jordan.

9 ¶ And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, Come hither, and hear the words of the Lord your God.

10 And Joshua said, Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Jebusites.

11 Behold, the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan.

12 Now therefore take you twelve men out of the tribes of Israel, out of every tribe a man.

13 And it shall come to pass, as soon as the soles of the feet of the priests that bear the ark of the Lord, the Lord of all the earth, shall rest in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan shall be cut off from the waters that come down from above; and they shall stand upon a heap.

14 ¶ And it came to pass, when the people indeed, vastly superior, as a residence, to the wilderness through which they had passed, and afforded more permanent supplies; still, however, it was a country of but very partial rest. There were difficulties to be surmounted, and enemies to be subdued, in which respects it corresponded more with our present imperfect state than with that heavenly country where sin and sorrow can never enter. There is, however, a striking correspondence between the passage of Israel over Jordan, and that of the Christian believer through the valley of the shades of death. Joshua, no doubt, as well as Moses, and probably others of the elders of Israel, surveyed the promised land before they passed over to it; and on their passage through the Jordan, were animated and encouraged by the divine presence, which always accompanied the ark that now went before them, and occasioned the waters to retire both on one side and on the other. Thus the Christian, animated by faith, and encouraged by the divine presence, may enter the stream without fear, and pass it in triumph; or should his faith waver, and his courage fail, his passage is no less secure under his divine Leader, and his arrival no less certain.

"O could we make our doubts remove,

And see the Canaan that we love
With unobscured eyes!

Could we but climb where Moses stood,

Ver. 8. Ye shall stand still in Jordan.—When the priests first entered the bed of the river, its course was immediately arrested, the waters collecting in a heap above the place where the priests stood, while the lower waters ran off rapidly into the Dead sea, leaving the channel dry, to the extent of several miles, while the people passed safely over, to the number of 600,000 men, besides women and children.

Ver. 10. The Canaanites, &c.—Those called Canaanites chiefly inhabited what is called Phenicia, the environs of Tyre and Sidon; the Hittites occupied the mountains south of the promised land; the Hivites dwelt by Elai and Gerizim, Sichem and Gibeon, towards the mountains of Hermon. The Perizzites were probably not a distinct nation or tribe, but rather villagers scattered through the country. The Girgashites possessed the country beyond the Jordan, toward the lake of Gennesareth. The Jebusites possessed Jerusalem. The Amorites occupied the mountainous country in the vicinity of the western part of the Dead sea; also that part of the land of Moab, which the Israelites conquered from Sihon and Og.—Calmet and Clarke.

removed from their tents, to pass over Jordan, and the priests bearing the ark of the covenant before the people;

16 That the waters which came down from above stood and rose up upon a heap very far from the city Adam, that is beside Zarethan, and those that came down toward the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, failed, and were cut off: and the people passed over right against Jericho.

17 And the priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan, and all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Twelve stones taken for a memorial out of Jordan. 9 Twelve other stones are set up in the midst of Jordan. 10, 19 The people pass over. 14 God magnifieth Joshua.

AND it came to pass, when all the people were clean passed over Jordan, that the Lord spake unto Joshua, saying,

2 Take you twelve men out of the people, out of every tribe a man,

3 And command ye them, saying, Take you hence out of the midst of Jordan, out of the place where the priests' feet stood firm, twelve stones, and ye shall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging-place where ye shall lodge this night.

4 Then Joshua called the twelve men, whom he had prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man:

5 And Joshua said unto them, Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God into the midst of Jordan, and take you up every man of you a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel:

6 That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean ye by these stones?

7 Then ye shall answer them, That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord; when it passed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off: and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel for ever.

8 And the children of Israel did so as Joshua commanded, and took up twelve stones out of the midst of Jordan, as the Lord spake unto Joshua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there.

9 ¶ And Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests which bare the ark of the covenant stood: and they are there unto this day.

10 ¶ For the priests which bare the ark stood in the midst of Jordan, until every thing was finished that the Lord commanded Joshua to speak unto the people, according to that that Moses commanded Joshua; and the people hastened and passed over.

11 And it came to pass, when all the people were clean passed over, that the ark of the Lord passed over, and the priests in the presence of the people.

12 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh, passed over armed before the children of Israel, as Moses spake unto them:

13 About forty thousand prepared for war passed over before the Lord unto battle, to the plains of Jericho.

14 ¶ On that day the Lord magnified Joshua in the sight of all Israel; and they feared him as they feared Moses, all the days of his life.

15 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Joshua, saying, 16 Command the priests that bear the ark of the testimony, that they come up out of Jordan.

17 Joshua therefore commanded the priests, saying, Come ye up out of Jordan.

18 And it came to pass, when the priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord were come up out of the midst of Jordan, and the soles of the priests' feet were lifted

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—24. A memorial erected of this passage of the Jordan.—In order to this, twelve picked men, one of each tribe, are commanded to bring up twelve stones out of the bed of the river, in order to erect a monument of this stupendous miracle, in the very spot where the ark rested, and twelve other stones, to erect a second monument in the spot where they encamped after passing over, and which was afterwards called Gilgal. (Chap. v. 8.) These stones were all, probably, of considerable size, as large as a strong man could carry. Those stones, both in the river and at Gilgal, were probably so cemented together as to form a lofty monument of this event.

The first observation that here offers itself is, the punctuality of the divine appointments. Israel, we read, left Egypt on the 15th day of the first month, (Abib) A. M. 2513, and actually entered Canaan on the 10th of the same month, in Ver. 15. Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest.—This is what was called the swelling of Jordan. (Jer. xii. 5.) The ordinary current of the Jordan, near where the Israelites crossed, is said, by Maundrell, to be about 20 yards deeper than a man's height, and so rapid, as there is no swimming against it. It has, however, two banks; the first, or inner one, is that of the river in its natural state, and the second, or outer one, about a furlong distant, is that of its overflows, which it does when the summer's sun has melted the snow on mount Lebanon and Hermon, in the months of March and April. And this was the time which God chose that the Israelites should pass over it; that a miraculous interposition might be necessary; and that by the miracle, they might be convinced of his omnipotence. —Bagster.

Ver. 16. The city of Adam, beside Zarethan.—The city Adam is wholly unknown.—Of Zarethan, see 1 Kings iv. 12; vii. 46.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 17. On dry ground.—“There are two obvious natural causes,” says Kings, “by which the effect here described might be produced; though most certainly the bringing either one or both of them to act, on the precise occasion, and so very powerfully, could only be the immediate command of God, the great Creator of all powers in nature. The one might be an earthquake. The other cause might be a strong south, or south-west wind, which might drive back, and retard the flowing of the waters above Jericho; whilst those below more easily found their way to the Dead sea, and left a fordable passage at the appointed place. Either or both these causes might operate. We are by no means without experience of instances of such natural causes sometimes producing similar effects, in what is called the natural course of things. We find on record, that in the year 1645, there arose, in the morning, a furious wind at Geneva, that it laid dry the bed of the impetuous Rhone above the bridge; inasmuch that many crossed quite over it dry, on foot; and the son of M. D'Aubigny even picked up some ancient medals therein; the passage continuing free during an hour's time.” —Bagster. But how could a body of men, requiring at least a space of 12 miles for their accommodation, with confidence pass over Jordan, on “dry ground,” as easy and some palpable miracle was wrought. Besides, a direct miracle is as easy and satisfactory a solution as such an unpreceded operation of natural causes.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 9. Twelve stones.—That is, “Twelve (other) stones,” different from those mentioned in ver. 3.—[These words might be written by Joshua at the close of his life, or perhaps be added by some later prophet. It seems from this verse, that there were two sorts of stones erected as a memorial of this great event: twelve at Gilgal, (v. 20.), and twelve in the bed of the Jordan; which last might have been placed on a base of strong stone work, so high as always to be visible, and serve to mark the very spot where the priests stood with the ark. Drs. Kennicott and Shackford, however, would read here with the Syriac, mittoch, “from the midst,” instead of bethoch, “in the midst;” and render, “And Joshua set up the twelve stones (taken) from the midst of Jordan,” &c. But this reading is unsupported by any MS. yet collated; and it appears wholly unnecessary. —Bagster.

Ver. 10. The people hastened and passed over.—This does not imply fear, as some suppose, but was highly necessary, considering the vast multitude, with all their tents and baggage, to pass over in one day.

up unto the dry land, that the waters of Jordan returned unto their place, and <sup>a</sup>flowed <sup>a</sup>over all his banks, as they did before.

19 ¶ And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped in Gilgal, in the east border of Jericho.

20 ¶ And <sup>a</sup>those twelve stones which they took out of Jordan, did Joshua pitch in Gilgal.

22 Then <sup>a</sup>ye shall let your children know, saying, Israel <sup>a</sup>came over this Jordan on dry land.

23 For the LORD your God dried up the waters of Jordan before you, until <sup>a</sup>ye were passed over, as the LORD your God <sup>a</sup>did to the Red sea, which he dried up from before us, until we were gone over:

24 That <sup>a</sup>all the people of the earth might know the hand of the LORD, that it is mighty: that ye might fear the LORD your God <sup>a</sup>for ever.

CHAPTER V.

1 The Canaanites are afraid. 2 Joshua reneweth circumcision. 10 The passover is kept at Gilgal. 12 Manna ceaseth. 13 An angel appeareth to Joshua.

AND it came to pass, when all the kings of the Amorites, which were on the side of Jordan westward, and all the kings of the Canaanites <sup>a</sup>which were by the sea, <sup>b</sup>heard that the LORD had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Israel, until we were passed over, that <sup>a</sup>their heart melted; neither was there <sup>d</sup>spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel.

2 ¶ At that time the LORD said unto Joshua, Make thee sharp <sup>a</sup>knives, and circumcise again the children of Israel the second time.

3 And Joshua made him sharp knives, and circumcised the children of Israel at <sup>a</sup>the hill of the foreskins.

4 And this is the cause why Joshua did circumcise: All <sup>a</sup>the people that came out of Egypt, that were males, even all the men of war, died in the wilderness by the way, after they came out of Egypt.

5 Now all the people that came out were circumcised; but all the people that were born in the wilderness by the way as they came us of our mercies. Truth and gratitude are best written on the heart, but better recorded in a book or on a stone, than neglected or forgotten; and not only should we remember them ourselves, but be careful to teach them to our children.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—15. Israel are again circumcised, and eat the passover.—The effect which we have anticipated, as to the alarm and terror which this miraculous passage through Jordan would occasion to the Canaanites, we see took place; "their hearts melted," that is, with fear and terror, immediately as they heard of it. A pause in the military narrative, however, occurs here, while the children of Israel celebrate their two great sacraments, circumcision and the passover. There is no circumstance, in their view of which the Asiatics and Europeans are more divided, than that of circumcision, which certainly suggests ideas very repugnant to European notions of delicacy, while the contrary raises in the mind of a Mussulman contempt, and even abhorrence; and a man uncircumcised, is with them no better than a dog.

The rite itself was certainly divine, and indispensable to all

Ver. 19. Gilgal.—[That is, the place afterwards called Gilgal; for it is so called here by anticipation. It was about ten furlongs east from Jericho, and fifty west from the Jordan. See Josephus and Cabnet.]—Begister.

Ver. 24. All the people of the earth.—Hebrew, "Of this land;" i. e. of the land of Canaan. The original (arets) meaning land as well as earth, often occasions ambiguity, as in this place.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Until now.—Above thirty MSS., six editions, both Talmuds, and all the ancient versions, read "Until they,"—De Rossi.

Ver. 2. Sharp knives.—Margin, "Knives of flint." Such knives were once in general use among the ancients, and there is a tradition that no others might be used for this purpose, Exod. iv. 25. The Egyptians also, according to Herodotus, used such only for embalming. Ludolf mentions a tribe of Ethiopians which to his time used no other than knives of stone for circumcision; and perhaps the use of an iron tool in any sacred work was not permitted. See Ex. xxv. De. xxvii. 5. [Before the use of iron was common, our ancestors had their arrows and spearheads made of flint; which are frequently turned up by the plough.]—Begister.

forth out of Egypt, them they had not circumcised.

6 For the children of Israel walked <sup>a</sup>forty years in the wilderness, till all the people that were men of war which came out of Egypt were consumed, because they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: unto <sup>a</sup>whom the LORD swore that he would not show them the land which the LORD swore unto their fathers that he would give us, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

7 And their <sup>a</sup>children, whom he raised up in their stead, them Joshua circumcised: for they were uncircumcised, because they had not circumcised them by the way.

8 And it came to pass, when <sup>a</sup>they had done circumcising all the people, that they abode in their places in the camp, till they were whole.

9 And the LORD said unto Joshua, This day have I rolled away the <sup>a</sup>reproach of <sup>a</sup>Egypt from off you. Wherefore the name of the place is called <sup>a</sup>Gilgal unto this day.

10 ¶ And <sup>a</sup>the children of Israel encamped in Gilgal, and kept the passover on the <sup>a</sup>fourteenth day of the month at even in the plains of Jericho.

11 And they did eat of the old corn of the land on the morrow after the passover, unleavened cakes and parched corn in the self-same day.

12 ¶ And the <sup>a</sup>manna ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land; neither had the children of Israel manna any <sup>a</sup>more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

13 ¶ And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold, there stood a man <sup>a</sup>over against him with his <sup>a</sup>sword drawn in his hand: and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?

14 And he said, Nay; but as <sup>a</sup>captain of the host of the LORD am I now come. And Joshua <sup>a</sup>fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and said unto him, What <sup>a</sup>saith my lord unto his servant?

15 And the captain of the LORD's host said unto Joshua, <sup>a</sup>Loose thy shoe from off thy the seed of Abraham: but if so, how came it to be neglected in the wilderness? Much must be attributed to the perverseness of that generation; but this alone seems insufficient to account for it. Some have supposed it to have been dispensed with there, as not necessary to distinguish them from other nations; but that was not the only reason of the institution—it was a seal of God's covenant with Abraham. As, however, the fact only is recorded, and not the cause of it, we must be content to leave this among many other matters not revealed, and with which, therefore, we have no concern. There was probably a general performance of this rite previous to the first passover; and the like is here ordered previous to the first passover celebrated in the land of Canaan. By this means "the reproach of Egypt," uncircumcision, was rolled away, and the place of its performance was called Gilgal.

On the morrow after the passover, they began to eat of the old corn of the land, made into unleavened cakes; and also, on the self-same day, of new corn parched, which must have been barley, as no other grain was yet ripe. No sooner were

Ver. 6. Give us.—Several MSS. and ancient versions read, "Give them," to correspond with "they," in ver. 1.—De Rossi.

Ver. 10. Day of the month.—Many MSS. and some editions read, "of the first month," which, indeed, is generally understood; but, on account of the recent performance of circumcision, Harmer thinks the passover might have been kept in the second month, which in some cases was allowable.

Ver. 14. Nay.—Many MSS. read, by the variation of a letter, "to him," i. e. the angel said to Joshua.

Ver. 15. Joshua did so.—[There is scarcely a more unfortunate division of chapters than this; through which very circumstance, many persons have been puzzled to know what was intended by this extraordinary appearance of the angel to Joshua, because they supposed that the whole business ended with the chapter; whereas it is continued in the succeeding one, the first verse of which is a mere parenthesis, simply relating to the state of Jericho at the time when Joshua was favoured with this encouraging vision; by which he was shown that their help came from God alone; and that it was not by human might or power, but by the Lord of hosts they were to obtain the victory.]—B foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Jericho is shut up. 2 God instructeth Joshua how to besiege it. 20 The walls fall down. 22 Rahab is saved.

NOW <sup>a</sup>Jericho was straitly shut up because of the children of Israel: none went out, and none came in.

2 And the LORD said unto Joshua, See, <sup>b</sup>I have given into thy hand Jericho, and the <sup>c</sup>king thereof, and the mighty men of valour.

3 And ye shall compass the city, all <sup>d</sup>ye men of war, and go round about the city once: thus shalt thou do six days.

4 And seven priests shall bear before the ark seven <sup>e</sup>trumpets of rams' horns: and the seventh day ye shall compass the city seven times, and the <sup>f</sup>priests shall blow with the trumpets.

5 And it shall come to pass, that <sup>g</sup>when they make a long blast with the ram's horn, and when ye hear the sound of the trumpet, all the people shall shout with a great <sup>h</sup>shout; and the wall of the city shall fall down <sup>i</sup>flat, and the people shall ascend up every man straight before him.

6 ¶ And Joshua the son of Nun called the priests, and said unto them, <sup>j</sup>Take up the ark of the covenant, and let seven priests bear seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD.

7 And he said unto the people, Pass on, and compass the city, and let him that is armed pass on before the ark of the LORD.

8 ¶ And it came to pass, when Joshua had spoken unto the people, that the seven priests bearing the seven trumpets of rams' horns passed on before the LORD, and blew with the trumpets: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them.

9 And the armed men went before the priests that blew with the trumpets, and the <sup>k</sup>rere-ward <sup>l</sup>came after the ark, the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

10 And Joshua had commanded the people, saying, Ye shall not shout, nor make <sup>m</sup>any noise with your voice, neither shall <sup>n</sup>any word proceed out of your mouth, until the day I bid you shout; then shall ye shout.

11 So the ark of the LORD compassed the city, going about <sup>o</sup>it once: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp.

they supplied with this, than their daily portion of manna ceased, and probably all other miraculous supplies; an incident thus calculated to teach, that we are not to tempt God by requiring miracles, when they are no longer necessary.

A circumstance occurs in the close of this chapter, much too important to be passed over. It was another appearance of the great Captain and prince of Israel, the angel of the everlasting Covenant, in order to encourage and direct Joshua in the arduous campaign on which he was about to enter. It should perhaps be recollected here, that Joshua was not privileged, like Moses, to enter into the most holy place to inquire of the Lord, but could only do so through the medium of Eleazar the high priest. But to show how eminently he was favoured, the Lord himself here appears to him, in an angelic form, to give him encouragement and direction in the siege of Jericho, though by a most unhappy division of this chapter, infidels have represented the object of the vision as ridiculous:—as only directing him to pull off his shoes. In the next chapter, however, we shall find the vision continued, and the Jewish leader directed how he shall proceed.

Ver. 5. Shall fall down flat.—[The words ucanaphelah chomath hair tach-reyha, are literally, "and the wall of the city shall fall down under itself," which appears simply to mean, that the wall shall fall down from its very foundation; which was probably the case, in every part, though large breaches 12 And Joshua rose early in the morning, and the priests took <sup>a</sup>up the ark of the LORD.

13 And seven priests bearing seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD went on continually, and blew with the trumpets: and the armed men went before them; but the rere-ward came after the ark of the LORD, the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

14 And the second day they compassed the city once, and returned into the camp. So they did six days.

15 And it came to pass on the <sup>b</sup>seventh day, that they rose early about the dawning of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner seven times: only on that day they compassed the city seven times.

16 And it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, <sup>c</sup>Shout; for the LORD hath given you the city.

17 ¶ And the city shall be <sup>d</sup>accursed, even it, and all that <sup>e</sup>are therein, to the LORD: only Rahab the harlot shall live, she and all that <sup>f</sup>are with her in the house, because she <sup>g</sup>hid the messengers that we sent.

18 And ye, in any wise keep <sup>h</sup>yourself from the accursed thing, lest ye make <sup>i</sup>yourself accursed, when ye take of the accursed thing, and make the camp of Israel a curse, and <sup>j</sup>trouble it.

19 But all the silver, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, <sup>k</sup>are <sup>l</sup>consecrated unto the LORD: they shall come into the <sup>m</sup>treasury of the LORD.

20 So the people shouted when the priests blew with the trumpets: and it came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that the <sup>n</sup>wall fell down <sup>o</sup>flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city.

21 And they <sup>p</sup>utterly destroyed all that <sup>q</sup>was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox, and sheep, and ass, with the edge of the sword.

22 ¶ But Joshua had said unto the two men that had spied out the country, Go into the harlot's house, and bring out thence the woman, and all that she hath, as ye <sup>r</sup>sware unto her.

pletely blockaded by the Israelites. Joshua, however, was not commanded to raise any military works against it, but to surround the city by a procession of priests, as much calculated to excite the ridicule of its Pagan inhabitants, as was the conduct of Noah to provoke that of the inhabitants of the old world. The ark was to be carried seven days round, with the sound of the Jubilee trumpets, and the last time to be accompanied with a shout from the whole army, at which shout the walls of Jericho, which appear to have been the whole hope and confidence of the inhabitants, fell down flat before the invaders.

The destruction which followed, is only to be justified by the command of heaven; and the authority of that command is proved by the miracle that accompanied it. Had the earth opened and swallowed up the city, none but an atheist would have dared to murmur; as it is, the power of God being no less conspicuous, and his authority the same, we murmur at our peril. The Supreme Being owes no account of his actions to the highest of his creatures, much less to "worms of the dust," as we are.

We should not here omit to notice the good faith that was kept with Rahab, the harlot, who was saved, with all her in different places might, have been amply sufficient first to admit the armed men, after whom the host might enter to destroy the city. There is no ground for the supposition, that the walls sunk into the earth.

Ver. 9. And the armed men.—That is, a considerable detachment, probably the forty thousand mentioned ch. iv. 13.

Ver. 21. Utterly destroyed.—In all public calamities infants are involved; and tens of thousands of infants die in great agony every year. Now, either God is not the agent in these calamities, (which opinion, though often implied in men's reasonings on these subjects, is not far from atheism;) or they must consist with the most perfect justice and goodness. —Bagster

23 And the young men that were spies went in, and brought out Rahab, and <sup>a</sup>her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had; and they brought out all her <sup>b</sup>kindred, and left them without the camp of Israel.

24 And they <sup>c</sup>burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: only the <sup>d</sup>silver, and the gold, and the vessels of brass and of iron, they put into the treasury of the house of the LORD.

25 And Joshua saved <sup>e</sup>Rahab the harlot alive, and her father's household, and all that she had; and she dwelleth in <sup>f</sup>Israel even unto this day; because <sup>g</sup>she hid the messengers which Joshua sent to spy out Jericho.

26 ¶ And Joshua adjured them at that time, saying, <sup>h</sup>Cursed be the man before the LORD, that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it.

27 So the LORD was with <sup>i</sup>Joshua; and his fame was noised throughout all the country.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The Israelites are smitten at Ai. 6 Joshua's complaint. 10 God instructeth him what to do. 18 Achan is taken by lot: 20 his confession: 25 he and all he had are destroyed in the valley of Achor.

BUT the children of Israel committed a <sup>a</sup>trespass in the accursed thing: for <sup>b</sup>Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of <sup>c</sup>Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of the accursed thing: and the anger of the LORD was kindled against the children of Israel.

2 And Joshua sent men from Jericho to Ai, which is beside Beth-aven, on the east side of Beth-el, and spake unto them, saying, Go up and view the country. And the men went up and viewed Ai.

3 And they returned to Joshua, and said unto him, Let not all the people go up; but let <sup>d</sup>about two or three thousand men go up and smite Ai: and make not all the people to labour thither: for they are but few.

4 So there went up thither of the people about three thousand men: and they <sup>e</sup>fled before the men of Ai.

5 And the men of Ai smote of them about thirty and six men: for they <sup>f</sup>chased them from before the gate even unto Shebarim, and smote them <sup>g</sup>in the going down: wherefore the hearts of the people <sup>h</sup>melted, and became as <sup>i</sup>water.

6 ¶ And Joshua <sup>j</sup>rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the LORD until the even-tide, he and the elders of Israel, and put <sup>a</sup>dust upon their heads.

7 And Joshua said, Alas! O Lord God, <sup>b</sup>wherefore hast thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us? would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other side Jordan!

8 O Lord, <sup>c</sup>what shall I say, when Israel turneth their <sup>d</sup>backs before their enemies!

9 For <sup>e</sup>the Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land shall hear <sup>f</sup>of it, and shall environ us round, and cut <sup>g</sup>off our name from the earth: and what wilt thou do unto thy great <sup>h</sup>name?

10 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, Get thee up; <sup>i</sup>wherefore <sup>j</sup>liest thou thus upon thy face?

11 Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I <sup>k</sup>commanded them: for they have even <sup>l</sup>taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and <sup>m</sup>dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff.

12 Therefore <sup>n</sup>the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned <sup>o</sup>their backs before their enemies, because they were <sup>p</sup>accursed: neither will I be with you any more, except ye destroy the accursed from among you.

13 Up, sanctify the people, and say, Sanctify <sup>q</sup>yourselves against to-morrow: for thus saith the LORD God of Israel, There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you.

14 In the morning therefore ye shall be brought <sup>r</sup>according to your tribes: and it shall be, that the tribe which the <sup>s</sup>LORD taketh shall come according to the families <sup>t</sup>thereof; and the family which the LORD shall take shall come by households; and the household which the LORD shall take shall come man by man.

15 And it shall be, that he that is taken with the accursed thing shall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath: because he hath transgressed the covenant of the LORD, and because he hath wrought <sup>u</sup>a folly in <sup>v</sup>Israel.

16 ¶ So Joshua rose up early in the morning, and brought Israel by their tribes; and the tribe of Judah was taken:

family; and thus was her kindness to the spies rewarded; indeed, neither under the Old Testament nor the New, does the Lord suffer any kindness to his people, though it were but "a cup of cold water," to go unremunerated. On the other hand, a curse is imprecated on those who should attempt to counteract the designs of God, by rebuilding that which he had devoted to destruction. But the purport of this execration seems rather to have been misunderstood. Jericho was a strong fortified town; its walls and gates were destroyed by miracle, and the imprecation laid on those who should rebuild them, which had been the glory of the city, and set up its gates, in which the people had hitherto trusted. This curse fell upon Hiel, in the days of Ahab, as we shall see, 1 Kings xvi. 34. In the meantime, it is thought (though not certain) that the place was occupied as an open unwall'd town, and called "the city of palm trees," as it had been formerly. (Compare Deut. xxxiv. 3, Judges i. 16.)

The inference from this important conquest was, that "the Lord was with Joshua;" and it is indeed well when our successes are of that nature as to prove that the blessing and presence of the Lord is with us.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—26. The sin and punishment of Achan.—We read in the preceding chapter, that Israel had burnt the city; but there was one man who had done "the work of the Lord deceitfully." He is not charged with pity in sparing the inhabitants; but he coveted a Babylonish garment and a wedge of gold; and as the latter was devoted to the Lord, he was guilty of sacrilege also, which exposed him to the severest Ver. 23. Left them without the camp.—That is, as unclean, till the rites of proselytism were gone through, and the males circumcised.

Ver. 26. Joshua adjured them.—[This is apparently a strange execration; but it may be regarded as a predication, that he who rebuild'd this city should lose all his children in the interim between the laying of the foundation to the completion of the walls. Such execrations were not infrequent in ancient times. Strabo says, "It is believed, that those who might have afterwards wished to build Ilium, were deterred from building the city in the same place, either by what they had suffered there, or because Agamemnon had pronounced a curse against him that should rebuild it: for this was an ancient custom." Thus Croesus, after he had destroyed Sidonia, into which the tyrant Glaucias had then himself, uttered a curse upon him who should rebuild the walls of that place."—Boscher.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Achan.—Or "Achar." So the word is spelt, not only in 1 Chron. ii. 7. but even in the last verse of this chapter it is spelt Achor. Such variations often occur in Hebrew names, and even among ourselves.

Ver. 5. In the going down.—Namely, of the sun; or "in Morad," making the word a proper name, as in our margin.

Ver. 6. Dust upon their heads.—[Rending the clothes, beating the breast, tearing the hair, throwing dust upon the head, and falling prostrate, were usual signs of deep affliction and distress among many ancient nations. Homer describes Achilles lamenting the death of Patroclus, by throwing dust upon his head, and lying down in it. So Virgil, in the affecting picture of the distressed family of Latinus, represents the queen as beating her breast, tearing her purple vest with her hands: Lavinia, her daughter, rending her yellow hair and rosy cheeks; while the venerable king bewails his public and private misfortunes with torn garments, and with dust defiling his gray hairs.]—Boscher.

Ver. 11. The accursed thing.—Jericho being one of the accursed or devoted cities. Achan, in purloining this property, was implicated in the curse pronounced upon the city.

Ver. 16. Tribe of Judah was taken.—That is, the lot was drawn on which Judah's name was written. Compare chap. xv. 1. &c. also 1 Chron. xiv. 7.

17 And he brought the family of Judah; and he took the family of the Zarahites: and he brought the family of the Zarahites man by man; and Zabdi was taken:

18 And he brought his household man by man; and Achan the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken.

19 And Joshua said unto Achan, My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him; and tell me now what thou hast done; hide it not from me.

20 And Achan answered Joshua, and said, Indeed I have sinned against the Lord God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done.

21 When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them, and behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it.

22 ¶ So Joshua sent messengers, and they ran unto the tent, and behold, it was hid in his tent, and the silver under it.

23 And they took them out of the midst of the tent, and brought them unto Joshua, and unto all the children of Israel, and laid them out before the Lord.

24 And Joshua, and all Israel with him, took Achan the son of Zerah, and the silver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and his sons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his asses, and his sheep, and his tent, and all that he had: and they brought them unto the valley of Achor.

25 And Joshua said, Why hast thou troubled us? the Lord shall trouble thee this day. And all Israel stoned him with stones, and burned them with fire, after they had stoned them with stones.

26 And they raised over him a great heap of stones unto this day. So the Lord turned from the fierceness of his anger: wherefore the name of that place was called The valley of Achor, unto this day.

punishment. He had, however, contrived to secrete the property unknown to the people or the army; but as Moses said in another case, "Be sure your sin will find you out," so it proved. In an attack upon the small town of Ai, Israel met with a reverse of success, and the people were defeated, and some slain: upon this Joshua is led to inquire of the Lord the reason; and we may remark by the way, that it is well when our losses or misfortunes lead us to pause and inquire into the cause, and especially to inquire of the Lord by prayer.

We have no doubt but it was by recurrence to the use of lots, which was a practice divinely sanctioned, that the culprit was discovered; and when he found this, his conscience forced him to make confession, though he could not be ignorant of the consequence. The injustice of putting his family to death has, however, been strongly argued by the enemies of revelation; and indeed the fact is questionable. It was said, (ver. 15.) "He that is taken with the accursed thing shall be burnt with fire, and all that he hath;" but whether this included the persons of his family, or only his property, is still doubtful: nor can we pronounce on the equity of the punishment, supposing the former to be intended, unless we knew the age of his sons and daughters, whether in infancy, and unconscious of their father's crime, or grown up to maturity, and accomplices with

Ver. 21. A Babylonish garment.—[Addereth shinar, "a splendid or costly robe of Shinar," the plain in which Babylon stood. Borchart and Calmet have shown at large, that Babylonish robes were very splendid, and in high reputation. Calmet says, they are generally allowed to have been of various colours, though some suppose they were woven thus; others that they were embroidered with the needle; and others that they were painted. Silius Italicus seems to think they were woven; Martial supposes them to have been embroidered with the needle; and Pliny and Apuleius speak of them as painted.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. His sons and his daughters.—Probably to witness the punishment of their parent. In many nations, however, whole families were included in the punishment of their principal. So, on a certain occasion, the king of Pegu (East Indies) ordered several of his grandees to be burnt alive, with their wives and children. See Orient. Lit. No. 359.

Ver. 25. All Israel stoned him with stones, and burned them with fire, after they had stoned them.—There is certainly something peculiar in the use of these pronouns. Thus much is certain, that Achan was stoned, and afterwards burned, with all his ill-gotten property; but were his goods stoned?

CHAPTER VIII.

1 God encourageth Joshua. 3 The stratagem whereby Ai was taken. 30 Joshua buildeth an altar, 32 with which the law on stones.

AND the LORD said unto Joshua, Fear not, neither be thou dismayed: take all the people of war with thee, and arise, go up to Ai: see, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land:

2 And thou shalt do to Ai and her king, as thou didst unto Jericho and her king: only the spoil thereof, and the cattle thereof, shall ye take for a prey unto yourselves: lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.

3 ¶ So Joshua arose, and all the people of war, to go up against Ai: and Joshua chose out thirty thousand mighty men of valour, and sent them away by night.

4 And he commanded them, saying, Behold, ye shall lie in wait against the city, even behind the city: go not very far from the city, but be ye all ready:

5 And I, and all the people that are with me, will approach unto the city: and it shall come to pass when they come out against us, as at the first, that we will flee before them,

6 (For they will come out after us,) till we have drawn them from the city; for they will say, They flee before us, as at the first: therefore we will flee before them.

7 Then ye shall rise up from the ambush, and seize upon the city: for the Lord your God will deliver it into your hand.

8 And it shall be when ye have taken the city, that ye shall set the city on fire: according to the commandment of the Lord shall ye do. See, I have commanded you.

9 ¶ Joshua therefore sent them forth; and they went to lie in ambush, and abode between Beth-el and Ai, on the west side of Ai: but Joshua lodged that night among the people.

10 And Joshua rose up early in the morning, and numbered the people, and went up, he and the elders of Israel, before the people to Ai.

11 And all the people, even the people of war that were with him, went up, and drew nigh, him. We know that in barbarous nations, a man's children are considered as the father's property, and when he is punished, usually participate in his punishment. This however does not accord with our ideas of equity; and we are ready to say with Abraham, (Gen. xviii. 23—25.) "Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked?—That be far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" At all events, those "charge God foolishly," who censure his conduct in the dark. —(See exposition of Numbers xvi.)

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—35. The city of Ai taken by stratagem, and destroyed.—War can only be justified by the command of God, or by a case of special necessity. In this war against the Canaanites, the Israelites had the fullest sanction of the divine authority; and not only so, but also for employing those stratagems with which war is usually carried on. In order to give the greater importance to this expedition, and perhaps to suggest to the enemy that they were greatly alarmed at their strength and powers, the whole army is put in motion; and two powerful detachments were privately sent forward to lie in ambush, the one on the west, and the other on the north, to take advantage of circumstances. By a feint, therefore, common in all wars, the people of Ai being led to suppose that Israel had fled, as before, (chap. vii. 4.) instantly pursued them, certainly; they raised over both him and them "a great heap of stones;" but nothing is said of his children being either stoned or burnt. So the LXX., Vulgate, Syriac, &c.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. People of war.—[It would seem, from this verse, that all that were capable of bearing arms were to march out of the camp on this occasion: 30,000 formed an ambuscade in one place; and 5000 were placed in another, who all gained their positions in the night: with the rest of the army, Joshua appeared the next morning before Ai, which the men of that city would naturally suppose was the whole of the Israelitish force; and, consequently, be the more emboldened to come out and attack them. Some, however, think that 30,000 men were the whole that were employed on this occasion, five thousand of whom were placed in ambush on the west of the city, between Beth-el and Ai, (v. 12.) and, with the rest, Joshua appeared before the city in the morning. The king, seeing but about 25,000 coming against him, though he had but 12,000 persons in the whole city, (v. 25.) determined to risk a battle, issued out and was defeated by stratagem.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Numbered the people.—Hebrew, "visited;" that is, in modern language, reviewed the troops.

and came before the city, and pitched on the north side of Ai: now there was a valley between them and Ai.

12 And he took about five thousand men, and set them to lie in ambush between Beth-el and Ai, on the west <sup>h</sup> side of the city.

13 And when they had set the people, even all the host that was on the north of the city, and their <sup>h</sup> liers in wait on the west of the city, Joshua went that night into the midst of the valley.

14 ¶ And it came to pass when the king of Ai saw it, that they hasted and rose up early, and the men of the city went out against Israel to battle, he and all his people, at a time appointed, before the plain: but he <sup>h</sup> wist not that there were liers in ambush against him behind the city.

15 And Joshua and all Israel made as if they were beaten before them, and fled by the way of the wilderness.

16 And all the people that were in Ai were called together to pursue after them: and they pursued after Joshua, and were drawn away from the city.

17 And there was not a man left in Ai or Beth-el, that went not out after Israel: and they left the city open, and pursued after Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto Joshua, Stretch <sup>h</sup> out the spear that is in thy hand toward Ai; for I will give it into thy hand. And Joshua stretched out the spear that he had in his hand toward the city.

19 And the ambush arose quickly out of their place, and they ran as soon as he had stretched out his hand: and they entered into the city, and took it, and hasted, and set the city on fire.

20 And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they saw, and behold, the smoke of the city <sup>h</sup> ascended up to heaven, and they had no <sup>m</sup> power to flee this way or that way: and the people that fled to the wilderness turned back upon the pursuers.

21 And when Joshua and all Israel saw that the ambush had taken the city, and that the smoke of the city ascended, then they turned again, and slew the men of Ai.

22 And the other issued out of the city against them; so they were in the midst of Israel, some on this side, and some on that side: and they smote them, so that they let <sup>a</sup> none of them remain or escape.

23 And the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joshua.

while a party of the latter, lying in ambush, got behind them, and burnt their city, destroyed the inhabitants, and hung their king; but they had a special license to reserve for their own use the cattle, and other spoil.

In the close of the chapter, Joshua proceeds to fulfil the command of the Lord by Moses, (compare Deut. xxvii.) to build an altar, write upon it a certain part of the divine law, as there stated, (see exposition,) and to pronounce the blessings and the curses therein recorded, which he did with an ex-

Ver. 17. Not a man left in Ai or Beth-el.—Beth-el was but about three n. l. from Ai, and being a weaker place, it is supposed the inhabitants fled to Ai. The LXX. however, omit the words "and Beth-el," and it seems not without reason, as there was an ambush of 5000 men between the two towns, (see ver. 12.) which seems to forbid the supposition just named; it is therefore omitted, not only by Houbigant and Geddes, but also by Dr. Boothroyd: and it is certain Beth-el was not destroyed till many years afterward. See Judges i. 24. It might, however, be now deserted.

Ver. 18. Stretch out the spear.—[The word keedon, is rendered clipeum, a shield or buckler, by the Vulgate; but the LXX. translate it gazon, which Suidas says signifies a kind of weapon like a spear. It probably denotes a short spear, javelin, or lance: for it is evident, that it signifies neither the larger spear nor the shield, because it is distinguished from both, 1 Sam. xvii. 6, 41, 45. Job xxxix. 23. It is probable that Joshua had a flag or ensign at the end of the spear, which might be seen at a considerable distance when extended, which was the sign agreed upon between him and the ambush.]—Bagster

28 And Joshua burnt <sup>r</sup> Ai, and made it a heap for ever, even a desolation unto this day.

30 ¶ Then Joshua built an altar unto the LORD God of Israel in mount <sup>w</sup> Ebal, 31 As Moses the servant of the LORD commanded the children of Israel, as it is <sup>x</sup> written in the book of the law of Moses, An altar of whole stones, over which no man hath lifted up any iron: and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the LORD, and sacrificed peace-offerings.

32 And <sup>y</sup> he wrote there upon the stones a copy of the law of Moses, which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel.

33 And all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark and on that side before the priests the Levites, which <sup>z</sup> bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, as well the <sup>a</sup> stranger, as he that was born among them; half of them over against mount Gerizim, and half of them over against mount Ebal; as Moses the servant of the LORD had commanded <sup>b</sup> before, that they should bless the people of Israel.

34 And afterward he <sup>c</sup> read all the words of the law, the <sup>d</sup> blessings and cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.

35 There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that <sup>e</sup> were conversant among them.

act attention to all the circumstances prescribed by Moses, in the hearing not only of the men, but also of the women and children, as equally interested in the divine commands and promises. And we may observe, that though their women were not distinguished by equal privileges with Christian females, they were far privileged beyond the Pagan women, who to this day are not supposed to possess souls, or to be endowed with reason. Woman, as the first transgressor, suffered, as it were, a double portion of the curse. And while she

Ver. 24. Israelites returned unto Ai.—[This must refer to the women, children, and old persons left behind; for it seems that all the effective men had sallied out when they imagined the Israelites had fled: ver. 16.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Joshua drew not his hand.—[Joshua seems to have been not only the general but the standard-bearer of the army, (ver. 18.) and continued in this employment, by holding up or extending out his spear, during the whole of the battle; and did not slacken from the pursuit till the forces of Ai were utterly discomfited. Some commentators, however, understand this action in a figurative sense, like the holding up of Moses' hands, as if it implied that Joshua continued in prayer for the success of his troops, nor ceased till the armies of Ai were annihilated, and the city taken and destroyed.]—B.

Ver. 29. King of Ai he hanged.—[The kings of Canaan lay under the same curse as their subjects, and probably were more deeply criminal. The reserving of the king of Ai for a solemn execution, would tend to strike terror into the other kings, contribute to the success of Israel, and give their proceedings the stamp of a judicial process, and of executing the vengeance of God upon his enemies.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The kings combine against Israel. 3 The Gibeonites by craft obtain a league, 23 for which they are condemned to perpetual bondage.

AND it came to pass, when all the kings which were on this side Jordan, in the hills, and in the valleys, and in all the coasts of the great sea over against Lebanon, the Hittite, and the Amorite, the Canaanite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite, heard thereof;

2 That they gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and with Israel, with one accord.

3 ¶ And when the inhabitants of Gibeon heard what Joshua had done unto Jericho and to Ai,

4 They did work wilily, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors, and took old sacks upon their asses, and wine-bottles, old, and rent, and bound up;

5 And old shoes and clouted upon their feet, and old garments upon them; and all the bread of their provision was dry and mouldy.

6 And they went to Joshua unto the camp at Gilgal, and said unto him, and to the men of Israel, We be come from a far country: now therefore make ye a league with us.

7 And the men of Israel said unto the Hivites, Peradventure ye dwell among us; and how shall we make a league with you?

8 And they said unto Joshua, We are thy servants. And Joshua said unto them, Who are ye? and from whence come ye?

9 And they said unto him, From a very far country thy servants are come, because of the name of the LORD thy God: for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt,

10 And all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites, that were beyond Jordan, to Sihon king of Heshbon, and to Og king of Bashan, which was at Ashtaroth.

11 Wherefore our elders and all the inhabitants of our country spake to us, saying, Take victuals with you for the journey, and go to meet them, and say unto them, We are your servants: therefore now make ye a league with us.

alone endured the miseries of child-bearing, she was in many nations reduced to a degree of degradation that left her little superior to the brutes, and subject to the capricious tyranny of the other sex. We are, doubtless, all under infinite obligations to the gospel, but more especially the fairer and the weaker sex. Woman is not only saved from future miseries, but raised by the incarnation of the Son of God, who was "born of a woman," to her original rank, as the partner and the friend of man. But not the woman only, but the children, are here brought forward to hear the blessings pronounced upon the obedient, and the curses denounced against the guilty.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—27. The remaining kings of Canaan combine against Joshua; but the Gibeonites artfully obtain a treaty.—It is a singular excellence in the sacred historians, that they generally confine themselves to facts, without apology or encomium. We must not therefore infer from this relation, either the criminality of this stratagem in the Gibeonites to preserve their lives, or the innocence of the falsehoods by which they gained their point. We have inspired authority for the fact; but their conduct must be judged by the divine law. "I commend (says Bishop Hall) their wisdom in seeking peace; I do not commend their falsehood in the manner of seeking it; but who can look for any better of Pagans? But as the faith

Ver. 4. As if they had been ambassadors from a very distant country.—[The word tzir, an ambassador, properly denotes a hinge; because an ambassador is a person upon whom the business turns as upon a hinge. So the Latin Cardinalis, from cardo, a hinge, was the title of the prime minister of the emperor Theodosius, though now applied only to the Pope's electors and counsellors.—Wine bottles, old, and rent, &c.—These bottles being made of skin were consequently liable to be rent, and capable of being mended; which is done, according to Charâm, by putting in a piece, or by gathering up the wounded piece in the manner of a purse; and sometimes by inserting a flat piece of wood.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Clouted.—[The word clouted, signifies here patched, from the Anglo-Saxon clut, a clout or rag; and not nailed, from the French clou, a nail.]—Bagster.

12 This our bread we took hot for our provision out of our houses on the day we came forth to go unto you; but now, behold, it is dry, and it is mouldy:

13 And these bottles of wine which we filled, were new, and behold they be rent: and these our garments and our shoes are become old by reason of the very long journey.

14 And the men took of their victuals, and asked not counsel at the mouth of the LORD.

15 And Joshua made peace with them, and made a league with them, to let them live: and the princes of the congregation swore unto them.

16 And it came to pass at the end of three days after they had made a league with them, that they heard that they were their neighbours, and that they dwelt among them.

17 And the children of Israel journeyed, and came unto their cities on the third day. Now their cities were Gibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim.

18 And the children of Israel smote them not, because the princes of the congregation had sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel. And all the congregation murmured against the princes.

19 But all the princes said unto all the congregation, We have sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel: now therefore we may not touch them.

20 This we will do to them: we will even let them live, lest wrath be upon us, because of the oath which we swore unto them.

21 And the princes said unto them, Let them live; but let them be hewers of wood, and drawers of water unto all the congregation; as the princes had promised them.

22 ¶ And Joshua called for them, and he spake unto them, saying, Wherefore have ye beguiled us, saying, We are very far from you; when ye dwell among us?

23 Now therefore ye are cursed, and there shall none of you be freed from being bondmen, and hewers of wood and drawers of water for the house of my God.

of Rahab is so rewarded that her lie is not punished, so the fraud of these Gibeonites is not an equal match of their belief, since the name of the Lord God of Israel brought them to this suit of peace. "The sentence of death was gone out against all the inhabitants of Canaan. These Hivites acknowledge the truth and judgments of God, and yet seek to escape by a league with Israel. The general denunciations of the vengeance of God enwrap all sinners; yet we may not despair of mercy. If the secret council of the Almighty had not designed these men to life, Joshua could not have been deceived with their league. In the generality there is no hope. Let us come in the old rags of our vileness to the true Joshua, (Jesus,) and make our truce with him; we may live; yea, we shall live.

To return to the Gibeonites. Though by this duplicity they saved their lives, they lost their liberty. The oath of the rulers was the security of their lives; but they had made no attempt for farther conditions, or that attempt might have defeated their object. When the fraud was discovered, therefore, they were sentenced to the penalty of slavery; but their servitude, though laborious, and still more galling on account of it condemning their mighty men to the usual employ of women, was attended with this happy circumstance, that it

Ver. 6. Make a league with us.—Hebrew, "Cut with us a covenant." The Gibeonites had probably heard of the patriarchal mode of making covenants and feigned themselves familiar with it: or perhaps had rites of their own somewhat similar. See Note on Gen. xv. 10. and De. xxix. 12.

The circumstance of the Gibeonites taking this politic measure to save their lives, has been alleged to prove that the Israelites might in no case enter into any treaty with Canaanites to spare their lives; but if this were the case, it should seem that such a positive law would have invalidated any treaty that could have been made with them, since oaths are not binding to an action in itself absolutely unlawful.

Ver. 14. And the men took of their victuals.—(See Margin.) The eating with an enemy was the most solemn pledge of reconciliation, and security. And asked not counsel.—To this circumstance is attributed their being thus imposed upon.

25 And now, behold, we are in <sup>e</sup> thy hand: as it seemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do.

26 And so did he unto them, and delivered them out of the hand of the children of Israel, that they slew them not.

27 And Joshua <sup>f</sup> made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation and for the altar of the LORD, even unto this day, in the <sup>g</sup> place which he should choose.

CHAPTER X.

NOW it came to pass, when Adoni-zedek king of Jerusalem had heard how Joshua had taken Ai, and <sup>a</sup> had utterly destroyed it; as he had done to Jericho and her king, so he had done to <sup>b</sup> Ai and her king; and how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Israel, and were among them;

2 That they feared <sup>c</sup> greatly, because Gibeon was a great city, as one of the <sup>d</sup> royal cities, and because it was greater than Ai, and all the men thereof were mighty.

3 Wherefore Adoni-zedek king of Jerusalem sent unto Hoham king of Hebron, and unto Piram king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia king of Lachish, and unto Debir king of Eglon, saying,

4 Come up unto me, and help me, that we may smite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joshua and with the children of Israel.

introduced them into the service of the true God, gave them an opportunity to know his will, and eventually many were probably incorporated among the chosen nation, and became the Lord's servants. The Israelites, on the other hand, came into the possession of their cities, and the Levites were relieved from some of their most laborious services,—<sup>4</sup> the hewing of wood, and the drawing of water.

One moral lesson, however, we must not fail to derive from the sequel—the importance of adhering to our engagements, and keeping our promises inviolate. It is said of the good man, that <sup>h</sup> he sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not; (Psalm. v. 4.) and we find that neither the importunities nor the murmurings of the Israelites could induce Joshua and the elders to violate their promise of protection; nor did they listen to any of the subterfuges that might have influenced men of little minds, or yielding integrity, with power in their hands, to revenge the deception by which they had been duped. We must not deceive because we have been deceived.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1–14. Five kings defeated.—The Sun and Moon stand still.—The Gibeonites having made peace with Israel, five confederate kings of the Canaanites combine to attack them; in consequence of which, they apply to Joshua for protection and defence, which he considers himself bound to afford them, and, therefore, immediately flies with a powerful army to their relief. These five kings are in consequence defeated, and their armies destroyed; but in this narrative there are two circumstances which infidel writers have treated with a great deal of unfounded ridicule and contempt; namely, the represent these as the usual employments of women, and in this circumstance, Harmer thinks, consisted chiefly the "bitterness of their doom," that even their military and wealthy men were degraded to the rank of women.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Jerusalem.—This is the first time this name occurs: at this period and long after, it seems this place was called Jebus, and its inhabitants Jebusites, Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 28; Judges xix. 10.

Ver. 2. Gibeon.—Gibeon was situated on an eminence, as its name imports, 40 furlongs north from Jerusalem, according to Josephus.—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Hebron.—Hebron was situated on an eminence, 20 miles south of Jerusalem, and the same distance north of Beer-sheba. It is now called El Khalt, "the well beloved," the usual epithet which the Turks and Arabs apply to Abraham, whose sepulchral cave they still show; over which Helena built a magnificent church. Its original site was on an eminence, at the southern foot of which the present village is pleasantly situated, on which are the remains of an ancient castle, its sole defence.—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon.—By this it should appear, that the sun was now about to set behind the mountains of Gibeon. The late learned Editor of Calmet remarks, (as Hutchinson had done long before,) that the Hebrew words Shemesh, (Sun,) and Trech, (Moon,) were not used for the orb of the sun and moon, (for which the language has different names,)

5 Therefore the five kings of the Amorites, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, the king of <sup>e</sup> Eglon, gathered themselves together, and went up, they and all their hosts, and encamped before Gibeon, and made war against it.

6 ¶ And the men of Gibeon sent unto Joshua to the <sup>f</sup> camp to Gilgal, saying, Slack not thy hand from thy servants; come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the mountains are gathered together against us.

7 So Joshua ascended from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour.

8 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, <sup>g</sup> Fear them not: for I have delivered them into thy hand; there shall not a man of them stand before thee.

9 Joshua therefore came unto them suddenly, and went up from Gilgal all night.

10 And the LORD <sup>h</sup> discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter at <sup>i</sup> Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to Beth-horon, and smote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah.

11 And it came to pass as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the LORD cast down great <sup>j</sup> stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

12 Then spake Joshua to the LORD in the day when the LORD delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, Sun, <sup>k</sup> stand thou <sup>l</sup> still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon, in the valley of <sup>m</sup> Ajalon.

shower of stones, and the standing still of the sun and moon.

We have already mentioned, (introduction to Deuteronomy,) that the Israelites, in their attack upon the Canaanites, had not only the divine command, but the divine co-operation; the Lord did actually, on this occasion, destroy more of the Canaanites, than "the children of Israel slew with the sword." Some have supposed that the shower of stones here mentioned, was composed of aerolites, or air-stones, of which Dr. Clarke has collected many authentic and well-attested instances; but as they are immediately after called "hail-stones," we are not warranted to look for any others, nor need we. The learned commentator just referred to, cites authority for stating, that Baldwin I. in his expedition to the Holy Land, in the vicinity of the Dead sea, suffered extremely from "horrible hail," frost, rain, and snow, inasmuch that thirty of his men perished thereby. Dr. C. also mentions having in his possession a pane of glass perforated by a hail-stone, in 1780, as true as if cut with a diamond, three inches and a half in diameter, which certainly implies a prodigious force; and when these dreadful weapons of destruction were directed by a miraculous power, how terrible must have been the consequences!

But what shall we say to the stopping of the sun and moon? In the first place, we need feel no alarm for the safety of the solar system. Bishop Watson well observes, "The machine of the universe is in the hand of God; he can stop the motion of any part, or of the whole, with less trouble, and less danger of injuring it, than we can stop our watch." There is, how but for their light only. (Isa. lx. 20.) The word (dum) rendered stand still, he would explain, remain steady—as the sunbeams shoot every morning and evening only, which determines the time of the miracle.—Joshua doubtless acted, on this occasion, by an immediate impulse upon his mind from the Spirit of God. It would have been improper either that he should speak, or that the miracle should be recorded, according to the terms of modern astronomy. The sun appeared to the Israelites over Gibeon, and the moon over the valley of Ajalon, which is supposed to have been situated in a different direction: and there they appeared to be stayed in their course for "a whole day;" either for the space of about 12 or 14 hours, or for the time of one diurnal revolution. Many inquiries have been made concerning the way in which this miracle was wrought, and many difficulties and objections have been argued against understanding it literally. But the fact is authenticated by the divine testimony; and the manner in which it was accomplished, lies entirely out of our province, because beyond our comprehension.—Bagster.

But, says T. Paine, "the tradition of it would have been universal; whereas there is not a nation in the world that knows any thing about it." Had this writer said that he "knew not any thing about it," he might have been believed. It is true that there are no collateral records which reach so high as this period. Bishop Watson remarks, however, that "a confused tradition 13 And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

14 And there was no day like that before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the Lord fought for Israel.

15 ¶ And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

16 But these five kings fled, and hid themselves in a cave at Makkedah.

17 And it was told Joshua, saying, The five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah.

18 And Joshua said, Roll great stones upon the mouth of the cave, and set men by it for to keep them:

19 And stay ye not, but pursue after your enemies, and smite the hindmost of them; suffer them not to enter into their cities: for the Lord your God hath delivered them into your hand.

20 And it came to pass, when Joshua and the children of Israel had made an end of slaying them with a very great slaughter, till they were consumed, that the rest which remained of them entered into fenced cities.

21 And all the people returned to the camp to Joshua at Makkedah in peace: none moved his tongue against any of the children of Israel.

22 Then said Joshua, Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings unto me out of the cave.

23 And they did so, and brought forth those five kings unto him out of the cave, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon.

24 And it came to pass, when they brought out those kings unto Joshua, that Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the captains of the men of war which went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings. And they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them.

25 And Joshua said unto them, Fear not, nor be dismayed, be strong and of good courage: for thus shall the Lord do to all your enemies against whom ye fight.

26 And afterward Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them on five trees: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening.

27 And it came to pass at the time of the going down of the sun, that Joshua commanded, and they took them down off the trees, and cast them into the cave wherein they had been hid, and laid great stones in the cave's mouth, which remain until this very day.

28 ¶ And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, them, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain: and he did to the king of Makkedah as he did unto the king of Jericho.

29 Then Joshua passed from Makkedah, and all Israel with him, unto Libnah, and fought against Libnah:

30 And the Lord delivered it also, and the king thereof, into the hand of Israel: and he smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain in it; but did unto the king thereof as he did unto the king of Jericho.

31 ¶ And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto Lachish, and encamped against it, and fought against it:

32 And the Lord delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, which took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah.

33 ¶ Then Horam king of Gezer came up to help Lachish; and Joshua smote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.

ever, no reason to believe it was at all disturbed by this miracle, which regarded, not the bodies of either sun or moon, but the light only that issued from them, whereby that day was probably united to the following, without an intervening night. By the sun being "in the midst of heaven," we understand the horizon; for had it been in the meridian, the moon would not have appeared, nor could Joshua, at noon-day, have felt any uneasiness about the sun going down: but supposing the sun to be nearly in the horizon, on the point of setting, as the moon was rising in another direction, by a miraculous detention of the light of those luminaries in the same quarter, the Israelites would be able to pursue their victory, and their enemies find no refuge under the veil of night. This, in fact, agrees exactly with the language of the prophet Zechariah, who evidently alludes to this event, (chap. xiv. 6, 7,) when speaking of the victories, and the glory of Messiah in the latter days: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear (as in mid-day), nor dark (as at night:) But it shall be one day (that is, perhaps, two days united in one) which shall be known unto the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at even-time it shall be light." That is, the light shall be continued, as in this case in the history of Joshua.

Ver. 15-43. Seven more kings are conquered.—This is a concerning this miracle, and a similar one in the time of Ahaz, has been preserved among one of the most ancient nations," the Egyptians; and, he might have added, the Chinese.

Ver. 13. In the book of Jasher.—It has been asked, What book was this? The book is lost, and if we cannot discover it, it is a matter of no consequence. Jasher means "the upright," and, according to the Hebrew idiom, may very properly be understood to mean, "upright or authentic records, or chronicles;" probably those of the high priest, from which most of the Old Testament history was compiled. See Numb. xxi. 14.—In the midst of heaven.—This phrase does not mean the meridian, but simply the atmosphere. See Gen. i. 6. Farhurst explains it of the horizon, which divides the heavens into the upper and lower hemisphere.

Ver. 15. And Joshua returned to Gilgal.—That is, after the conflict was all over, see ver. 43, which is the same verbatim, and some earned men think was inserted here by mistake in copying. Scott admits this. See Dr. Wall's Notes, and Dr. Clarke's Comment.

Ver. 24. Put your feet on the necks of these kings.—This was, in those early times, a very common method of triumphing over a conquered enemy. Q. Curtius relates, that "Dioxippus seized Hottatus, tripped up his heels, painful narrative, as indeed are all military annals, to a philanthropic mind; it may afford, however, some valuable instruction. There is no doubt but the system of warfare here exhibited, was that practised at this time by all nations; there was therefore an instance of the just judgment of God in retaliating upon them their own barbarities; an instance of which we find acknowledged in the case of Adoni-bezek, who, upon his thumbs and great toes being cut off, frankly confessed, "Threescore and ten kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: as I have done, so God hath required me." (Judges i. 7.) "Though retaliation be not allowed to us, it is an essential feature in the divine government: 'Vengeance is mine, says the Lord, and I will repay it.'"

Some little difficulties arise in this chapter, which may be removed without having recourse to criticism. The king of Hebron was one of the five kings that were slain and hung upon a tree, as we read in ver. 26. Yet in the latter part of the chapter (ver. 36.) we read again of the king of Hebron being slain; how could this be? A well known maxim in English law will explain this. "The king never dies;" that is, one king is no sooner dead than his successor reigns: this second king of Hebron was doubtless the successor of the former. But it is evident from Judges i. 10, that Hebron must have been repossessed and threw him with great violence to the ground. He then put his foot on his neck, drew out his sword, and lifting up his club, was about to dash out the brains of the overthrown champion, had he not been prevented by the king."

Ver. 28. Makkedah.—[Situated, according to Eusebius, 8 miles east from Eleutheropolis. It was afterwards assigned to the tribe of Judah.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Libnah.—[This city was situated in the south of Judah; and in the district of Eleutheropolis, according to Eusebius and Jerome. It is probably the Libnah in the neighbourhood of which the Israelites encamped.]—Bagster.

Ver. 31. Lachish.—[Lachish was also situated in the south of Judah, seven miles south from Eleutheropolis, according to Eusebius and Jerome. It appears to have been anciently a very strong place; for though the people were panic struck, and the Israelites flushed with success, yet Joshua could not reduce it till the second day; and the king of Assyria afterwards was obliged to raise the siege.]—Bagster.

Ver. 33. Gezer.—[Gezer was situated on the confines of Ephraim and Manasseh, between Beth-horon and the sea; and is evidently the village of Gazara mentioned by Eusebius, 4 miles (north) from Nicopolis or Emmaus.]—Bagster.

34 ¶ And from Lachish Joshua passed unto <sup>m</sup> Eglon, and all Israel with him: and they encamped against it, and fought against it:

35 And they took it on that day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein he utterly destroyed that day, according to <sup>n</sup> all that he had done to Lachish.

36 And Joshua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him, unto <sup>o</sup> Hebron; and they fought against it:

37 And they took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and all the souls that were therein; he left none remaining, according to <sup>p</sup> all that he had done to Eglon; but destroyed it utterly, and all the souls that were therein.

38 ¶ And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, to <sup>q</sup> Debir; and fought against it:

39 And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof; and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and utterly destroyed all the souls that were therein; he left none remaining: as <sup>r</sup> he had done to Hebron, so he did to Debir, and to the king thereof; as he had done also to Libnah, and to her king.

40 ¶ So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel <sup>s</sup> commanded.

42 And all these kings and their land did Joshua take at one time; <sup>x</sup> because the Lord God of Israel fought for Israel.

43 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Divers kings overcome at the waters of Merom. 10 Hazor is taken and burnt. 16 All the country taken by Joshua. 21 The Anakims cut off.

AND it came to pass, when Jabin king of Hazor had heard those things, that he seized by the Canaanites, from whom it was again taken, as was the case with Debir and other places:—a circumstance for which Calmet thus satisfactorily accounts: Joshua, in his rapid conquests, contented himself with taking, demolishing, and burning those cities; but did not garrison any of them for fear of weakening his army. In several instances, no doubt, the scattered Canaanites returned, re-peopled, and put those cities in a state of defence. Hence the Israelites had to conquer them a second time.

The rapid progress now made by Israel, contrasted with their previous slow procedure, may be accounted for by greater faith and confidence in God. They were not tried with defeats or disappointments, and therefore betrayed no discontent or murmuring. (ver. 21.) "None moved his tongue against any of the children of Israel." In applying the circumstances of this history to the life and spiritual conflict of the Christian, we may remark, that our progress in the divine life is always in proportion to our faith in the divine promises; and nothing more frequently retards this, than a murmuring and discontented temper. When Israel repined and murmured, they died in

Ver. 34. Eglon.—[This town appears to have been no great distance from Lachish, with which it is mentioned, ch. xv. 39. as one of the cities given to Judah.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Debir.—[Debir was situated in the south of the tribe of Judah, near Hebron. The expression of Joshua's returning to Debir, probably denotes that having carried his conquests in the southern parts as far as Gaza, (ver. 41.) which was in the south-west angle of Canaan, he then marched back to besiege Debir.]—Bagster.

Ver. 41. Goshen.—[The country of Goshen, mentioned here, seems to have been in the south of Judah; and to have taken its name from the city Goshen situated in the same tribe.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. Jabin was probably a common name, or the name of a dynasty of the kings of Hazor, as Pharaoh was of the kings of Egypt. See Judges iv.—Shimron.—[Supposed to be the same with Symira, in Cele-Syria, joined to Maron or Marath by Phiny and Pomponius Mela.—Achshaph.—[Supposed by some to be the same as Achzib or Edcippa; from which, however, it is distinguished in ch. xix. 25–28. It was in the northern part of the tribe of Asher.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Chinneroth.—[Jerome and others suppose this city to be the same as was afterwards called Tiberias, now Tabaria, situated on the western a sent to Jobab king of Madon, and to the king of <sup>b</sup> Shimron, and to the king of Achshaph,

2 And to the kings that were on the north of the mountains, and of the plains south of <sup>c</sup> Chinneroth, and in the valley, and in the borders of <sup>d</sup> Dor on the west,

3 And to the Canaanite on the east and on the west, and to the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Jebusite in the mountains, and to the <sup>e</sup> Hivite under <sup>f</sup> Hermon in the land of <sup>g</sup> Mizpeh.

4 And they went out, they and all their hosts with them, much people, even as the <sup>h</sup> sand that is upon the sea-shore in multitude, with horses and chariots very many.

5 And when all these kings were <sup>i</sup> met together, they came and pitched together at the waters of Merom, to fight against Israel.

6 ¶ And the Lord said unto Joshua, <sup>j</sup> Be not afraid because of them: for to-morrow about this time will I deliver them up all slain before Israel: thou shalt <sup>k</sup> hough their <sup>l</sup> horses, and burn their <sup>m</sup> chariots with fire.

7 So Joshua came, and all the people of war with him, against them by the waters of Merom <sup>n</sup> suddenly, and they fell upon them.

9 And Joshua did unto them as the <sup>r</sup> Lord bade him: he houghed their horses, and <sup>s</sup> burnt their chariots with fire.

10 ¶ And Joshua at that time turned back, and took Hazor, and smote the king thereof with the sword: for Hazor beforetime was the head of all those kingdoms.

11 And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them: there was <sup>t</sup> not any left to breathe: and he burnt Hazor with fire.

12 And all the cities of those kings, and all the kings of them, did Joshua take, and smote them with the edge of the sword, and he ut-the wilderness; when they obeyed and trusted the divine promises, they went on conquering and to conquer.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1–23. More enemies, more battles, and more triumphs, ending in the complete subjugation of the promised land.—It is proper here to remark, that this is not the history of a single campaign, for we are expressly told, that "Joshua made war a long time with all those kings;" not less, certainly, than six or seven years; which is inferred from the words of Joshua himself, chap. xiv. 10, which see. Though the chapter before us is much in the strain of the one preceding, it may afford some useful observations, sufficiently varied from the preceding.

First, we may remark, that in proportion to the vigour and success of the Israelites, so was the union and activity of their enemies. The latter were by no means dejected by their defeat; but instead of sinking into languor and despair, formed fresh combinations, and renewed their energies. It is an old but useful maxim, to "learn of an enemy;" and it is adopted in the sacred writings, for the apostle Peter encourages Christians to the greater vigilance from this consideration, shore of the lake of the same name.]—Bagster.—On the borders of Dor.—Calmet supposes this to mean, the campaign country of the higher and lower Galilee.

Ver. 4. Chariots, very many.—Namely, war-chariots. It is generally supposed that among the Canaanites, they were armed with iron scythes, fastened to their poles, and to the naves of their wheels.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 5. Merom.—[This is what Josephus calls the lake Semehon, now called Bahr-el-Houle, (Lake Julias), between the head of the Jordan and the lake of Tiberias. According to Josephus it was seven miles long; and, according to modern authorities, it is not above two miles broad, except at the north end, where it may be four.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Great Zidon.—Hebrew, "Zidon Rabbah;" probably the Sidon of the ancients, illustrious for its art and wealth long before the Trojan war.—Misrephoth-maim.—The former word signifies "salt-pits," and the latter, "burnings." The place was probably famous for salt springs and for hot springs: Luther translates the latter, "hot waters."

Ver. 9. He houghed their horses.—Or "maimed" them: the word is twice rendered "troubled," in chap. vii. 25. To hough a horse is to cut the sinews of the hinder leg at the knee. The design was evidently to prevent their being employed in war.

erly destroyed them, as Moses the servant of the Lord commanded.

13 But as for the cities that stood still in their strength, Israel burned none of them, save Hazor only; that did Joshua burn.

14 And all the spoil of these cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey unto themselves: but every man they smote with the edge of the sword, until they had destroyed them, neither left they any to breathe.

15 ¶ As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua: he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses.

16 So Joshua took all that land, the <sup>a</sup> hills, and all the south country, and all the land of Goshen, and the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Israel, and the valley of the same;

17 Even from the mount <sup>a</sup> Halak, that goeth up to Seir, even unto Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon under mount Hermon: and all their <sup>b</sup> kings he took, and smote them, and slew them.

18 Joshua made war a long <sup>c</sup> time with all those kings.

19 There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save the <sup>d</sup> Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon: all other they took in battle.

20 For it was of the Lord to <sup>e</sup> harden their hearts, that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might destroy them, as the Lord <sup>e</sup> commanded Moses.

21 ¶ And at that time came Joshua and cut off the <sup>b</sup> Anakims from the mountains, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Israel: Joshua destroyed them utterly with their cities.

22 There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Israel: only in Gaza, in <sup>i</sup> Gath, and in <sup>i</sup> Ashdod, there remained.

23 So Joshua took the whole land, according to all that the Lord said <sup>k</sup> unto Moses, and Joshua gave it for an inheritance unto Israel

CHAPTER XII.

1 The two kings whose countries Moses took and disposed of. 7 The one and thirty kings on the other side Jordan, which Joshua smote.

NOW these are the kings of the land, which the children of Israel smote, and possessed their land on the other side Jordan toward the rising of the sun, from the river <sup>a</sup> Arnon, unto mount Hermon, and all the plain on the east.

2 Sihon <sup>b</sup> king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, and ruled from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and from the middle of the river, and from half Gilead, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon;

3 And from the plain to the sea of Chinnereth on the east, and unto the sea of the plain, even the salt sea on the east, the way to Bethjeshimoth; and <sup>c</sup> from the south, under <sup>d</sup> Ashdodpiggah:

4 And the coast of <sup>e</sup> Og king of Bashan, which was of the <sup>f</sup> remnant of the giants, that <sup>g</sup> dwelt at Ashtaroth and at Edrei,

5 And reigned in mount <sup>h</sup> Hermon, and in Salcah, and in all Bashan, unto the border of the Geshurites, and the Maachathites, and half Gilead, the border of Sihon king of Heshbon.

6 Them did Moses the servant of the Lord, and the children of Israel smite: and Moses the servant of the Lord gave <sup>i</sup> it for a possession unto the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

7 ¶ And these are the kings of the country which Joshua and the children of Israel smote on this side Jordan on the west, from Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount Halak that goeth up to Seir; which Joshua gave unto the tribes of Israel for a possession according to their divisions;

8 In the mountains, and in the valleys, and in the plains, and in the springs, and in the wilderness, and in the south country; the <sup>j</sup> Hittites, the Amorites, and the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites:

9 ¶ The king of <sup>k</sup> Jericho, one; the king of <sup>l</sup> Ai, which is beside Beth-el, one;

that Satan "goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may (or can) devour." (1 Pet. v. 8.) 2. The prodigious population of Canaan previous to its conquest, renders credible all we read on this subject afterwards. They, as well as the children of Abraham, are compared to the sands of the sea-shore for multitude. Josephus calculates, that in one of these engagements, "the Canaanitish army consisted of no less than 300,000 foot, and 10,000 horse, besides 20,000 chariots of war." But, 3. No enemy can be too numerous, or too powerful, for those who have the God of Israel on their side. He who commands the lightning and the hail, the hornet and the wasp, can meet with no repulse from feeble man. 4. We see the nature and character of the human heart, which is alike hardened either by judgments or by mercies, even as the ground is hardened either by the sun or by the frost. In many cases, God's sparing mercies harden the heart; "because judgment against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the children of men are fully set in them to do evil." But in the case of Pharaoh and the Canaanites, judgments produced the like effect, and we well know, that nothing but the grace of God can effectually soften the obdurate heart of man. Lastly, In the close of this chapter, we may discern a noble instance of disinterestedness in the character of Joshua. No sooner had he conquered the land, than he "gave it for an inheritance to Israel," without any reserve for himself! insomuch, that when all was over, he had to ask a city for himself and family to dwell in. (See chap. xix. 49, 50.)

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—24. Kings subdued.—This chapter connects the history of the conquest of Canaan with the subsequent account of its division to the tribes of Israel.

The Israelites utterly destroyed King Arad and his cities, in the lifetime of Moses, and called the name of them Hormah. Probably "the king of Arad," here mentioned is the same person. As his kingdom was on the southern border of Canaan, and not east of Jordan, it came into the possession of Israel under Joshua; and therefore he is numbered in that division of kings. Yet Hormah is here mentioned, as a distinct kingdom from that of Arad: and perhaps there was another place of that name. (Num. xiv. 45.)

Every considerable town or city was under the government of a king, who possessed the adjacent fields and villages, and ruled, as it is generally supposed, with despotic sway: and though the Canaanites doubtless waged frequent wars, and gained advantages over each other; yet no one had acquired the sovereignty of the whole.—When Julius Cæsar landed in Britain, he found four kings in the single county of Kent: how many, then must there have been in the whole Island!—A single view of a good map of ancient Canaan will show the reader all that learned men have conjectured or determined concerning the relative situation of the several places, which

6 All the inhabitants of the hill-country from Lebanon unto <sup>l</sup> Misrephoth-maim, and all the Sidonians, them will I <sup>m</sup> drive out from before the children of Israel: only <sup>n</sup> divide thou it by lot unto the Israelites for an inheritance, as I have commanded thee.

7 Now therefore divide this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half-tribe of Manasseh,

8 With whom the Reubenites and the Gadites have received their inheritance, which Moses <sup>o</sup> gave them, beyond Jordan eastward, even as Moses the servant of the Lord gave them;

9 From Aroer that is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midst of the river, and all the plain of <sup>p</sup> Medeba unto Dibon;

12 All the kingdom of Og in Bashan, which reigned in Ashtaroth and in Edrei, who remained of the remnant of the giants. For these <sup>r</sup> did Moses smite, and cast them out.

13 Nevertheless, the children of Israel expelled not <sup>s</sup> the Geshurites, nor the Maachathites: but the Jeshurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Israelites until this day.

14 Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave none <sup>t</sup> inheritance; the <sup>u</sup> sacrifices of the Lord God of Israel made by fire are their inheritance, as he said unto them.

15 ¶ And Moses gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben inheritance according to their families.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—33. Joshua old, and much land yet remains to be possessed. Joshua was now, it appears, about a century old, and might justly be called stricken in years; and his great activity since the death of Moses must necessarily have impaired his strength, so as to unfit him for the fatigues and dangers of military warfare. Still, however, much land remained to be conquered and possessed; the Lord therefore urges him to proceed with the division of the land, leaving the respective tribes to contend for their appropriate lots, with the promise that, in case of their persevering activity and obedience, they should be assisted to gain possession of the remainder. The condition here understood, is fully expressed in Joshua's farewell address to Israel, chap. xxiii. ver. 11—13.

This division of the land, though in some sense premature, was calculated to answer several valuable ends. It would Perhaps some other river might be called Sihor, (or black,) as resembling the Nile, or supposed to have some connexion with it. See Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 4. Aphek.—[This is probably the Aphek spoken of in 1 Kings xx. 26. 2 Kings xiii. 18, as the capital of the kings of Syria; and the same as is mentioned by Sozomen, Eusebius, and Theophanes, as situated near the river Adonis, (now Nahr Ibrahim.) between Heliopolis and Byblos, and celebrated guard them against making alliances with the present inhabitants, and stimulate them to fight for the different portions that were assigned to them; and as respected their brethren of Israel, it might prevent much jealousy and contention.

Let us, however, place ourselves in Joshua's situation, who, while he gave them these directions as to the earthly Canaan, was himself admonished to prepare to enter the Canaan that is above. "The Lord said unto him, thou art old and stricken in years." By how many infirmities and diseases (messengers from heaven) are the aged warned to prepare to die; and yet, alas! how backward are we to attend to the kind and merciful admonition.

But there is another useful view we should take of this passage; we that are "old and stricken in years," should inquire, what duties remain unaccomplished. When Bede, the venerable, was in the article of death, he was engaged in completing a translation of St. John's Gospel: his amanuensis, seeing he was ready to depart, cried, "My beloved master, there yet remains one sentence unwritten."—O for such a monitor, to

Ver. 5. Giblites.—[Probably the inhabitants of the country around Gela (Eze. xxvii. 9) or Byblos, as the LXX. render, a city of Phœnicia, situated on the Mediterranean between Sidon and Tripoli, on the north of the river Adonis. It is now called Giblye, or Djebali, situated about a day's journey south of Tripoli; its walls are about a mile in circumference, with square towers about every forty yards' distance.—Anciently, it must have been a place of no mean extent and of considerable beauty, from the ruins still visible.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 The nine tribes and a half are to have their inheritance by lot. 6 Caleb by privilege obtaineth Hebron.

AND these are the countries which the children of Israel inherited in the land of Canaan, which <sup>a</sup> Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel distributed for inheritance to them.

2 By <sup>b</sup> lot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses, for the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.

3 For Moses had given the inheritance of two tribes and a half-tribe on the other side Jordan: but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them.

4 For the children of Joseph were <sup>a</sup> two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, save <sup>a</sup> cities to dwell in, with their <sup>a</sup> suburbs for their cattle, and for their substance.

5 As <sup>a</sup> the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land.

6 ¶ Then the children of Judah came unto Joshua in Gilgal: and <sup>a</sup> Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite said unto him, Thou knowest the thing that the LORD said <sup>a</sup> unto Moses the <sup>a</sup> man of God concerning me and thee in Kadesh-barnea.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1-15. The land distributed by lot, and Mount Hebron given to Caleb.—Though God had sufficiently pointed out by the predictions of Jacob and Moses what portions he designed for each tribe; yet we readily discern an admirable proof of his wisdom, in the orders he gave to decide them by lot. By this means, the false interpretations which might have been given to the words of Jacob and Moses were prevented; and by striking at the root of whatever might occasion jealousies and disputes among the tribes, he evidently secured the honesty of those appointed to distribute the conquered lands of Canaan. Besides, the success of this method gave a fresh proof of the divinity of the Jewish religion, and the truth of its oracles. Each tribe finding itself placed by lot exactly in the spot where Jacob and Moses foretold, it was evident that Providence had equally directed both the predictions and that lot; and it would be the greatest insolence and stupidity not to acknowledge the inspiration of God in the words of Jacob and Moses;—the direction of his hand in the lot, and his providence in the event.”—Bagster.

“The portion (says the learned Massius) fell to each tribe just as Jacob had predicted two hundred and fifty years before, in the last moments of his life, and Moses immediately before his death: for to the tribe of Judah fell a country abounding with vineyards and pastures: to Zebulun and Issachar sea-coasts: in that of Asher was plenty of oil, wheat, and metals: that of Benjamin near to the temple, was, in a manner, “between the shoulders” of the Deity.
Ephraim and Manasseh were distinguished with a territory blest in a peculiar manner by heaven. The land of Naphtali extended from the west to the south of the tribe of Judah.

Since, therefore, the lot so well corresponded to these predictions, would it not be insolence and stupidity in the highest degree, not to acknowledge the inspiration of God in the words of Jacob and Moses; the direction of his hand in the lot, and his providence in the event?”

The application of Caleb for his inheritance, as related in this chapter, is very interesting. His name (as we have before remarked) signifies all-heart; and in respect both to character and constitution he was what we familiarly call heart,—open, candid, generous, zealous, faithful, in short, all- heart. And as was his character, so also was his constitution: for he says at the advanced age of fourscore and five, “I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; [that is, to search out the promised land, forty-five years before.] As my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, both to go out, and to come in.” This he says, in applying for Mount Hebron as an inheritance; for though Joshua had destroyed both the city and its inhabitants, it appears that it had been repossessed by the Anakims, a gigantic race, with whom he would now have to contend:
but with the same faith and courage as on a former occasion, he cries out, “If so be the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the Lord said.” (Compare Num. xiii. 30; xiv. 7, 8.)

Such a sentiment demands not only our admiration but adoption: opposed as the Christian is by spiritual enemies, temptations without, and corruptions within, he may boldly encourage himself in God, and declare, “If so be the Lord will 8 Nevertheless, my brethren that went up with me made the heart of the people<sup>l</sup> melt: but I<sup>m</sup> wholly followed the LORD my God.

9 And Moses sware on that day, saying, Surely the land whereon<sup>n</sup> thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance, and thy children's for ever; because thou hast wholly followed the LORD my God.

10 And now, behold, the LORD hath kept me alive, as he<sup>o</sup> said, these forty and five years, even since the LORD spake this word unto Moses, while the children of<sup>p</sup> Israel wandered in the wilderness: and now, lo, I am this day fourscore and five years old.

11 As yet I am as strong this day, as I was in the day that Moses sent me: as my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, both to go out, and to come in.

12 Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the LORD spake in that day; for thou heardest in that day how<sup>q</sup> the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced: if<sup>r</sup> so be the LORD will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the LORD said.

13 And Joshua blessed<sup>s</sup> him, and gave unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh Hebron for an inheritance.

14 Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenazite unto this day; because that he wholly followed the LORD God of Israel.

15 And the name of Hebron before was<sup>t</sup> Kirjath-arba; which<sup>u</sup> Arba was a great man among the Anakims. And<sup>v</sup> the land had rest from war.

be with me, then shall I be able to conquer and to triumph." And as Joshua, the typical Saviour, not only gave Caleb a title to Mount Hebron, but his blessing with it; so will Jesus our Lord admit us to the heavenly country, with "Come, ye blessed of my Father."

CHAP. XV. Ver 1—63. Boundaries and divisions.—After some general survey of the land, Joshua proceeded to allot to Judah, Ephraim, and the half of Manasseh, their situations and inheritances, before they left Gilgal; and afterwards removing to Shiloh, a more extensive and accurate survey seems to have been made, and the other tribes had their portions assigned them by lot also. The inheritance which Judah actually possessed was large; for it was intended that this tribe should have the precedence, and it was the most numerous of all the tribes. But that which was at first allotted to them, contained half the southern part of Canaan, and was found too extensive: so that some deductions were afterwards made. The relative situation of the tribes seems to have been decided by lot: but the proportion of land for each, to have been determined, in some measure, by the discretion of the persons appointed for that service.—"Bohan the son of Reuben," was either one of Reuben's sons, who died before Jacob left Canaan, and had been buried in the place here mentioned; or some eminent person that had lately died there. Several of the places spoken of must have been different from those called elsewhere by the same names. The portion, here marked out, was bounded, on the south, by the wilderness of Zin, and the southern coast of the salt sea; on the east by that sea, reaching to the place at which it receives the waters of Jordan; on the north, by a line drawn nearly parallel to Jerusalem, across from the northern extremity of the salt sea, to the south boundary of the Philistines and to the Mediterranean sea; which sea was its boundary, as far as the river of Egypt.

This transaction seems here introduced by anticipation, and it is recorded elsewhere. Caleb was doubtless desirous to excite the Israelites to obtain possession of their inheritance: but this proposal was also well calculated to secure the marriage of his daughter with a worthy man, who perhaps might have previously entertained an affection for her, and knew the

Ver. 6. Beth-hogla.—Beth, is a house, or temple, and most of those places, thus called, probably contained idol temples.—[Probably the Bethagla mentioned by Jerome is the same as "the threshing-floor of Atad," (Ge. i. 10.) situated 3 miles from Jericho, and two from Jordan; and belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, though serving as a frontier to the tribe of Judah.] —Bagster.

Ver. 8. Valley of the son of Hinnom.—Who this was, is utterly unknown, but from this name came Gehenna: by becoming the scene of the horrid rites of Molech, this valley became a figure of hell itself. See Matt. v. 22, 29, 30.

Ver. 12. Give me this mountain, &c.—Some translate the words, "Though the Anakims be there, and the cities (namely, of the Anakims) strong and great; (yet) if the Lord be with me," &c. This implies that the Anakims had repaired or rebuilt the walls, &c. but we must not confound their fortifications with those of modern times, since the invention of artillery.—Dr. Wall.

Ver. 15. Kirjath-arba, (i. e. the city of Arba) which (or who) was a great man, &c. And the land had rest from war.—That is, there were no more general wars; the inhabitants of Canaan, collectively, could make no longer any head, their confederacy being broken; and the land being divided, each tribe had to expel the inhabitants from their own territory.—Dr. Clarke.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1. Then was the lot.—[The geography of the sacred writings presents many difficulties, occasioned by the changes which Canaan has undergone, especially for the last 2000 years. Many of the ancient towns and villages have had their names so totally changed that their former appellations are no longer discernible—several lie buried under their own ruins, and others have been so long destroyed, that not a vestige of them remains. On these accounts it is very difficult to ascertain the precise situation of many places mentioned in these chapters; but this cannot affect the truth of the narrative. Some of the principal cities in the universe, as Babylon and Troy are not only 13 ¶ And unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh he gave a part among the children of Judah, according to the commandment of the Lord to Joshua, even <sup>a</sup> the city of Arba the father of Anak, which city is Hebron.

14 And Caleb drove thence the <sup>r</sup> three sons of Anak, Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak.

15 And he went up thence to the inhabitants of <sup>a</sup> Debir: and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-sepher.

16 ¶ And Caleb said, <sup>v</sup> He that smiteth Kirjath-sepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achsah my daughter to wife.

17 And Othniel the <sup>w</sup> son of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife.

18 And it came to pass, as she came unto him, that she moved him to ask of her father a field. And she <sup>r</sup> lighted off her ass; and Caleb said unto her, What wouldest thou?

19 Who answered, Give me a <sup>r</sup> blessing; for thou hast given me a south land, give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs, and the nether springs.

20 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah according to their families.

1 The general borders of the sons of Joseph: 5 the border of the inheritance of Ephraim.

value of an alliance with a person so eminent for faith and piety, as Caleb was. Probably, Debir was also promised as her dower.—Fathers, among the Israelites, (and indeed among all the ancients,) seem to have exercised a more absolute authority, in disposing of their daughters in marriage, than is customary among us; and these generally acquiesced in the choice made for them. The case is the same in many

Ver. 16. Will I give Achsah.—Compare 1 Sam. xvii. 25.
Ver. 19. A south land.—Probably dry and parched.—Upper and nether springs.—Springs in the hills and in the valleys; a double blessing in that country.

The gift of Hebron to Caleb, is a repetition of what is mentioned chap. xiv. 18—15, for the sake of adding, that he drove out the sons of Anak, as he had anticipated: other circumstances here mentioned, are repeated in the first chapter of Judges.—<sup>a</sup> Caleb had his inheritance assigned him in a different way from the other Israelites; and his case being thus singular, his daughter, when married to a near relation, was allowed to inherit, though he had sons.<sup>b</sup> See Numb. xviii. 1—11.

Ver. 31. Ziklag.—The Philistines seem to have kept possession of this city till the time of David, who received it from Achish, king of Gath, 1 Sam. xxvii. 6. after which, it remained in possession of the kings of Judah.<sup>c</sup>—Dr. Clarke.

countries at present. It seems the Canaanites had recovered the possession of Debir, after Joshua had taken it; but it was in this manner again taken out of their hands.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—10. Joseph and Ephraim's allotment.—Our situation and provision in this present life, as well as our future inheritance, are appointed by the only wise and righteous God: and we should learn to acknowledge his goodness with Ver. 32. Twenty and nine.—Thirty-eight are here enumerated, but nine of them are afterwards allotted to Simeon. See ch. xix. 1—9.

Ver. 35. Fourteen cities.—Fifteen are named, but it is supposed that Gederah and Gederothaim were united.

Ver. 62. City of salt.—Or of Melach, near the Dead sea, where all the land is deeply impregnated with salt. Supposed to be the same as Zoar.—En-gedi.—(En-gedi, or Hazazon-Tamah, was situated, according to Eusebius, in the desert west of the Dead sea. Josephus says it was 300 stadia from Jerusalem, and not far from the lake Asphaltites; and consequently it could not have been far from Jericho and the mouth of the Jordan. It was celebrated for the abundance of its palm trees.)—Bageter.

Ver. 63. The Jebusites dwell at Jerusalem to this day.—The strong hold of Sion was not taken till David's time. 2 Sam. v. 7.

goeth up from Jericho throughout mount Beth-el,

2 And goeth out from Beth-el to <sup>b</sup> Luz, and passeth along unto the borders of Archi to Ataroth,

3 And goeth down westward to the coast of Japhleti, unto the coast of <sup>c</sup> Beth-horon the nether, and to <sup>d</sup> Gezer: and the goings out thereof are at the sea.

4 So <sup>e</sup> the children of Joseph, Manasseh and Ephraim, took their inheritance.

5 ¶ And the border of the children of Ephraim according to their families was thus: even the border of their inheritance on the east side was Ataroth-addar, unto Beth-horon the upper;

6 And the border went out toward the sea to <sup>f</sup> Michmethah on the north side; and the border went about eastward unto Taanath-shiloh, and passed by it on the east to Janohah;

7 And it went down from Janohah to Ataroth, and to Naarath, and came to Jericho, and went out to Jordan.

8 The border went out from Tappuah westward unto the river <sup>g</sup> Kanah; and the goings out thereof were at the sea. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Ephraim by their families.

9 And the separate cities for the children of Ephraim were among the inheritance of the children of Manasseh, all the cities with their villages.

10 And <sup>h</sup> they drave not out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer: but the Canaanites dwell among the Ephraimites unto this day, and serve under tribute.

CHAPTER XVII.

The lot of Manasseh: 7 his coast. 12 The Canaanites not driven out. 14 The children of Joseph obtain another lot.

THERE was also a lot for the tribe of Manasseh; for he was the <sup>a</sup> first-born of Joseph; to wit, for <sup>b</sup> Machir the first-born of Manasseh, the father of Gilead: because he was a man of war, therefore he had <sup>c</sup> Gilead and Bashan.

2 There was also a lot for the <sup>d</sup> rest of the children of Manasseh by their families; for the children of <sup>e</sup> Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Asriel, and thankfulness, and be contented with our portion, whether more or less abundant; because he knows what is best for us, and we have far more than we deserve.—The distinctions of property accord to the appointment of God, and must therefore be conscientiously maintained: nay, so far from fraudulently or violently attempting to intrench on them, we must not covet any thing that is another's, nor envy his prosperity, but rejoice in it. Yet brotherly love is not tenacious, but freely imparts what is superfluous, for the good of those in want, saying, "What is that between me and thee?" We should, indeed in all things be more happy, did we more diligently obey our God.—T. Scott.

Ver. 2. From Beth-el to Luz.—By Gen. xxviii. 19. Beth-el and Luz appear to have been different names for the same place. Dr. Clarke thinks they might be connected, as London, Westminster, and Southwark, all which are often included under London. Beth-el was perhaps a field adjacent to Luz, and afterwards being built over, formed another town.

Ver. 3. Beth-horon.—Eusebius says that the two Beth-horons were twelve miles from Jerusalem towards Nicopolis or Emmaus: of which the one, called upper Beth-horon, from its situation, was built (rebuilt) by Solomon, and the other, called nether Beth-horon, was given to the Levites. Josephus places Beth-horon about 100 furlongs from Jerusalem. Dr. Clarke mentions an Arab village called Bethoor, about twelve miles from Jerusalem, between Rama and Jeremiah, which he supposes, from its situation on a hill, to be Beth-horon the upper.—Bagster.

Ver. 9. The separate cities.—That is, the cities that were separated from the tribe of Manasseh to be given to Ephraim, ch. xvii. 9.

Ver. 10. The Canaanites that dwell in Gezer.—Were not wholly expelled before the time of Solomon, when the king of Egypt gave it to Solomon, as a portion with his daughter. 1 Kings ix. 16. They were, however, tributary from this time.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. For Machir.—It is calculated, that if Machir was now alive, he must be nearly 200 years old, which is very possible; and that he was a superannuated warrior who was thus rewarded: most think, however, that these places were bestowed, in his honour, upon his children.

Ver. 5. Ten portions.—Hebrew, "lines," or cords, referring to the instruments of measurement. [As there were six sons and five daughters, among whom this division was to be made, there should be eleven portions: but Zelophehad, son of Hepher, having left five daughters in his place, neither he nor Hepher is reckoned. The lot of Manasseh therefore were divided into ten for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida: these were the male children of Manasseh the son of Joseph by their families.

3 ¶ But Zelophehad, the son of Hepner, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, had no sons, but daughters: and these are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

4 And they came near before <sup>f</sup> Eleazar the priest, and before Joshua the son of Nun, and before the princes, saying, The Lord commanded <sup>g</sup> Moses to give us an inheritance among our brethren. Therefore according to the commandment of the Lord he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father.

5 And there fell ten portions to Manasseh, beside the land of Gilead and Bashan, which were on the other side Jordan;

6 Because the daughters of Manasseh had an inheritance among his sons: and the rest of Manasseh's sons had the land of Gilead.

7 ¶ And the coast of Manasseh was from Asher to <sup>h</sup> Michmethah, that lieth before Shechem; and the border went along on the right hand unto the inhabitants of En-tappuah.

8 Now Manasseh had the land of Tappuah but Tappuah on the border of Manasseh belonged to the children of Ephraim:

9 And the coast descended unto the <sup>i</sup> river Kanah, southward of the river: these <sup>j</sup> cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manasseh: the coast of Manasseh also was on the north side of the river, and the out-goings of it were at the sea:

10 Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manasseh's, and the sea is his border; and they met together in Asher on the north, and in Issachar on the east.

11 And <sup>k</sup> Manasseh had in Issachar and in Asher <sup>l</sup> Beth-shean and her towns, and Ib-lean and her towns, and the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of <sup>m</sup> En-dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of <sup>n</sup> Taanach and her towns, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns, even three countries.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—18. Manasseh's portion.—Though Manasseh was the first-born of Joseph, yet Ephraim inherited before him. Machir is supposed to have been the only son of Manasseh, at least, who lived to have children; and in some instances an only son is called the first-born. He was a man of war; probably he had distinguished himself whilst in Egypt, in the assault which the Philistines made upon the Ephraimites, and had defended his brethren. And as his posterity were supposed to inherit his valour, some of them had their inheritance east of Jordan, upon the frontiers, that they might defend them.

Joshua was of the tribe of Ephraim, and his brethren might parts: five for the five sons of Gilead, Abiezer, Helek, Asriel, Shechem, and Shemida; and five for the five daughters of Zelophehad, Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Asher.—Eusebius says, this was a town in this time not far from Neapolis towards Scythopolis or Bethshan; between which towns it is also placed by the old Jerusalem Itinerary.—Michmethah.—Situated, probably, east of Shechem; though its precise situation, as well as that of many others, cannot, at this distance of time, be ascertained. Many of these towns were small, and we may rationally conclude, slightly built: and consequently have perished more than two thousand years ago. It would therefore be useless to look for such places now: though, in many instances, their ancient names have been preserved, and their sites identified. Several towns even in England, mentioned by Caesar and other ancient writers, are no longer discernible: several have changed their names, and not a few their situation. 1.—Bagster.

Ver. 8. River Kanah.—(Or, brook of reeds. The brook Kanah seems to be what is now called Nahr el Kanah, which falls into the Mediterranean a few miles south of Casarea of Palestine, mentioned by the Hon. C. L. Irby and J. Mangies.—Ch. xvi. 8.)—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Beth-shean.—(Beth-shean, the Scythopolis of the Greek and Roman writers, was situated in the plain of Jordan, west of that river, 120 furlongs (south) from Tiberias according to Josephus, and 600 furlongs (north) from Jerusalem. (2 Mac. xii. 29.) It was the largest city of the Decapolis, and the only one on that side of Jordan. It is now called Bisan, a hours or 24 miles from Tiberias; and described by Dr. Richardson, exclusive of its ruins, as "a collection of miserable hovels, containing 200 inhabitants."—Dor.—Dor, according to Eusebius, was situated on the Mediterranean, nine miles from Casarea Palestine towards Carmel. The village of Tortura, 4 leagues north of Casarea, is supposed to nearly occupy its site. 1.—Bagster.

12 Yet <sup>a</sup> the children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities; but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

13 Yet it came to pass, when the children of Israel were waxen strong, that they put the Canaanites to <sup>b</sup> tribute; but did not utterly drive them out.

14 And the children of Joseph spake unto Joshua, saying, Why hast thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit, seeing I am a great people, forasmuch as the Lord hath <sup>a</sup> blessed me hitherto?

15 And Joshua answered them, If thou be a great people, then get thee up to the wood-country, and cut down for thyself there in the land of the Perizzites and of the giants, if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.

16 And the children of Joseph said, The hill is not enough for us: and all the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley have chariots of <sup>a</sup> iron, both they who are of <sup>b</sup> Beth-shean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of <sup>a</sup> Jezreel.

17 And Joshua spake unto the house of Joseph, even to Ephraim and to Manasseh, saying, Thou art a great people, and hast great power: thou shalt not have one lot only:

18 But the mountain shall be thine; for it is a wood, and thou shalt cut it down: and the out-goings of it shall be thine: for <sup>a</sup> thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AND the whole congregation of the children of Israel assembled together at <sup>a</sup> Shiloh, and set up the <sup>b</sup> tabernacle of the congregation there. And the land was subdued before them.

2 And there remained among the children of Israel seven tribes, which had not yet received their inheritance.

expect some special favour on that account. Their inheritance perhaps was less valuable than that of Judah; and as they thought, only sufficient for one tribe, and they were two: a considerable part of their land was held by the ancient inhabitants; and they supposed that if the Lord blessed and increased them in future, as he had in times past, they should be much straitened for room. These formed the grounds and encouragements of their petition. But they evidently undervalued the portion which the Lord had assigned them by lot; and they coveted what belonged to others, while they neglected to get possession of their own land. As a great people, they were better able to labour and to fight, to clear and cultivate the unimproved woodlands, and to dispossess the Canaanites. And as the Lord had blessed them hitherto, they had the more encouragement to confide in his assistance: nor would Joshua show partiality to his kindred, any more than Moses had done.

Joshua gently reproved the claimants for calling their portion "one lot," and pointed out the improvement of which it was capable; and the extensive tracts of land, which might be cleared, and rescued from the Canaanites: and he assured them, that if they exerted their valour, power, and industry, in dependance on the Lord, the iron chariots and the strength of the Canaanites would prove no bar to their success and prosperity.—The mountain, or wood, here spoken of, had perhaps not before been expressly allotted to these tribes; yet it lay within or near the assigned limits.—T. Scott.

Ver. 12. Could not drive out . . . the Canaanites.—If they could not, it must have been because they did not, like Caleb, rely on divine assistance, but reconciled themselves to their dwelling with them, on paying tribute.

Ver. 14, 15. A great people.—Though they could not drive out the Canaanites from their present possessions, they were still anxious for more territory; but Joshua reasons with them on their own principle. "If ye be a great people, show your power; cut down the wood, clear the mountain, and drive out the Canaanites. Show your greatness, (as if he said,) by your exertions."

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. Shiloh.—(Shiloh was situated on a hill in the tribe of Ephraim, though near the borders of Benjamin; about fifteen miles north of Jerusalem, and according to Eusebius 12, or according to Jerome, 10 miles (south) from Shechem or Nablous. It was but a little north from Beth-el and Ai: and near the road from Shechem to Jerusalem. (Judges xxi. 19.) In Jerome's time, Shiloh was ruined; and nothing remarkable was extant, but the foundations of the altar of burnt-offerings which had been erected when the tabernacle stood there.)—Bagster.

3 And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, How long are ye <sup>a</sup> slack to go to possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?

4 Give out from among you three men for each tribe: and I will send them, and they shall rise, and go <sup>a</sup> through the land, and describe it according to the inheritance of them, and they shall come again to me.

5 And they shall divide it into seven parts: <sup>a</sup> Judah shall abide in their coast on the south, and the house of <sup>b</sup> Joseph shall abide in their coast on the north.

6 Ye shall therefore describe the land into seven parts, and bring the description hither to me, that I may cast <sup>a</sup> lots for you here before the Lord our God.

7 But the <sup>b</sup> Levites have no part among you; for the priesthood of the Lord is their inheritance: and <sup>c</sup> Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the east, which Moses the servant of the Lord gave them.

8 ¶ And the men arose, and went away: and Joshua charged them that went to describe the land, saying, Go, and walk <sup>a</sup> through the land, and describe it, and come again to me, that I may here cast lots for you before the Lord in Shiloh.

9 And the men went and passed through the land, and described it by cities into <sup>a</sup> seven parts in a book, and came again to Joshua to the host at Shiloh.

10 ¶ And Joshua cast <sup>a</sup> lots for them in Shiloh before the Lord: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel according to their divisions.

11 ¶ And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families: and the coast of their lot came forth between the children of Judah and the children of Joseph.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—10. The Tabernacle set up at Shiloh.

—This is the first mention of the Tabernacle, after Israel had entered Canaan about seven years. It should seem, that the people had been so occupied with war, and with the division of the land, that they had thought but little of either the tabernacle or its worship. It is the natural tendency of a life of great activity and bustle, and especially of a military life, to make us forget the service of God, and our religious duties; and yet it must be confessed, that a life of indolence and luxury is not less inimical to habits of piety and devotion.

The Tabernacle had remained during the wars in the midst of the camp of Gilgal; but a more convenient place was now found for it at Shiloh, a city of Ephraim, situated nearly in the centre of the tribes, about ten miles from Shechem, and fifteen from Jerusalem, where it continued, as Usher calculates, 328 years. Its name means tranquil, peaceful; and was perhaps given it from the present peaceful circumstances of the times, when "the land rested from war." (Chap. xi. 23.)

The worship of God being first established in the midst of the people, Joshua now urges them to awaken their energies, in order to take possession of the good land which had been assigned to them of God. In order to this, he orders a correct survey to be taken of all the unconquered parts, and having marked it into seven suitable portions, he casts lots to divide it among the seven tribes not yet provided for, that each may maintain his own lot, and, subdue all opposing enemies.

Levi was here excepted, because the Lord was his portion;

Ver. 5. Judah shall abide in their coast on the south, &c.—Not that Judah occupied the south of Canaan, or Joseph the north; but they were so situate in respect to Shiloh, where Joshua now was; and Calmet supposes the meaning of Joshua to be, in reference to these commissioners: "Go, and examine the whole of the country which yet remains to be possessed; do not take into consideration the tribe of Judah, which is on the south, nor the tribe of Ephraim, which is on the north of where we now are; but carefully divide the remaining land, which is not occupied by these tribes, into seven equal parts."

Ver. 9. And describe it . . . in a book.—This is the first act of surveying upon record, and perhaps of mapping, though the late Editor of Calmet suspects, that some plan of the kind might be adopted in the original partition of the earth. [The surveyors seem to have formed some kind of map of the country, as well as a description of it in writing. The Egyptians, from the situation of their fields, as annually overflowed by the Nile, acquired great skill in mensuration and land-surveying; and some of the Israelites had, no doubt, learned these from them, without a knowledge of which they could not properly have divided the land. This is probably the first act of surveying on record.]—Bagster.

12 And their border on the north side was from Jordan; and the border went up to the side of Jericho on the north side, and went up through the mountains westward; and the goings out thereof were at the wilderness of Beth-aven.

13 And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the side of Luz (which <sup>m</sup> is Beth-el) southward; and the border descended to Ataroth-adar, near the hill that lieth on the south side of the nether <sup>n</sup> Beth-horon.

14 And the border was drawn thence, and compassed the corner of the sea southward, from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon southward; and the goings out thereof were at Kirjath-baal (which is Kirjath-jearim) a city of the children of Judah. This was the west quarter.

15 And the south quarter was from the end of <sup>o</sup> Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the west, and went out to the well of <sup>p</sup> waters of Nephtoth:

16 And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the son of <sup>a</sup> Hinnom, and which is in the valley of the giants on the north, and descended to the valley of Hinnom, to the side of Jebusi on the south, and descended to <sup>r</sup> En-rogel,

17 And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-shemesh, and went forth toward Geliath, which is over against the going up of Adummim, and descended to the <sup>s</sup> stone of Bohan the son of Reuben,

18 And passed along toward the side over against <sup>t</sup> Arabah northward, and went down unto Arabah:

19 And the border passed along to the side of Beth-hoglah northward: and the out-goings of the border were at the north <sup>u</sup> bay of the salt sea at the south end of Jordan. This was the south coast.

20 And Jordan was the border of it on the east side. This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coasts thereof round about, according to their families.

21 Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin according to their families, were Jericho, and Beth-hoglah, and the valley of Keziz,

22 And Beth-arabah, and <sup>v</sup> Zemaraim, and <sup>w</sup> Beth-el, and because a scattered residence among the tribes was better adapted to promote the spread of the knowledge of the true God.

We also have a Canaan to possess, but it is our mercy, that having once crossed the Jordan of death, we shall have no enemies to subdue—no land to conquer. Our great Fore-runner has already taken possession for us; and as he assures us that "in his Father's house there are many mansions," he will doubtless prepare a place for us, where every thing will be provided conducive to our eternal happiness; we must not however sit down in indolence or inactivity; but like good soldiers, under the Captain of our salvation, march boldly forward; remembering the words of Joshua and of Caleb, "The land is an exceedingly good land; and if the Lord delight in us, then will he bring us into this good land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey." Num. xiv. 7, 8.

1 The lot of Simeon, 10 of Zebulun, 17 of Issachar, 24 of Asher, 32 of Naphtali, 4 Dan. 49 The children of Israel give an inheritance to Joshua.

AND the second lot came forth to Simeon: even for the tribe of the children of Simeon according to their families: and their inheritance was <sup>a</sup> within the inheritance of the children of Judah.

2 And they had in their inheritance, <sup>b</sup> Beer-sheba, and Sheba, and Moladah, to prove injurious to him, he will not retract, nor disappoint those who confide in him: but if he have obtained an undue advantage in any contract, he will recede from it without murmuring, in compliance with the requisitions of equity and kindness. For "love seeketh not her own," and "doth not behave unseemly." They are most favoured in Providence, who are placed nearest to the sanctuary, and have most advantages, and the fewest hindrances, to the salvation of their souls; though they do not possess worldly influence or distinctions; and as far as we have the choice referred to us, we should always decide by this rule. But a Sovereign God dispenses his favours as he pleases; and one man has his habitation assigned him in "the valley of vision," and another his "in the very region of the shadow of death;" "according to the good pleasure of his will."—Disinterestedness and an unassuming deportment shed a peculiar lustre upon eminent characters: and they who labour most to do good to others, will be indifferent about their own worldly interests, and willing to forego all things, rather than preclude themselves from been in those parts, perhaps this expression, "compassed the corner of the sea southward," (ver. 14.) should be rendered, "made a circuit on the side next the sea towards the south;" for it seems to connect the northern border in the preceding verses, with the southern which follows. 1.—Bagster.

18 And their border was toward ° Jezreel, and Chesulloth, and ° Shunem,

19 And Hapharaim, and Shihon, and Anaharath,

39 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali according to their families, the cities and their villages.

40 ¶ And the seventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families.

41 And the coast of their inheritance was ° Zorah, and ° Eshtaol, and Ir-shemesh, 42 And Shaalabbin, and ° Ajalon, and Jethlah,

48 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families, these cities with their villages.

49 ¶ When they had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coasts, the children of Israel gave an inheritance to Joshua the son of Nun among them :

50 According to the word of the LORD they gave him the city which he asked, even ° Timnath-serah in Mount Ephraim : and he built the city, and dwelt therein.

51 These are the inheritances which ° Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, divided for an inheritance by lot in ° Shiloh before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. So they made an end of dividing the country.

CHAPTER XX.

1 God commandeth, 7 and the children of Israel appoint the six cities of refuge.

THE LORD also spake unto Joshua, saying,

2 Speak to the children of Israel, saying, ° Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses :

3 That the slayer that killeth any person unawares and unwittingly, may flee thither : and they shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood.

the sweet pleasure of communicating felicity. An inheritance in the Canaan above they must and do covet ; but it will be soon enough to enter upon that, when they have done all the service to their brethren, of which they are capable ; nor can any thing more effectually assure them of their title to it, than laying themselves out properly to bring others to desire, to seek, and to obtain possession of it. But Jesus has far outdone all others, in this and in every other respect. " Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—9. The six cities of refuge finally appointed. — The nature and design of these cities have been already considered, both politically and typically (Numb. xxxv. 3) but this chapter furnishes some other points of information. By ver. 4.

Beth-shemesh in the tribe of Judah ; but this latter city is evidently distinguished from it by being assigned by the tribe of Judah to the Levites. (ch. xxi. 16.) Ir-shemesh rendered Polis Sammaus by the LXX seems to be the same as Emmaus or Nicopolis, 22 miles south-east from Lydda, according to the Old Jerusalem Itinerary. — Bagster.

Ver. 43. Ekron. — [Ekron is placed by Eusebius between Ashdod and Jamnia eastward ; and probably the ruined village of Tookrait, mentioned by Dr. Richardson, situated on the top of a hill, and which he says seems to have been a place of considerable consequence, occupies its site.] — Bagster.

Ver. 47. The children of Dan. — This seems here inserted by way of anticipation, as the event did not occur till after the death of Joshua, and is related at length in the 18th chapter of Judges.

4 And when he that doth flee unto one of those cities shall stand at the <sup>b</sup> entering of the gate of the city, and shall declare his cause in the ears of the elders of that city, they shall take him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may <sup>c</sup> dwell among them.

5 And if the <sup>d</sup> avenger of blood pursue after him, then they shall not deliver the slayer up into his hand; because he smote his neighbour unwittingly, and hated him not beforetime.

6 And he shall dwell in that city, until he stand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high priest that shall be in those days: then shall the slayer return, and come unto his own city, and unto his own house, unto the city from whence he fled.

8 And on the other side Jordan by Jericho eastward, they assigned <sup>j</sup> Bezer in the wilderness upon the plain out of the tribe of Reuben, and <sup>k</sup> Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and <sup>l</sup> Golan in Bashan out of the tribe of Manasseh.

9 These were the cities <sup>m</sup> appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them, that whosoever killeth any person at unawares might flee thither, and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood, until he <sup>n</sup> stood before the congregation.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Eight and forty cities given by lot, out of the other tribes, unto the Levites. 43 God gave the land, and rest unto the Israelites, according to his promise.

THEN came near the heads of the fathers of the Levites unto <sup>a</sup> Eleazar the priest, and unto Joshua the son of Nun, and unto the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel;

2 And they spake unto them at <sup>b</sup> Shiloh in the land of Canaan, saying, The LORD <sup>c</sup> commanded by the hand of Moses to give us cities it appears, that when the manslayer arrived at the city of refuge, he passed a kind of trial before he was taken under the protection of the elders; and even afterwards, when the avenger of blood arrived, he was to stand before the congregation, who were to judge whether the fact committed were intentional or accidental, and in the latter case only was he to be protected. These regulations were certainly well calculated to prevent those abuses which have arisen from sanctuaries in other countries.

Another circumstance worthy of observation is, that all the cities of refuge were cities of the Levites, so that though the unhappy manslayer was prevented from going to the tabernacle, he would there receive all the instruction and consolation which it was the peculiar duty of that tribe to administer.

On the typical meaning of these cities of refuge, not to repeat our former remarks, we abridge the following hints from the good Matthew Henry, (on Num. xxxv.) who remarks, that there is a great deal of good gospel couched under this type, to which the apostle to the Hebrews alludes, chap. vi. 18. when he speaks of New Testament believers as having "fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before" them in the gospel.

1. These cities were so distributed in the country, that man-slayers from every tribe had a ready and speedy access to them—so the means of salvation are "nigh unto us," and "now is the accepted time." 2. The refugee was safe, not only in any one of those cities, but even the suburbs pertaining to it.—"There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." 3. Not only native Israelites, but strangers and so-

CHAP. XX. Ver. 7. They appointed Kedesh.—[Kedesh, called Cadesa, or Cadesa, by Josephus, was situated in Upper Galilee, twenty miles south-east from Tyre, according to Eusebius. The cities of refuge were distributed through the land at proper distances from each other, that they might be convenient to every part of the land; and it is said they were situated on emmenes, that they might be easily seen at a distance; the roads leading to them being broad, even, and always kept in good repair. Kedesh and Hebron, were at the two extremities of the land—the former being in Galilee, and the latter in Judah, both in mountainous districts, and Shechem was in mount Ephraim nearly in the centre. Bezer was east of Jordan, in the eastern part of the plain opposite Jericho; Ramoth was about the midst of the country of the two tribes and a half; being about the middle of the mountains of Gilead; to dwell in, with the suburbs thereof for our cattle.

3 And the children of Israel gave unto the Levites out of their inheritance, at the commandment of the LORD, these cities and their suburbs.

4 And the lot came out for the families of the Kohathites: and the children of <sup>d</sup> Aaron the priest, which were of the Levites, had by lot out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities.

5 And the rest of the children of <sup>e</sup> Kohath had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half-tribe of Manasseh, ten cities.

6 And the children of <sup>f</sup> Gershon had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half-tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

7 The children of <sup>g</sup> Merari by their families had out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

8 And the children of Israel <sup>h</sup> gave by lot unto the Levites these cities with their suburbs, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

9 ¶ And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, these cities which are here mentioned by name,

10 Which the children of Aaron, being of the families of the Kohathites, who were of the children of Levi, had: for theirs was the first lot.

11 And they <sup>i</sup> gave them <sup>j</sup> the city of Arba the <sup>k</sup> father of Anak (which city is Hebron) in the <sup>l</sup> hill-country of Judah, with the suburbs thereof round about it.

12 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, gave they to <sup>m</sup> Caleb the son of Jephunneh for his possession.

journers, and even the sons of strangers, had the benefit of their protection. Jews and Gentiles are "all one in Christ Jesus." 4. Though perfectly safe within its limits, if the culprit ever deserted these to return home, he lost all the benefit of protection, and was exposed to the avenger of blood wherever he might meet with him. We must not only "fly to Christ," but "abide in Christ," to derive the benefits of the redemption from him. Apostasy is the road to perdition. "If any man draw back, (says the Lord,) my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Heb. x. 31.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—45. Levites require their cities.—The maintenance of the ministers of religion should be considered, as required by the command of God, and not as a matter of mere choice or discretion. They "who labour in the word and doctrine," have as good a title to a comfortable support, as other men have to their estates; and, on some occasions, must be allowed, without censure, to assert their claim against such as would defraud them: but this should always be done with evident reluctance as a matter of necessity; and with a willingness to refer themselves to the arbitration of impartial persons. And, in ordinary cases, it more accords to the examples of the New Testament, when they choose to "suffer all things," rather than to take any steps which may impede the success of their labours. Yet this excellent spirit in faithful ministers, is so far from excusing those who defraud them, that it greatly aggravates their sin.—It is very desirable that all the temporal concerns, relating to this sacred function, should be amicably settled, and arranged in such a manner, as to subserve its grand object; to occasion to the clergy as and Golan, the capital of Gaulonitis, was situated in the tribe of Manasseh in the land of Bashan.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 3. And the children of Israel gave unto the Levites these cities and their suburbs.—It has been asked, in what sense did the Levites have these cities, seeing they had no inheritance; and seeing other tribes resided constantly among them? It may well be supposed, that they had a right here to choose what houses they pleased to reside in, which they were allowed to sell, but not finally to alienate; and the suburbs, for their cattle, they were not permitted to sell at all. Lev. xxv.

Ver. 4. Tribe of Judah.—[These tribes furnished more habitations to the Levites in proportion than any of the other tribes, because they possessed a more extensive inheritance, agreeably to what Moses had commanded. (Nu.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The two tribes and half with a blessing are sent home. 10 They build the altar of testimony in their journey. 11 The Israelites are offended thereat. 21 They give them good satisfaction.

THEN Joshua called the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh,

2 And said unto them, Ye have kept all few avocations, temptations, or discouragements, as may be; and to afford them every advantage of access to the people; that they may exhort, instruct, and reprove them, without falling under their contempt, or dreading their displeasure. As on this extraordinary occasion, the cities of the priests and Levites were assigned them immediately by God himself, through the casting of lots; so, in ordinary cases, every one should consider his station as determined by divine Providence, and should cheerfully continue to perform the duties of it, though he seem to have more discouragements and inconveniences than the rest of his brethren; and not venture to remove, till satisfied, after serious consideration, prayer, and consultation of his pious friends and seniors, that the Lord calls him to another place.—Happy is the land where faithful ministers of Christ are to be met with in every district! The people will not be impoverished by maintaining them: nor will they in general much complain in this respect; so long as ministers diligently apply themselves to dispel ignorance and error, and to diffuse the light of divine truth; to stop the progress of immorality, and promote the practice of universal holiness; and, by their doctrine, influence, example, and prayers, to render all within their sphere more wise, holy, and happy.—Persons of eminence should take the lead in every good work, that their examples may excite others: always remembering, that pre-eminence in real usefulness is the most valuable distinction.—In due season, all the promises of God will be accomplished to his true people: and their believing hope, and patient waiting, and self-denying obedience, will terminate in joyful songs of triumph, and thankful celebrations of his faithfulness, love, and power. Then will it be universally acknowledged that “there hath not failed aught of any good thing, which the Lord hath spoken;” nay, that he has exceeded their largest expectations, and made them more than conquerors, and brought them to their delightful rest and inheritance. May none of us at that season be found among his enemies, “who shall be destroyed for ever!”—Let no true believer despond, because of delays, tribulations, and temptations; for God has confirmed his promise and covenant “with an oath, that we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us.” Let us then beg of him to enable us to confide in him entirely, to obey him unreservedly, and to wait for him patiently; for we have need of patience, that “after we have done the will of God, we might receive the promise.”—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—20. Joshua dismisses the two tribes and a half to their possession on the east of Jordan.—The three last verses of the preceding chapter may be here cited xxxv. 8.) It is worthy of remark, that the principal part of this tribe, whose business was to minister at the sanctuary, which sanctuary was afterwards established at Jerusalem, had their appointment nearest to that city; so that they were always within reach of the sacred work which God had appointed them.—Baxter.

Ver. 35. Dimnah with her suburbs.—This verse and the following are wholly omitted by the Massorah, and in some of the most correct printed Hebrew Bibles; but they are found in a great number of MSS., in various editions, and in all the ancient versions: beside which, the cities here named are wanted, to make up the number mentioned in ver. 41. See Kennicott and Boothroyd.

Ver. 41. Forty and eight cities, with their suburbs.—These have been thought a great number for so small a tribe, being only 26,000; but it ought to be considered, 1. That many of these were probably small and inconsiderable, which may be inferred from their being not mentioned in any other part of Scripture. 2. Among these are reckoned the cities of refuge for man-slayers. 3. They were not exclusively appropriated to this tribe, so as to prevent Israelites of other tribes from residing with them. Thus in Geba (or Geboah) that <sup>a</sup> Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, and have obeyed my voice in all that I <sup>b</sup> commanded you :

3 Ye have not left your brethren these many days unto this day, but have kept the charge of the commandment of the LORD your God.

4 And now the LORD your God hath given rest unto your brethren, as he promised them : therefore now return ye, and get you unto your tents, and unto the land of your possession, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave <sup>c</sup> you on the other side Jordan.

5 But take <sup>d</sup> diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, which Moses the servant of the LORD charged you, to <sup>e</sup> love the LORD your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to <sup>f</sup> cleave unto him, and to <sup>g</sup> serve him with all your heart and with all your soul.

6 So Joshua <sup>h</sup> blessed them, and sent them away : and they went unto their tents.

7 Now to the one half of the tribe of Manasseh Moses had given possession in Bashan : i but unto the other half thereof gave Joshua among their brethren on this side Jordan westward. And when Joshua sent them away also unto their tents, then he blessed them,

8 And he spake unto them, saying, Return with much <sup>j</sup> riches unto your tents, and with very much cattle, with silver, and with gold, and with brass, and with iron, and with very much raiment : <sup>k</sup> divide the spoil of your enemies with your brethren.

9 And the children of Reuben and the children of Gad and the half-tribe of Manasseh returned; and departed from the children of Israel out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go unto the country of <sup>l</sup> Gilead, to the land of their possession, whereof they were possessed, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

10 ¶ And when they came unto the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan, the children of Reuben and the children of Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh built there an altar by Jordan, a great <sup>m</sup> altar to see to.

11 ¶ And the children of Israel <sup>n</sup> heard say, Behold, the children of Reuben and the children of Gad and the half-tribe of Manasse, have built an altar over against the land <sup>o</sup> of Canaan, in the borders of Jordan, at the passage of the children of Israel.

12 And when the children of Israel heard of it, the whole congregation of the children of Israel gathered themselves together at Shiloh, to go up to war against them.

13 And the children of Israel sent unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh, into the land of <sup>p</sup> Gilead, Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, 14 And with him ten princes, of <sup>q</sup> each chief house a prince throughout all the tribes of Israel; and each one was a <sup>r</sup> head of the house of their fathers among the thousands of Israel.

15 And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh, unto the land of Gilead, and they spake with them, saying,

16 Thus saith the whole congregation of the LORD, What trespass is this that ye have committed against the God of Israel, to turn away this day from following the LORD, in that ye have builded you an altar, that ye might <sup>s</sup> rebel this day against the LORD ?

17 Is the iniquity of <sup>t</sup> Peor too little for us, from which we are not cleansed until this day, although there was a plague in the congregation of the LORD, 18 But that ye must turn away this day from following the LORD ? and <sup>u</sup> it will be, seeing ye rebel to-day against the LORD, that to-morrow he will be <sup>v</sup> wroth with the whole congregation of Israel.

19 Notwithstanding, if the land of your possession be unclean, then pass ye over unto the land of the possession of the LORD, wherein the LORD's tabernacle <sup>w</sup> dwelleth, and take possession among us : but rebel not against the LORD, nor rebel against us, in building you an altar beside the altar of the LORD our God.

20 Did not <sup>x</sup> Achan the son of Zerah commit a trespass in the accursed thing, and wrath fell on all the congregation of Israel ? and that man perished not alone in his iniquity.

21 ¶ Then the children of Reuben and the

as a suitable preface to this chapter. "The Lord gave unto Israel all the land which he sware to give unto their fathers; and they possessed it and dwelt therein." To this it has been objected, that much of the land remained yet to be possessed; (chap. xiii. 1.) and from many parts they had not been able to drive out the Canaanites. But it has also been replied, 1. That the whole land had been marked out, and divided to them by lot. 2. They had as much in actual possession as they could at that time occupy. 3. Those who were not expelled were rendered tributary. The land therefore was actually subdued, and the promise of the extirpation of the Canaanites depended only on their farther exertions and obedience. 4. A proof that it was so considered, appears in the dismissal of the two tribes and a half who had crossed the Jordan to assist their brethren, and were now about to be sent home in peace, their assistance being no longer judged necessary. 5. A still farther extension of their conquests took place in the reign of David, soon after the establishment of the Jewish monarchy. (1 Chron. xviii.)

We have already seen (chap. iv. 12, 13.) that the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, who had chosen their portion on the outside of Jordan eastward, had furnished a quota of 40,000 men to assist their brethren in the conquest of the promised land. The war being now considered as closed, and their contract with Moses honourably fulfilled, Joshua dismisses them with his blessing to their homes and families, from which they are supposed to have been absent full seven years, though only on the other side of Jordan. On this occasion Joshua gives them a full share of the spoil taken from their enemies, and they return laden with the riches they had acquired.

On their arrival on the other side of Jordan, they immediately erect a vast altar of earth and stones, as a conspicuous monument of gratitude to Jehovah for their safe return; but their brethren of the other tribes hearing of it, suspect it to be intended for an idolatrous purpose, and threaten to go to war with them on that account. It is agreed, however, that previously Phinehas and ten princes of the house of Israel should be deputed to visit them, and inquire into the truth of the report, remonstrating on the sin and folly of such a mode of conduct. From this circumstance, before we proceed farther, we may derive the very useful maxim of the town-clerk of Ephesus, to "do nothing rashly," (Acts xix. 36.) especially in matters of religion. There is no doubt but many schisms have occurred in the church, and persecutions have been raised from them, merely from the want of a little dispassionate inquiry. Many orthodox hearts have been charged with heresy, merely through their ignorance of religious terms; and many divisions among those who are united in Christ their head, have taken place, through false reports and misunderstanding like that before us. Excellent is the Jewish proverb on another occasion: "Consider, take advice, and (then) speak." (Judges xix. 30.)

So neither, on the other hand, were they forbidden to reside among the other tribes, for the performance of their official duties. See Deut. xviii. 6, &c.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 10. Borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan.—The reader may observe that the verb are is in the text in the Italic character, and we conceive this verb should be singular, (is.) to agree with the river Jordan, which is the proper antecedent.—An altar by Jordan.—That is, on the east side, after they had repassed the river, and within their own territory.

children of Gad and the half-tribe of Manasseh answered, and said unto the heads of the thousands of Israel,

22 The LORD <sup>a</sup> God of gods, the LORD God of gods, he <sup>v</sup> knoweth, and <sup>a</sup> Israel he shall know; if it be in <sup>a</sup> rebellion, or if in transgression against the LORD, (save us not this day,)

23 That we have built us an altar to turn from following the LORD, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings thereon, let the LORD himself <sup>v</sup> require it;

24 And if we have not rather done it for fear of this thing, saying, <sup>a</sup> In time to come your children might speak unto our children, saying, What have ye to do with the LORD God of Israel?

25 For the LORD hath made Jordan a border between us and you, ye children of Reuben and children of Gad; <sup>a</sup> ye have no part in the LORD: so shall your children make our children <sup>a</sup> cease from fearing the LORD.

26 Therefore we said, Let us now prepare to build us an altar; not for burnt-offering, nor for sacrifice:

27 But that it may be a <sup>v</sup> witness between us and you, and our generations after us, that we might do the service of the LORD <sup>a</sup> before him with our burnt-offerings, and with our sacrifices, and with our peace-offerings; that your children may not say to our children in time to come, Ye have no part in the LORD.

28 Therefore said we, that it shall be, when they should so say to us or to our generations in time to come, that we may say again, Behold the <sup>b</sup> pattern of the altar of the LORD, which our fathers made, not for burnt-offerings, nor for sacrifices; but it is a witness between us and you.

29 God <sup>v</sup> forbid that we should rebel against the LORD, and turn this day from following the LORD, to build an altar for burnt-offerings, for meat-offerings, or for sacrifices, beside the altar of the LORD our God that is before his tabernacle.

30 ¶ And when Phinehas the priest, and the princes of the congregation and heads of the thousands of Israel which were with him, heard the words that the children of Reuben and the children of Gad and the children of Manasseh spake, it <sup>v</sup> pleased them.

children of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, seem to have been struck with horror at the charge of an idolatrous intention, and solemnly appeal to "the Lord God of gods" for the integrity of their intentions. They then explain the design of their altar, not to be for worship in any way, but merely as a monument and a witness that they also were Israelites, and worshippers of Jehovah, and therefore was this altar made after "the pattern of the altar of the Lord," and "not for burnt-offerings nor for sacrifices."

Phinehas and his companions seem delighted to discover that they had been misinformed, and that there was no just ground for their suspicions; and when they returned with their favourable report, the people also "blessed God," and gave up all their hostile prejudices. Upon this incident the excellent Scott founds the following judicious observations. "Happy will it be when all professed Christians shall learn in their differences to copy the example of Israel, recorded in this chapter; and to unite zeal and steady adherence to the cause tion, give all the satisfaction in their power, and with great propriety and reverence, appeal to that God against whom they were supposed to have rebelled."—Bagster.

Ver. 22. The Lord God of gods.—Hebrew, el Elohîm, JEHOVAH, three names of the Deity, which Luther renders, "The strong God the Lord; the Jehovah."

Ver. 24. Ed.—That is, a witness; our translators have placed this word in italics, as not found in the common editions of the Hebrew Bible, though it is in some of those more early printed, in several of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in the Arabic and Syriac; there can therefore be no doubt of its being genuine.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Joshua's exhortation before his death, 3 by former benefits, 5 by promises, 11 and by threatenings.

AND it came to pass a long time after that the LORD had given <sup>a</sup> rest unto Israel from all their enemies round about, that Joshua waxed <sup>b</sup> old and <sup>a</sup> stricken in age.

2 And Joshua <sup>a</sup> called for all Israel, and for their elders, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers, and said unto them, I am old and stricken in age:

3 And ye have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto all these nations because of you; for the <sup>a</sup> LORD your God is he that hath fought for you.

4 Behold, I have <sup>v</sup> divided unto you by lot these nations that remain, to be an inheritance for your tribes, from Jordan, with all the nations that I have cut off, even unto the great sea <sup>a</sup> westward.

5 ¶ And the LORD your God, <sup>a</sup> he shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight; and ye shall possess their land, as the LORD your God hath <sup>v</sup> promised unto you.

6 Be ye therefore very <sup>v</sup> courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses, <sup>a</sup> that ye turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left;

7 That <sup>v</sup> ye come not among these nations, these that remain among you; neither make of truth, with candour, meekness, a readiness to understand each other, to explain, and to be satisfied with the sufficient explanation and concessions of their brethren. Oh! how long shall acrimony, misrepresentation, ridicule, opprobrious epithets, and an obstinate pertinacity in defending every title, and carrying every sentiment to the utmost extreme—how long, I say, shall these things disgrace the very name of religious controversy, and confirm the prejudices of thousands against those precious truths, which have often been, and still are, contended for in so odious a manner!—May the Lord increase the number of those who endeavour to keep "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace;" and may increasing grace and consolation be with all who love "the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, by whatever name they are distinguished!"

CHAP. XXIII. 1—16. Joshua's farewell address to the heads of Israel.—Joshua and Caleb appear to have been of one heart, and in all respects like-minded. Faithful and courageous in the cause of the God of Israel, Joshua encouraged his brethren persons called together: 1. The elders, (Zikēnim.) or princes of the tribes, who composed the senate. 2. The heads, (Rashim.) or chiefs of families. 3. The judges, (Shophetim.) who heard and decided causes; and, 4. Officers (Shoterim.) who put the laws in execution.

Ver. 5. He shall expel and drive them out.—"He shall disinherit them . . . and ye shall inherit."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 7. Come not among.—[Have no civil or social contracts with them, as these will infallibly lead to spiritual affinities—in consequence of which, ye will make honourable "mention of the name of their gods," "swear by them," and "serve them" in their abominable rites, and "bow yourselves unto them," as your creators and preservers. All this will follow by simply coming among them. He who walks in the counsel of the ungodly, will soon stand in the way of sinners, and sit in the seat of scorners.]—Bagster

" mention of the name of their gods, nor cause to swear by them, neither serve them, nor bow yourselves unto them :

8 ° But cleave <sup>p</sup> unto the LORD your God as ye have done unto this day.

9 ° For the LORD hath driven out from before you great nations and strong : but as for you, no man hath been able to stand before you unto this day.

10 One ° man of you shall chase a thousand : for the LORD your God, he it is that fighteth for you, ° as he hath promised you.

11 Take good heed therefore unto ° yourselves, that ye love the LORD your God.

12 ¶ Else if ye do in any wise go ° back, and cleave unto the remnant of these nations, even these that remain among you, and shall make ° marriages with them, and go in unto them, and they to you :

14 And, behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth : and ye know in all your hearts and in all your ° souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the LORD your God spake concerning you ; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof.

15 Therefore it shall come to pass, that as all good things are come upon you, which the LORD your God promised you ; so shall the LORD bring upon you ° all evil things, until he have destroyed you from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you.

16 When ye have transgressed the covenant of the LORD your God, which he commanded you, and have gone and served other gods, and bowed yourselves to them ; then shall the ° anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and ye shall perish quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Joshua assembles the tribes at Shechem. 2 A brief history of God's benefits from Terah. 14 He renemeth the covenant between them and God. 26 A stone the witness of the covenant. 29 Joshua's age, death, and burial. 32 Joseph's bones are buried. 33 Eleazar dieth.

AND Joshua gathered all the tribes of Israel to Shechem, and ° called for the elders of Israel, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers ; and they ° presented themselves before God.

2 ¶ And Joshua said unto all the people, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Your ° fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor : and they served other gods.

3 And I ° took your father Abraham from the other side of the flood, and led him throughout all the land of Canaan, and multiplied his seed, and gave ° him Isaac.

4 And I gave unto Isaac Jacob and Esau : and I gave unto ° Esau mount Seir, to possess it ; but ° Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.

5 I sent Moses also and Aaron, and I ° plagued Egypt, according to that which I did among them : and afterward I brought you out.

6 And I brought your fathers out of Egypt :

to go forward and take possession of the territory allotted them ; but at the same time he cautions them against temporizing in religion, or halting between God and Baal, assuring them that their success mainly depended on their obedience. " If ye shall in any wise go back, and cleave unto the remnant of these nations, and shall make marriages with them," &c. then " know for a certainty that the Lord your God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you ; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye perish from off this good land, which the Lord your God hath given you." Of this we shall find many instances in the prosecution of their history.

Having thus warned them of the consequences of rebellion, their leader appeals to them for the truth and fidelity of the divine promises. " And behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth ; and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you." Part of this respects Joshua himself, and part the Israelites. " I am," says the aged veteran, " I am going the way of all the earth." It has often been remarked by writers leaning to Deism, that the patriarchs on the approach of death say nothing of futurity ; but speak simply of descending to the grave. Joshua, however, must here be considered as a national leader, and, as such, addressing the heads of the nation, who, as such, were not immortal. " Your fathers, where are they ? and the prophets, do they live for ever ?" (Zech. i. 5.)

It is not easy, however, to account for their tranquillity in death, but upon the principle that by faith they looked beyond the grave—as the New Testament assures us they all did ; and laboured and suffered " that they might obtain a better resurrection ;" which also our Lord himself strongly asserts in his confutation of the Sadducees. (Matt. xxii. 31, 32. Heb. xi. 35.) None, indeed, but the most ignorant of mankind, and hardly they, can contemplate the prospect of futurity without the forebodings of an hereafter. Even the untutored Indian looks for another state of existence beyond the great flood ; and the unfortunate African anticipates a country where he shall be no more a slave ; can we then suppose the ancient Hebrews, the only nation thus favoured with divine revelation, to have been totally ignorant on this momentous subject ? It is true, that national obedience can look only to temporal rewards, because nations (as above remarked) exist not beyond the grave ; but it is utterly incredible that men devoted to God, as were Moses and Joshua, should thus reconcile themselves to a state of non-existence, or to eternal separation from that Being to whom their whole lives had been devoted.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—33. In the preceding chapter we find all Israel summoned to Shiloh, and here to Shechem, which was at the distance of ten or twelve miles. This has given great perplexity to the commentators. After reading their various opinions, the present writer begs leave to submit the following solution of the difficulty. The army though drawn out at Shechem, might probably nearly reach to Shiloh. Here the heads of the tribes and of the families, &c. presented themselves before God—i. e. at the tabernacle ; and were addressed by Joshua, as in the preceding chapter, which should perhaps conclude with the first verse of this, rendered in the following manner : " Now Joshua had gathered all the tribes of Israel to Shechem, and called for the elders," &c. " and they presented themselves before God ;" that is, before the tabernacle in Shiloh, where he addressed them, as already stated.

In the second verse of this chapter, we are told that Joshua addressed " ALL the people ;" that is, as many as could be collected together, and who, doubtless, came to meet him towards Shiloh : and when he had done speaking, he " took a great stone, and set it up under an oak that was by (or near) the sanctuary of the Lord ;" but in Genesis (xxxv. 4.) we read of an oak that was " by (or near) Shechem ;" Now, supposing this to be the same oak, and that it was situated nearly in the centre of the two places, the accounts seem easily reconciled, and Joshua might dismiss the people to their several stations, v. 15, he returned (or was carried back) to Shiloh.

This second address, which was to the people at large, and ended in a renewal of their covenant with Jehovah, contains a retrospect of the people's former conduct, and of the dealings of God towards them, which in general requires no comment, as we have already gone through the items. From ver. 2 to 13, Joshua speaks as a prophet, in the name of the Lord ; in the following, he argues with them as a man and a brother, on the evils of idolatry, and on the necessity of serving the true God alone. And if they would not, still he gives them to understand that he and his family had made up their minds—" We will serve the Lord ;" a resolution well becoming every master of a family, who professes to know and fear God.

The people very readily promise all that he recommends : but

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. And Joshua gathered.—The Hebrew may certainly be rendered, " Now Joshua had gathered," the perfect tense being used for the imperfect, of which we remarked a very early instance ; see note on Gen. ii. 2. Some copies of the LXX. read Shiloh in this place, but it wants the support of MSS., and seems merely a conjectural emendation.—Shechem.—As it is immediately added, that " they presented themselves before God," which is supposed to mean at the tabernacle ; some are of opinion that Joshua caused it to be conveyed from Shiloh to Shechem on this occasion, to give the greater solemnity to his last meeting with the people. The Vatican and Alexandrian copies of the Septuagint, however, read Shiloh, both here and in verse 25 : which many suppose to have been the original reading. Dr. Shuckford supposes, that the covenant was made at Shechem, and that the people went to Shiloh to confirm it. But the most probable opinion seems to be that of Dr. Kennicott, that when all the tribes were assembled at Shechem, Joshua called the chiefs to him on that mount, which had before been consecrated by the law, and by the altar which he had erected. [Bagster and ye came unto the sea; and the Egyptians pursued after your fathers with chariots and horsemen unto the Red sea.

7 And when they cried unto the LORD, he put darkness between you and the Egyptians, and brought the sea upon them, and covered them; and your eyes have seen what I have done in Egypt: and ye dwelt in the wilderness a <sup>k</sup> long season.

8 And I brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other side Jordan; and they fought with you: and I gave them into your hand, that ye might possess their land; and I destroyed them from before you.

9 Then Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, arose and warred against Israel, and <sup>m</sup> sent and called Balaam the son of Beor to curse you:

10 But <sup>n</sup> I would not hearken unto Balaam; therefore he blessed you still: so I delivered you out of his hand.

11 And <sup>o</sup> ye went over Jordan, and came unto Jericho: and the men of <sup>p</sup> Jericho fought against you, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Gishgashites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I delivered them into your hand.

12 And I sent the <sup>q</sup> hornet before you, which drove them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; but <sup>r</sup> not with thy sword, nor with thy bow, 13 And I have given <sup>s</sup> you a land for which ye did not labour, and <sup>t</sup> cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them; of the vineyards and olive-yards which ye planted not do ye eat.

14 ¶ Now <sup>u</sup> therefore fear the LORD, and serve him in <sup>v</sup> sincerity and in truth: and put <sup>w</sup> away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve ye the LORD.

15 And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, <sup>x</sup> choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether <sup>y</sup> the gods which your fathers served that <sup>z</sup> were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: <sup>a</sup> but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD.

16 And the people answered and said, God forbid that we should forsake the LORD, to serve other gods;

knowing their fickleness and proneness to idolatry, he stops them short, as it were, and puts them on reflection: "Ye cannot serve the Lord"—ye who have served the gods of all the heathen round about you—ye who are so fickle in your disposition, and so unsanctified in heart—ye who have still idols secreted among you—ye serve the Lord! No: you must first put away your idols: for "he is a holy God and a jealous God; he will not forgive," or rather, he will not "BEAR with your transgressions nor your sins." Such appears to be the spirit and drift of Joshua's address, and thus they evidently understood it, by their reply—"Nay;" notwithstanding he be so holy—so jealous, yet—"WE WILL SERVE THE LORD."

This seems to have been Joshua's last public address: for

Ver. 14. Put away the gods which your father's served.—[From this exhortation of Joshua, we not only learn that the Israelites still retained some relics of idolatry, but what sort of gods they were, to the worship of which they were attached. 1. Those whom their fathers worshipped on the other side of the flood, or the river Euphrates, i. e. the gods of the Chaldeans, fire, light, the sun, &c. 2. Those of the Egyptians, Apis, Anubis, serpents, vegetables, &c. 3. Those of the Amorites, Moabites, Canaanites, &c., Baal-peor, Ashtaré, &c. How astonishing is it, that after all that God had done for them, and all the miracles they had seen, there should still be found among them both idols and idolaters.]—BAGSTER.

Ver. 19. Ye cannot serve.—Some modern interpreters have supposed that the true reading here should be, "Cease ye not to serve." The conjecture is ingenious, but unsupported by any MSS. or ancient version; nor is it necessary. The original word does not always imply an impossibility. It here implies only a doubt; as if a general should say to his troops, ardently desirous to attack the enemy, Ye cannot conquer them!—while he seems to doubt their courage, he, in fact, exhorts them to display it.—Dr. Boothroyd. Saurin seems to understand it in a similar way.—He will not forgive.—Rather, "He will not bear" with you: this is a frequent sense of the original term. So Boothroyd.

17 For the LORD our God, he it is that brought us up and our fathers out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage, and which did those great signs in our sight, and preserved us in all the way wherein we went, and among all the people through whom we passed:

18 And the LORD drave out from before us all the people, even the Amorites which dwelt in the land: therefore <sup>a</sup> will we also serve the LORD; for he is our God.

19 And Joshua said unto the people, Ye <sup>b</sup> cannot serve the LORD: for <sup>c</sup> he is a holy God; he is a <sup>d</sup> jealous God; <sup>e</sup> he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins.

20 If <sup>f</sup> ye forsake the LORD, and serve strange gods, then he will turn and do you hurt, and consume you, <sup>g</sup> after that he hath done you good.

21 And the people said unto Joshua, Nay; but we will serve the LORD.

22 And Joshua said unto the people, Ye <sup>h</sup> are witnesses against yourselves that ye have <sup>i</sup> chosen you the LORD, to serve him. And they said, We are witnesses.

23 Now therefore <sup>j</sup> put away, said he, the strange gods which are among you, and incline your <sup>k</sup> heart unto the LORD God of Israel.

24 And the people said <sup>l</sup> unto Joshua, The LORD our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey.

25 So Joshua made a covenant with the people that day, and set them a statute and an ordinance in Shechem.

26 ¶ And Joshua wrote these words in the book of the law of God, and took a great stone, and set it up there <sup>m</sup> under an oak, that was by the sanctuary of the LORD.

27 And Joshua said unto all the people, Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us; for it hath <sup>n</sup> heard all the words of the LORD which he spake unto us: it shall <sup>o</sup> be therefore a witness unto you, lest ye deny your God.

28 So Joshua let the people depart, every man unto his inheritance.

29 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died, being a hundred and ten years old.

30 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in <sup>p</sup> Timnath-serah, which is in mount Ephraim, on the north side of the hill of Gaash.

after this—evidently at no great distance—Joshua "died, being a hundred and ten years old." We are told at the beginning of the preceding chapter, that it was a long time after the Lord had given Israel rest, that Joshua waxed old; this cannot therefore be supposed less than 25 years after the death of Moses, and about 7 after the division of the land among the tribes. We read of no public funeral, nor of any general mourning for this great man: perhaps, as he was buried in the border of his own inheritance, he may have ordered his funeral to be private, and have forbidden the mourning of the people.

His character lives in his history, and does not need enlargement. He was courageous, disinterested, upright; and a faith-

Ver. 22. Ye are witnesses.—[Ye have been sufficiently apprized of the difficulties in your way—of God's holiness, and the nature of his service—your own weakness, inconstancy, and insufficiency—your need of the Divine help, and the hope of assistance held out in the law,—and the awful consequences of apostasy: and now ye make your choice. Remember then that ye are witnesses against yourselves; and your own conscience will be witness, judge, and executioner.]—BAGSTER.

Ver. 27. This stone shall be a witness.—This is an eloquent figure of speech, not unusual either in the Scriptures or the classics. Livy relates, "The Equi, notwithstanding the peace so lately concluded with the Romans, had made an excursion into the Roman territory, and retired loaded with booty. Three ambassadors were sent from Rome to the camp of the Equi, to complain of the offence, and to demand back the booty. The General of the Equi informed the Roman ambassadors, that they might deliver their message to an oak which shaded his tent. On this, one of the ambassadors, turning away, said, "This venerable oak and all the gods shall know that you have violated the peace; they shall now hear our complaints, and may they also soon be witnesses, when we revenge with our arms the violation of divine and human rites."

31 And <sup>a</sup> Israel served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that <sup>c</sup> overlived Joshua, and which had <sup>b</sup> known all the works of the LORD, that he had done for Israel.

ful servant of Jehovah. In all these respects he resembled Moses, though not of equal rank, or admitted to equal privileges with his master. He was also a type of Christ, and in one respect exceeded Moses: His name, in Greek Jesus, signifies a Saviour: Moses left the people on the other side of Jordan; Joshua brought them into the land of Canaan.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON JOSHUA.

[THE Book of Joshua is one of the most important documents in the Old Testament. The rapid conquest of the Promised Land, and the actual settlement of the Israelites in it, afford a striking accomplishment of the divine predictions to Abraham and the succeeding Patriarchs; and, at the same time, bear the most unequivocal and ample testimony to the authenticity of this sacred book. Several of the transactions related in it are confirmed by the traditions current among heathen nations, and preserved by ancient profane historians of undoubted character. Thus there are ancient monuments extant, which prove that the Carthaginians were a colony of Syrians who escaped from Joshua; as also that the inhabitants of Leptis in Africa came originally from the Sidonians, who abandoned their country on account of the calamities which it was overwhelmed. PROCOPIUS relates, that the Phœnicians fled before the Hebrews into Africa, and spread themselves abroad as far as the pillars of Hercules, and adds, "In Numidia where now stands the city Tipisla (Tangiers,) they have erected two columns, on which, in Phœnician characters, is the following inscription:—'We are the Phœnicians, who fled from the face of Jesus (or Joshua) the son of Naue (Nun.)'" The overthrow of Og, king of Bashan, and the Anakim, is considered as having given rise to the fable of the overthrow of the giants; and the tempest of hail-stones was transformed by the poets into a tempest of stones, with which Jupiter overthrew the enemies of the Trojans. In Numidia, exactly the country where Joshua fought with the children of Anak.]—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

THE term JUDGES, (Hebrew, Shophetim.) was originally applied to those whom Moses, by the advice of his father-in-law Jethro, appointed to assist him in hearing and redressing the complaints of the people; they also formed a kind of Legislature under Moses, and from them, in after times, originated the Jewish Sanhedrim. The Judges here mentioned, were not only magistrates, and some of them prophets, but generally military chiefs, and avengers of the people. Some appear to have exercised their office only in particular tribes, or districts, while the authority of others was more general and extensive. Of the former, some may have been contemporary.

The writer of this book is not known; but is generally supposed to have been the prophet Samuel, the last of the Judges, who resigned his authority, by the people's desire, to Saul, their first monarch. Hence it is repeatedly said, "In those days there was no king in Israel," which plainly indicates that the kindly government had begun before this book was written.

The history of this book is supposed to commence about 1443 years before Christ, and to extend over a period of nearly 320 years, to the time of Eli. It is sufficiently evident that the people soon degenerated, but it may be justly inferred from circumstances, that the degeneracy was not universal, nor continued throughout the whole period. The first sixteen chapters seem to follow nearly in chronological order, from the death of Joshua to the death of Samson, but the last five chapters contain some distressing incidents, which form a sort of appendix to the former part of the history.

The learned Dr. Graves remarks,—"By a superficial reader of the sacred history, the whole period under the Judges may be easily mistaken for an uninterrupted series of idolatries and crimes, from his not observing that the lapses which incurred punishment, and the divine deliverances which attended repentance, are related so fully and distinctly as to occupy almost the whole narrative; while long periods, when under the government of the Judges, the people followed God, and the land enjoyed peace, are passed over in a single verse, as productive of no event which required a particular detail."

2 And the LORD said, <sup>c</sup> Judah shall go up: behold, I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah said unto Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites; and I likewise will go with <sup>d</sup> thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—16. The conquest of Canaan resumed.—Joshua, before his death, had exhorted Israel to fresh activity in subduing the Canaanites, and after his death, his words seem to have made a greater impression upon them than before; they therefore inquire of the LORD, (probably by Urim and Thummim,) who should lead the attack; and the answer was Judah: and Judah invited Simeon to accompany him; which was the more proper, as the land of Simeon lay within the territory of Judah, and they had a common interest in the war. Their first attack was on Adoni-bezek, (or the lord of Bezek,) who, though he was not distinguished by the title of king, was a notorious tyrant, and delighted in maiming and torturing the neighbouring chiefs, (or kings of towns,) who fell into his hands; of whom he acknowledges that threescore and ten, deprived by him of their thumbs and great toes, had been reduced to gather up their food, like dogs, beneath his table. The Hebrew general, knowing this, retaliates his cruelty upon himself, who is indeed compelled to acknowledge, that he was justly served, and considers it as the righteous visitation of heaven upon his crimes. Judah next attacked Jerusalem, and having gained possession at least of some part of the city, set fire to it; and the troops having brought with them the miserable tyrant Adoni-bezek, probably left him to perish, with as little pity as he had been accustomed to show to others.

Some difficulty has been found in reconciling this account with other passages of Scripture on this subject, and particularly with the 21st verse of this chapter, which speaks of the city as jointly occupied by the Benjamites and the Jebusites. The fact appears to us thus: Jerusalem (or Jebus) bordered on the territories both of Judah and of Benjamin, and both seem to have had claims to it, or to different parts of it; for being situated on several hills, separately fortified, they might be possessed by different powers at the same time, and this

Ver. 7. Having their thumbs and great toes cut off.—Heb. "The thumbs of their hands and of their feet." [This was not an unusual act of cruelty in ancient times towards enemies.—Ælian informs us, that "the Athenians, at the instigation of Cleon, son of Cleonetus, made a decree that all the inhabitants of the island of Ægina should have the thumb cut off from the right hand, so that they might ever after be disabled from holding a spear; yet might handle an oar." It was a custom among those Romans who did not like a military life, to cut off their thumbs, that they might be incapable of serving in the army; and for the same reason parents sometimes cut off the thumbs of their children. Suetonius, Vit. Aug. 24.]—Bagster.

10 ¶ And Judah went against the Canaanites that dwelt in <sup>1</sup>Hebron: (now the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba:) and they slew Sheshai, and Ahiman, and Talmai.

15 And she said unto him, Give me a <sup>n</sup> blessing: for thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And Caleb gave her the upper springs and the nether springs.

17 ¶ And Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they slew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly destroyed it. And the name of the city was called <sup>1</sup>Hormah.

18 Also Judah took <sup>s</sup>Gaza with the coast thereof, and Askelon with the coast thereof, and Ekron with the coast thereof.

23 And the house of Joseph sent to despoil <sup>c</sup>Beth-el. (Now the name of the city before was <sup>d</sup>Luz.)

24 And the spies saw a man come forth out of the city, and they said unto him, Show us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and <sup>e</sup>we will show thee mercy.

25 And when he showed them the entrance into the city, they smote the city with the edge of the sword; but they let go the man and all his family.

28 And it came to pass, when Israel was strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.

fact will reconcile the different accounts. 1. Joshua captured and slew the king of Jerusalem, when he combined with the four other kings against Gibeon; but there is no mention of his taking the city, (Josh. x. 23.) 2. Judah (as mentioned in ver. 4. of this chapter) took the city, or at least part of it, burned the houses, and put the inhabitants to the sword. 3. The children of Benjamin took that part of the city which belonged to the Jebusites, but the latter held "the strong hold of Zion," and therefore could not be dispossessed till the time of David, for whom Providence seems to have reserved the conquest. (2 Sam. v. 6—9.) Thus difficulties which at first seem appalling, may often easily be removed by a little calm reflection, which is alike necessary in the comprehending all ancient histories.

Several pleasing incidents follow in this chapter; as, 1. The interview between Caleb and his daughter, which while it affords an interesting picture of ancient manners, at the same time may teach us the unsatisfactory nature of all temporal blessings: a south land requires springs of water, and upper and nether springs are both essential to our happiness. 2. Though Hobab, the Kenite, at first refused to go with Israel, we here find his children have an inheritance in the promised land; a strong indication that he afterwards repented, and either accompanied or followed Moses.

Ver. 17—36. Farther prosecution of the war, and some partial failures.—The first and most remarkable of these was that of Judah, of whom we read, "The Lord was with Judah, and he drave out (the inhabitants of) the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron." This has been quoted by Deistical writers as a reproach, not only to Judah, but to Jehovah; for which, however, there can be no just ground, for it is impossible that a Hebrew, whether prophet or not, who believed that the Lord had carried Israel through the Red sea, or even the river Jordan, or who had arrested in their favour the light of the sun and of the moon, could find it impossible, or even difficult, to destroy a few iron chariots. The plain fact appears to be, that when "the Lord was with Judah, he (Judah) drave out the inhabitants of the mountain;" or, as the margin more literally reads, "he possessed the mountain;" but afterwards having vainly, perhaps, trusted too much in their own strength, and not having the Lord now with them, "they could not drive out (or dispossess) the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron," with which, without a miracle, they could not cope.

It was for the same reason, doubtless, that the other tribes were not able to drive out all their enemies. But what was it, it may be asked, that so discouraged the tribes of Israel, and at the same time occasioned their great Protector to withdraw from them? There were many things, doubtless, in the gaudy and licentious rites of Paganism, that suited the taste of the great majority of the people much better than the strict devotions and severe morals of the law of Moses. And Joshua had himself warned them in one of his last addresses, of this consequence: (Josh. xxiii. 13.) "Know for a certainty, if ye in any wise go back, (that is, degenerate,) and cleave to the remnant of these nations, that afterwards the Lord your God will no more drive" them out.

The imperfect state in which the conquest of Canaan was now left, may suggest to us the importance of attending to our duty while we have the time and means; and whatever we find to do, to do it with all our might. Had Judah, while the Lord was with them, persevered in subduing the land, we should not have heard of so many parts unconquered, nor appears to have been of that importance, as to be the subject of continual struggle between the Canaanites and Israel. Joshua had slain the king of Jerusalem some years before. (Josh. x. 23.)

Ver. 16. City of palm-trees.—That is, Jericho: see De. xxxiv. 3. The descendants of Hobab first pitched their tents in the vicinity of Jericho; but, after the destruction of that city, removed into "the borders of the wilderness of Judah."

Ver. 17. The name of the city was called Hormah.—That is, accused, or devoted to destruction.

Ver. 18. And Judah took Gaza.—[There is the following remarkable variation here in the Septuagint; "But Judah did not possess Gaza, nor the coasts thereof; nor Askelon, nor the coasts thereof; nor Ekron, nor the coasts thereof; nor Ashdod, nor the coasts thereof." Procopius and Augustine read the same; and Josephus says that the Israelites only took Askelon and Ashdod; but not Gaza or Ekron: and from ch. iii. 3. and the whole succeeding history, it appears that these cities were not in the possession of the Israelites, but of the Philistines.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. He drave out, &c.—Margin, "Or, He possessed the mountain." &c. "The expression is elliptical, (says Dr. Boothroyd,) and we ought to supply in such a manner as to vindicate the divine character," which has been in this case reproached. The learned translator just named renders it, "He drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but went not to drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because," &c. Another modern critic renders the passage thus, "He (i. e. Judah) drave out the inhabitants of the mountain, but not (so as) to drive out the inhabitants of the valley;"—did not push the conquest farther, because intimidated by their chariots of iron, &c.

Ver. 26. The land of the Hittites.—The Scripture does not say anywhere show where this land of the Hittites was situated; but it was without the boundaries of the promised land. (2 Kings vii. 6.) This (incident) confirms the opinion, that the Israelites might spare the lives of such Canaanites as either submitted to become slaves and renounced idolatry, or emigrated into other regions. Josh. vi. 2; ix. 3—5; xi. 19, 20.—Scott.

Ver. 30. Kitron.—[The Talmudists say, Kitron, is "tzippor," that is, Sephoris, or Diocæsarea, a celebrated city of Galilee now the village Safury habitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol; but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries.

31 ¶ Neither did <sup>a</sup> Asher drive out the inhabitants of Accho, nor the inhabitants of Zidon, nor of Ahlab, nor of Achzib, nor of Helbah, nor of Aphik, nor of Rehob:

32 But the Asherites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: for they <sup>a</sup> did not drive them out.

33 ¶ Neither did <sup>m</sup> Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anath; but he dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: nevertheless the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh and of Beth-anath became <sup>a</sup> tributaries unto them.

34 ¶ And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain: for they would not suffer them to come down to the valley:

35 But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres in <sup>a</sup> Aijalon, and in Shaalbim: yet the hand of the house of Joseph <sup>p</sup> prevailed, so that they became tributaries.

36 And the coast of the Amorites was from <sup>a</sup> the going up to Akkrabbim, from the rock, and upward.

CHAPTER II.

1 An angel rebuketh the people at Bochim. 10 The wickedness of the new generation after Joshua. 14 God's anger and pity toward them. 20 The Canaanites are left to prove Israel.

AND an <sup>a</sup> angel of the Lord came up from Gilgal to <sup>b</sup> Bochim, and said, I made you to go up out of Egypt, and have brought you unto the land which I swear unto your fathers; and <sup>a</sup> I said, I will never break my covenant with you.

2 And <sup>a</sup> ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; <sup>a</sup> ye shall throw down their altars: but <sup>a</sup> ye have not obeyed my voice: why have ye done this?

3 Wherefore I also said, I will not drive them out from before you; but they shall be <sup>a</sup> as thorns in your sides, and <sup>b</sup> their gods shall be a <sup>a</sup> snare unto you.

4 And it came to pass, when the angel of the Lord spake these words unto all the children of Israel, that the people lifted up their voice, and wept.

would Israel have had the pain of these thorns in their flesh and in their eyes. Our losses and sufferings as Christians, from supineness and disobedience, are altogether incalculable. "Be not slothful, but followers of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises." (Heb. vi. 12.)

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—23. Israel reproved, by an angel, for their apostacy and idolatry.—The term angel certainly signifies a messenger, whether terrestrial or celestial; and many commentators, both Jewish and Christian, consider this as of the former class—a prophet from Gilgal. But the language is so much like that of the great Angel of the Covenant, who appeared to Abraham, to Moses, and to Joshua, that it is difficult, if not impossible, to suppose these the words of any inferior being. (Josh. v. 13.) It is remarkable also, that at a subsequent period, when the Lord sent a prophet unto the children of Israel, he is not called an angel, but, in the original, "a man, a prophet;" and when he delivers his message, it is not in the first person, "I made you to go up," &c. but, "Thus saith the Lord," &c. See Chap. vi. 8.

This angel "came from Gilgal," and it is observable, that it was near the camp at Gilgal, in the plains of Jericho, that the Lord appeared to Joshua, to animate and encourage him, soon after entering upon his office, and the mention of Gilgal seems intended to lead to the idea of this being the same person; and to remind them (as Bishop Patrick remarks)

Ver. 31. Accho.—[Accho, the Ptolemais of the Greeks and Romans, and called Saint John of Acre by the Crusaders, is situated on the Mediterranean, in a fine plain, at the north angle of a bay to which it gives name, and which extends in a semicircle of 3 leagues as far as Carmel, and nine leagues from Tyre.—Zidon.—Another celebrated city of Phenicia, now Saïde, situated in a fine country on the Mediterranean, 400 stadia from Berytus, and 200 (north) from Tyre, according to Strabo, one day's journey from Paneas, according to Josephus, and sixty-six miles from Damascus, according to Abulfeda.—B.

5 And they called the name of that place <sup>a</sup> Bochim: and they sacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And when <sup>a</sup> Joshua had let the people go, the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land.

7 And the people served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that <sup>a</sup> outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great works of the LORD, that he did for Israel.

8 And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died, being a hundred and ten years old.

9 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in <sup>m</sup> Timnath-heres, in the mount of Ephraim, on the north side of the hill Gaash.

10 ¶ And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, which <sup>a</sup> knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Israel.

11 And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the LORD, and served Baalim:

12 And they <sup>a</sup> forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them, and <sup>p</sup> bowed themselves unto them, and provoked the LORD to anger.

13 And they forsook the LORD, and served Baal and Ashtaroth.

14 ¶ And the <sup>a</sup> anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and he <sup>a</sup> delivered them into the hands of spoilers that spoiled them, and he <sup>a</sup> sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies.

15 Whithersoever <sup>a</sup> they went out, the hand of the LORD was against them for evil, as the LORD had said, and as the LORD had sworn unto them: and they were greatly distressed.

16 ¶ Nevertheless the LORD raised up <sup>a</sup> judges, which <sup>a</sup> delivered <sup>a</sup> them out of the hand of those that spoiled them.

17 And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, but they went a <sup>a</sup> whoring after other gods, and bowed themselves unto them: they

"of the solemn covenant they made with him by the renewing of circumcision in that place."

The substance of the message is two-fold; first, reproof for forming alliances with the Canaanites, and countenancing their idolatries; and secondly, a threat which we now find fulfilled, in no longer driving out the heathen from before them.

The effect of this message is a temporary grief, even to weeping. They wept plentifully, inasmuch that the place was called Bochim, the place of weepers; and here they sacrificed unto the Lord; yet it does not appear that any general or permanent reformation was produced: their vows to Jehovah were soon forgotten, and they followed other gods, the idols of the nations which surrounded them, and with whom they mingled in religious rites. The anger of the Lord was then kindled against them, and he delivered them into the hands, first of one oppressor and then of another; yet when they were distressed by their enemies, and groaned under their oppressions, the Lord repented him of his punishments upon them, and raised them up judges and deliverers; still no sooner were they delivered, than they forgot his mercies, and returned to their idolatries; thus alternately sinning and repenting, till the Lord is at length provoked to withdraw his protecting providence, and will no more drive out the Canaanites, but leave them among them, as the punishment of their Eusebius says it was celebrated in his time for the tomb of Joshua. —Bagster.

Ver. 11—13. Baalim and Ashtaroth.—(Both plural) the gods and goddesses of the Canaanites.

Ver. 16. Raised up judges.—[The Shophetim, were not judges in the usual sense of the term; but were heads or chiefs of the Israelites, raised up on extraordinary occasions, who directed and ruled the nation with sovereign power administered justice, made peace or war, and led the armies over whom they presided. Officers with the same power, and nearly the same name, were established in New Tyre, after the termination of the regal state; and the Sufetes of the Carthaginians, the Archons of the Athenians, and Dictators of the Romans, appear to have been nearly the same. —Bagster.

turned quickly out of the way which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the LORD: but they did not so.

18 And when the LORD raised them up judges, then the LORD was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge: for it repented the LORD because of their groanings by reason of them that oppressed them and vexed them.

19 And it came to pass, when the judge was dead, that they returned, and corrupted themselves more than their fathers, in following other gods to serve them, and to bow down unto them; they ceased not from their own doings, nor from their stubborn way.

20 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel; and he said, Because that this people hath transgressed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened unto my voice;

21 I also will not henceforth drive out any from before them of the nations which Joshua left when he died:

22 That through them I may prove Israel, whether they will keep the way of the LORD to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not.

23 Therefore the LORD left those nations, without driving them out hastily; neither delivered he them into the hand of Joshua.

CHAPTER III.

NOW these are the nations which the LORD left, to prove Israel by them, even as many of Israel as had not known all the wars of Canaan;

2 Only that the generations of the children of Israel might know, to teach them war, at the least such as before knew nothing thereof;

3 Namely, five lords of the Philistines, and all the Canaanites, and the Sidonians, and the Hivites that dwell in mount Lebanon, from mount Baal-hermon unto the entering in of Hamath.

4 And they were to prove Israel by them, to crime. Nor is this conduct of the Lord confined to ancient times, or to God's dealings with the Jews. It is a usual law of Providence, to punish sinners by their own vices; indolence, luxury, and licentiousness, produce a great part of the evils that men suffer in the present life, and may well be compared to thorns in the eyes, while the stings of a guilty conscience are like daggers in their hearts.

Many good writers in viewing the Mosaic dispensation as typical of the Christian, have considered the remnant of Canaanites left in the land, as figurative of the remains of sin and corruption in believers; and we see no practical evil likely to arise from this idea, while it is remembered, that their extermination was decreed, and that every attempt to screen or to spare them, was sinful in the sight of God. As good soldiers of Jesus Christ, we are commanded to make war with all the sinful propensities of flesh and blood; but we wrestle not against flesh and blood (only), but against principalities and powers; against the rulers of the darkness of this world; against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Ephes. vi. 12.)

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—31. Sundry nations left to prove Israel: and various successive deliverances.—It is well remarked by Scott, that "the more the heart of man is tried, the worse it proves;" and we have here explained the manner in which these Canaanites tempted Israel, which was by forming family alliances with them. "They (the Israelites) took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons;" that is, the sons of the Canaanites; and perhaps they flattered themselves that by such means they might eventually gain possession of the country, without the labour or the danger of fighting. But the consequence invariably was, that the children of Israel were drawn into their idolatries; one know whether they would hearken unto the commandments of the LORD, which he commanded their fathers by the hand of Moses.

5 ¶ And the children of Israel dwelt among the Canaanites, Hittites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebusites:

6 And they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons, and served their gods.

7 And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the LORD, and forgot the LORD their God, and served Baalim and the groves.

8 ¶ Therefore the anger of the LORD was hot against Israel, and he sold them into the hand of Chushan-rishathaim king of Mesopotamia: and the children of Israel served Chushan-rishathaim eight years.

9 And when the children of Israel cried unto the LORD, the LORD raised up a deliverer to the children of Israel, who delivered them, even Othniel the son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.

10 And the Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he judged Israel, and went out to war: and the LORD delivered Chushan-rishathaim king of Mesopotamia into his hand; and his hand prevailed against Chushan-rishathaim.

11 And the land had rest forty years. And Othniel the son of Kenaz died.

12 ¶ And the children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the LORD: and the LORD strengthened Eglon the king of Moab against Israel, because they had done evil in the sight of the LORD.

13 And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon and Amalek, and went and smote Israel, and possessed the city of palm trees.

14 So the children of Israel served Eglon the king of Moab eighteen years.

15 But when the children of Israel cried unto the LORD, the LORD raised them up a deliverer, Ehud the son of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed: and by him the children of Israel sent a present unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger which had great means of which probably was, the music and dancing which always formed a considerable part of their idolatrous festivals. By these compliances, however, the Lord's anger was provoked against Israel, and "he sold them" into the hands of the king of Mesopotamia. This expression has an evident allusion to the authority which the ancient laws gave to the creditor to sell his debtor, and to the judge to sell a criminal, to make reparation either for the debt or the offence. (See Exod. xxii. 3. 2 Kings iv. 1.) But the Lord has a perpetual right of redemption over his people: after eight years, therefore, when they became sensible of their guilt, and cried for mercy, the Lord raised up a deliverer (or saviour) to the children of Israel, who delivered them, even Othniel, son of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother; "and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he judged Israel, and the land had rest forty years."

The next judge to Othniel was Ehud, of whom we know nothing but what is here related; and the manner in which he stabbed Eglon, has been represented as a base assassination. The merit of the action, however, depends entirely upon the authority under which he acted. The sacred writer represents him as a prophet especially raised up for the deliverance of this people, and sent by God with a message of death to their oppressor. But there are in this case some special circumstances to be considered. Jehovah was the King, not only of all the earth, but of Israel in a peculiar sense—as a Theocracy; every invasion or resistance of his authority was therefore properly treason; and as He was the head both of the executive and judicial power, he had equal authority to execute his warrants by a prophet, or by an angel, or by Death, the great executioner of mankind. On this subject, our readers may turn to our remarks on the destruction of the Canaanites;

For a similar reason, "Scipio Nasica voted, in the Roman Senate, against the destruction of Carthage, that Rome might not be by the destruction of her rival, become dissuaded to war, and sink into effeminacy."

17 And he brought the present unto Eglon king of Moab: and Eglon was a very <sup>a</sup> fat man.

18 And when he had made an end to offer the present, he sent away the people that bare the present.

19 But he himself turned again from the <sup>r</sup> quarries that <sup>a</sup> were by Gilgal, and said, I have a secret errand unto thee, O king: who said, Keep silence. And all that stood by him went out from him.

20 And Ehud came unto him; and he was sitting in <sup>a</sup> summer parlour, which he had for himself alone. And Ehud said, I have a message from God unto thee. And he arose out of his seat.

22 And the haft also went in after the blade; and the fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly; and <sup>a</sup> the dirt came out.

23 Then Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.

24 When he was gone out, his servants came; and when they saw that, behold, the doors of the parlour were locked, they said, Surely he <sup>v</sup> covereth his feet in his summer chamber.

25 And they tarried till they were ashamed: and, behold, he opened not the doors of the parlour; therefore they took a key, and opened them: and, behold, their lord was fallen down dead on the earth.

26 And Ehud escaped while they tarried, and passed beyond the <sup>w</sup> quarries, and escaped unto Seirath.

27 And it came to pass, when he was come, that he <sup>a</sup> blew a trumpet in the <sup>v</sup> mountain of Ephraim, and the children of Israel went down with him from the mount, and he before them.

29 And they slew of Moab at that time about ten thousand men, all <sup>a</sup> lusty, and all men o' valour; and there escaped not a man.

30 So Moab was subdued that day under the hand of Israel. And the land had rest fourscore years.

31 ¶ And after him was <sup>b</sup> Shamgar the son of Anath, which slew of the Philistines six hundred men with <sup>c</sup> an ox goad: and he also delivered <sup>d</sup> Israel.

CHAPTER IV.

4 Deborah and Barak deliver them from Jabin and Sisera. 18 Jeol killeth Sisera.

AND the children of Israel <sup>a</sup> again did evil in the sight of the LORD, when Ehud was dead.

2 And the LORD <sup>b</sup> sold them into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in <sup>c</sup> Hazor; the captain of whose host was Sisera, which dwelt in <sup>d</sup> Harosheth of the Gentiles.

3 And the children of Israel cried unto the LORD: for he had nine hundred <sup>e</sup> chariots of iron; and twenty years he mightily oppressed the children of Israel.

4 ¶ And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time.

5 And she dwelt under the palm tree <sup>e</sup> of <sup>f</sup> Deborah between Ramah and Beth-el in mount Ephraim: and the children of Israel came up to her for judgment.

6 And she sent and called Barak the son of Abinoam out of Kedesh-naphtali, and said unto him, Hath not the LORD God of Israel commanded, saying, Go and draw toward mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thousand men of the children of Naphtali and of the children of Zebulun?

7 And <sup>g</sup> I will draw unto thee to the river <sup>b</sup> Kishon, Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude; and I will deliver him into thine hand.

but on this objection we may add, that it comes but with an ill grace from those who admire and eulogize the character of Brutus, who thus stabbed Cæsar in the senate-house, though he professed to be his friend.

Immediately on the death of Eglon, Ehud blew a trumpet in Mount Ephraim, and roused the nation to arms; the consequence of which was, the total defeat of Moab, and the slaughter of ten thousand men. The death of Eglon, who had perhaps been a great soldier, while it dispirited the Moabites on the one hand, equally animated the Israelites on the other: and the land had rest fourscore years, reckoning from the forty years before mentioned.

Shamgar, the next judge of Israel, was probably contemporary with Ehud. He appears to have been a farmer, like Cincinnatus, and by an extraordinary act of bravery, aided, as it should seem, by miraculous assistance, obtained, during the same period, an extraordinary victory over the Philistines.

Thus He who woundeth, healeth; and he who punished

Mesopotamia, "between the rivers," is a famous province, situated between the Tigris and Euphrates. It is called by Arabian geographers, Maverannaher, "the country beyond the river;" and is now called Diarbek. — Bagster.

Ver. 16. Of a cubit length.—This word is only here used, and, according to some, means a short cubit or span. So most of the versions.

Ver. 18. When he had made an end to offer the present.—It is plain by ver. 17 that Ehud introduced himself to Eglon with a present, which is often attended with a great deal of parade and ceremony. Perhaps this present from Israel was the tribute exacted of them, with some gifts in addition, to throw him off his guard. When Ehud had presented his gifts or tribute, he dismissed his attendants, and turning back, demanded a private audience, which he obtained: and "all that stood by Eglon (his attendants) went out," on the injunction to "keep silence," which seems to mean, Retire; a matter of etiquette, when a private message was to be delivered.

Ver. 19. The quarries.—Margin, "Graven images," i. e. of stone; but some think this refers to the monument of rough stones which Joshua erected in Gilgal. Josh. iv. 20.

Ver. 20. A summer parlour.—[Heb. a parlour of cooling.—The aleeyah, or upper chamber, seems to have been of the same description as the oleah of the Arabs, but properly ventilated, described by Dr. Shano, who says, that to most of their houses there is a smaller one annexed, which sometimes rises one story higher than the house; at other times, it consists of one or two rooms only, and a terrace; while others that are built, as they frequently are, over Israel severely for their idolatries, was no less prompt to deliver them on their repentance. "For the Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever." Psal. ciii. 8, 9.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—24. Deborah and Barak deliver Israel from Jabin and Sisera.—We have in this chapter another melancholy instance of the proneness of mankind, and especially of this stiff-necked nation, Israel, to rebel against their best friend and benefactor. No sooner was Ehud dead, by whose influence they had been restrained, than "they again did evil in the sight of the Lord;" that is, apostatized to idolatry: and the Lord again "sold them into the hand of Jabin king of Hazor, the captain of whose host was Sisera; and he had nine hundred chariots of iron; and twenty years he mightily oppressed the children of Israel." Jabin, a former king of Hazor, who confederated against the children of Israel, had been slain by Joshua, and his city burnt. (Josh. xi. 11.)

the porch or gateway, have, if we except the ground floor, which they want, all the conveniences that belong to the house itself. There is a door of communication from them into the gallery of the house; besides another, which opens immediately from a privy staircase, down into the porch or street, with out giving the least disturbance to the house. In these back houses strangers are usually lodged and entertained; and to them likewise the men are wont to retire from the noise and hurry of their families, to be more at leisure for meditation or diversions. — Bagster.

Ver. 24. He covereth his feet.—Margin, "He doth his easement." So several versions; but perhaps the simple meaning is, he retired to sleep, when it was customary to cover up the feet. See Ruth iii. 7.

Ver. 31. With an ox-goad.—Maundrell saw, in this country, ox-goads eight feet long, and, at the bigger end, six inches in circumference. They were armed at the lesser end with a sharp prickle, for driving the oxen, and at the other end with a small spade, or paddle of iron, for cleansing the plough from the clay that encumbers it in working. — Orient. Lit. No. 79.—Harosheth of the Gentiles, (or nations.)—A woody part of the country, where great numbers of the defeated Canaanites took refuge, and in which they built afterwards various towns and cities.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 5. The palm-tree of Deborah.—"It is common for the Hittites to plant trees in the names of themselves and friends; and some religious mendicants live for a considerable time under trees." — Ward's Hitt. doos

8 And Barak said unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.

9 And she said, I will surely go with thee: notwithstanding the journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honour; for the LORD shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman. And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kedesh.

10 ¶ And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh; and he went up with ten thousand men at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

11 Now Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hobab the father-in-law of Moses, had severed himself from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedesh.

12 And they showed Sisera that Barak the son of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor.

13 And Sisera gathered together all his chariots, even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kishon.

14 And Deborah said unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the LORD hath delivered Sisera into thine hand: is not the LORD gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him.

15 And the LORD discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword before Barak; so that Sisera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak pursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not a man left.

17 ¶ Howbeit Sisera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the house of Heber the Kenite.

18 And Jael went out to meet Sisera, and said unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not. And when he had turned in unto her into the tent, she covered him with a mantle.

19 And he said unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink; for I am thirsty. And she opened a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him.

20 Again he said unto her, Stand in the door of the tent, and it shall be, when any man doth come and inquire of thee, and say, Is there any man here? that thou shalt say, No.

21 Then Jael Heber's wife took a nail of the tent, and took a hammer in her hand, and went softly unto him, and smote the nail into his temples, and fastened it into the ground: for he was fast asleep and weary. So he died.

22 And, behold, as Barak pursued Sisera, Jael came out to meet him, and said unto him, Come, and I will show thee the man whom thou seekest. And when he came into her tent, behold, Sisera lay dead, and the nail was in his temples.

23 ¶ So God subdued on that day Jabin the king of Canaan before the children of Israel.

24 And the hand of the children of Israel prospered, and prevailed against Jabin the king of Canaan, until they had destroyed Jabin king of Canaan.

CHAPTER V. The song of Deborah and Barak.

THEN sang Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam on that day, saying,

2 Praise ye the LORD for the avenging of Israel, when the people willingly offered themselves.

3 Hear, O ye kings; give ear, O ye princes; I, even I, will sing unto the LORD; I will sing praise to the LORD God of Israel.

4 LORD, when thou wentest out of Seir, when thou marchedst out of the field of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds also dropped water.

5 The mountains melted from before the LORD, even that Sinai from before the LORD God of Israel.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—31. The triumphal ode of Deborah.—This beautiful poem is divided by Bishop Louth into three parts; "First, The exordium; next, a recital of the circumstances which preceded and accompanied the victory; lastly, a fuller description of the concluding event, the death of Sisera, and the disappointed hopes of his mother, which is embellished with all the choicest flowers of poetry. . . . The subject of this ode is, the triumph of the Israelites over their enemies, through the divine assistance, and the establishment of their liberty. At the very opening of the poem, this is proposed as the ground-work of it, and, after inviting the kings and princes of the neighbouring nations to attend to this miracle of the divine goodness, the author proceeds to celebrate the praise of God, not commencing with the benefit so recently received, but with the prodigies formerly exhibited in Egypt." (Louth's Lectures.)

In adverting to recent circumstances, we read that such was the state of Israel in the days of Shamgar, the judge who preceded Deborah, that the villages were deserted, and the public roads infested with banditti, and full of danger, until the late deliverance afforded to Israel, which gave them both freedom and security: for what security can any people enjoy while both their liberties and lives are at the mercy of a lawless tyrant.

After the animated exclamation in ver. 12, "Awake, awake, Deborah," &c. we have some account, though confessedly obscure, of the part which the different tribes had taken in this action: Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Zebulun, and Issachar, and Naphtali, are particularly distinguished; while Reuben, and the inhabitants of Gideon, Dan, and Asher, are reproached for their inactivity.

What is meant by "the stars in their courses" fighting against Sisera? It was a principle in the ancient philosophy, that the stars (or planets) influence the weather, and produce storms and floods: (see ver. 21.) and though a poet does not always require the foundation of a correct philosophy for his images, in the present instance, it is natural to believe, that these phenomena may be produced by a cause similar to that of the tides, which we are taught to believe are governed by the moon. These images, however, have a more permanent foundation in scriptural theology, which represents the whole

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. On that day.—That is, at that time, on that occasion. Dr. Kennicott supposes this ode was sung in dialogue by Deborah and Barak, with a chorus. We rather conceive it to have been sung by chorists of the tribe of Levi, divided into two bands, personating Deborah and Barak, and uniting to form a chorus in certain parts.

Ver. 2. For the avenging of Israel.—"For the leaders who took the lead in Israel—for the people who offered themselves willingly, bless ye Jehovah!"—Kennicott. Green renders it, "When they set Israel free, and the people willingly offered themselves" &c. Dr. Geddes and Boothroyd read, "For the voluntary exertions of the people, in the naked, defenceless state of Israel." There seems no good authority for giving to the original the idea of avenging, but Parkhurst translates, "For the deliverances wrought for Israel," bless, &c. It may be added, that the LXX and eight Hebrew MSS. read, "For creation as taking part with the Creator, who "walketh upon the tempest, and sitteth on the floods."

The latter part of this chapter, as Bishop Louth remarks, is highly poetical. It contains a curse against Meroz, and a blessing upon Jael, both of which require observation. Of the crime of the people of Meroz we know no particulars, nor even its situation with certainty; but it is probable they had been something more than indolent, perhaps also treacherous: but the blessing of Jael is more difficult to explain, as she evidently had acted treacherously, and violated the laws of hospitality. It is most certain that the curse of God always implies guilt: but his blessing does not equally imply merit, or even a full approbation of the character blessed. God blessed Ishmael, though he suffered him not to be raised to equality with Isaac, much less to supplant him. (Gen. xvii. 20.) But the blessing here named, is not the blessing of God, but of the people; and instead of marking the divine approbation upon all her conduct, merely predicts the high esteem in which her country should regard her, as a patriot and the deliverer of Israel from tyrannic power; and there can be no doubt that her memory was held in the same veneration among the Hebrews as that of Brutus was among the Romans.

As to the beautiful imagery here employed, after marking the anxious solicitude of Sisera's mother for his return, and the causes she anticipates for his delay, namely, that he stopped to divide the spoil,—Bishop Louth thus proceeds: "Let us now observe, how well adapted every sentiment, every word, is to the character of the speaker. She takes no account of the slaughter of the enemy, of the valour and conduct of the conqueror, of the multitude of the captives, but

"Nothing is omitted, which is calculated to attract and engage the attention of a vain and trifling woman—slaves, gold, and rich apparel. Nor is she satisfied with the bare enumeration of them: she repeats, she amplifies, she heightens every circumstance; she seems to have the very plunder in her immediate possession; she pauses, and contemplates every particular:

<sup>b</sup> Have they not found? Have they not divided the spoil?

To every man a damsel; yea, a damsel or two!

To Sisera a spoil of divers colours,

A spoil of needlework of divers colours,

A spoil for the neck of divers colours of needlework on either side?"

"To add to the beauty of this passage, there is also an uncommon neatness in the versification, great force, accuracy, and perspicuity in the diction, the utmost elegance in the repetitions, which, notwithstanding their apparent redundan-

Ver. 14. Out of Ephraim there was a root.—We should rather read, "Out of Ephraim, their root, (come forth thy sons,) in Amalek." The LXX. and others consider Amalek as the name of a mountainous tract in the territory of Ephraim, which had been formerly occupied by the Amalekites.

Ver. 15. For the divisions of Reuben, &c.—Margin, "In the divisions of Reuben there were great impressions of heart," or "deliberations." This (says Dr. Boothroyd) is a severe irony; they deliberated much, but did nothing.

Ver. 19. They took no gain of money.—Rather, "No fragment of silver; allying to small pieces put in the scale to make weight, at a time when all money was paid by weight.—Parkhurst.

Ver. 21. That ancient river.—Heb. "That first" or "prince of rivers."—Thou hast trodden down strength.—Or, "the strong."

Ver. 22. Horse-hoofs.—Anciently, horses were not shod; nor are they at the present day in some parts of the East. The flight was so rapid, that the hoofs of their horses were splintered and broken by the roughness of the roads; in consequence of which they became lame, and could not carry off their riders.

—Mighty ones.—Or, as Dr. Waterland renders, "mighty horses," or "strong steeds," as Dr. Kennicott, i. e. their war-horses, which gives great energy to the text, and renders it perfectly intelligible.—Bagster.

Ver. 23. Curse ye Meroz.—The same perhaps with Merom, mentioned Josh. xi. 5. now inhabited by Israelites, but who refused to join the battle.—Said the Angel.—See Ps. xxxv. 5.

Ver. 25. Butter.—Rather, buttermilk, which in the East is considered as a great dainty. See Harmer's Observations on Gen. xviii. 8. and compare Job xx. 17.

Ver. 26. Smote off his head.—The word off is here improper, (Mahat) the original term, means to smite, to break, to destroy, but not to cut off.—Parkhurst, Leigh, &c.

taking away the veil of Israel;" that is, the terror which Jabin and Sisera had spread over Israel. See Isa. xxv. 7. Perhaps the version of Dr. Kennicott is the most natural and simple.

Ver. 6. Through by-ways.—Hebrew, "The walkers of paths (i. e. foot passengers) walked through crooked ways."—Margin, Dr. Pococke, in his Travels to Jerusalem, under the care of an Arabian guide, says, his journey "was by night, and not by the high road, but through the fields;" and he observed his guide avoided, as much as he could, going near any village or encampment, and sometimes stood still, as I thought, (says he,) to hearken." Harmer remarks, "Just in that manner were people obliged to travel in Judea, in the days of Shamgar and Jael."

Ver. 10. Speak, (Heb. Meditate.) ye that ride on white asses.—Whether the asses here mentioned were delicately white, as some think, or as others, beautifully streaked, like the zebra, the animals alluded to (the atomus) are such as were rode only by the higher classes. Baalam rode one, Numb. xxii. 23. Jacob presented twenty to his brother Esau, Gen. xxxii. 15. David had an officer over his asses of this species, probably, answering to our master of the horse, 1 Chron. xxvii. 38. Those who "walk by the way," are foot passengers, or the common people: both were annoyed by "the sound of archers," who often waylaid them at the places where they stopped to water their cattle. See Note on ver. 6. above.

Ver. 11. Places of drawing water.—(Dr. Shaw mentions a beautiful rill of water in Barbary, which runs into a large basin, called shrub ue krub, "drink and be off," because of the danger of meeting with robbers and assassins in this place, who fall upon those who come to drink.)—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Then he made him that remaineth, &c.—This is both obscure and contrary to the ancient versions. Weston reads, "Then when the remainder descended after their chiefs, the people of Jehovah descended with me against he mighty."

down: at her feet he bowed, he fell: where he bowed, there he fell down dead.

28 The mother of Sisera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots?

29 Her wise ladies answered her, yea, she returned answer to herself;

30 Have they not sped? have they not divided the prey; to every man a damsel or two; to Sisera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needlework, of divers colours of needlework on both sides, meet for the necks of them that take the spoil?

31 So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord: but let them that love him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might. And the land had rest forty years.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The Israelites for their sin are oppressed by Midian. 8 A prophet rebuketh them. 11 An angel sendeth Gideon for their deliverance. 17 Gideon's present is consumed with fire. 24 Gideon destroyeth Baal's altar, and offereth a sacrifice upon the altar of Jehovah-shalom. 25 Gideon slayeth his son, and calleth him Jerubbaal. 35 Gideon's army. 36 Gideon's signs.

AND the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord: and the Lord delivered them into the hand of Midian seven years.

2 And the hand of Midian prevailed against Israel: and because of the Midianites the children of Israel made them dens which are in the mountains, and caves, and strong holds.

3 And so it was, when Israel had sown, that the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the east, even they came up against them;

4 And they encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, till thou come unto Gaza, and left no sustenance for Israel, neither sheep, nor ox, nor ass.

5 For they came up with their cattle and their tents, and they came as grasshoppers for multitude; for both they and their camels were without number: and they entered into the land to destroy it.

6 And Israel was greatly impoverished because of the Midianites; and the children of Israel cried unto the Lord.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, because of the Midianites,

8 That the Lord sent a prophet unto the children of Israel, which said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the house of bondage;

9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppressed you, and I drave them out from before you, and gave you their land;

10 And I said unto you, I am the Lord your God; fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but ye have not obeyed my voice.

11 ¶ And there came an angel of the Lord, and sat under an oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joash the Abiezrite: and his son Gideon threshed wheat by the winepress, to hide it from the Midianites.

12 And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him, and said unto him, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour.

13 And Gideon said unto him, Oh my Lord, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? and where be all his miracles which our fathers told us of, saying, Did not the Lord bring us up from Egypt? but now the Lord hath forsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites.

14 And the Lord looked upon him, and said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?

15 And he said unto him, Oh my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? behold, my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house.

16 And the Lord said unto him, Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.

17 And he said unto him, If now I have found grace in thy sight, then show me a sign that thou talkest with me.

18 Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I cy, are conducted with the most perfect brevity. In the end, the fatal disappointment of female hope and credulity, tacitly insinuated by the sudden and unexpected apostrophe: "So let all thine enemies perish, O Jehovah!" is expressed more forcibly by this very silence of the person who was just speaking, than it could possibly have been by all the powers of language.—Loveth.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1.—24. Israel rebel, and are reproved. Gideon beholds an angel.—Perhaps after all the difficulties that have been urged respecting the history of the Israelites, the most surprising is, to find a people so frequently the subjects of the miraculous protection of Jehovah, turning aside to worship the lying vanities of the heathen; and it is an objection not to be completely obviated, but in the experience of those who know "the plague of their own hearts," and deeply feel a like propensity to turn aside from God, to connect themselves with a world they have professed to renounce, and to indulge in pleasures which they know to be either incompatible, or at least very injurious, to the Christian life.

On the other hand, we can never sufficiently admire the long-suffering and compassion of God, who no sooner beholds a prodigal son returning—a sinner forsaking his iniquities—than he meets him in a way of mercy and forgiveness.

In the instance before us we find, that when the children of Israel cried to the Lord, under the weight of oppression from their enemies, he first sends a prophet, to reprove and remonstrate with them, and then an angel, to point out a deliverer.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 2. Made them dens in the mountains.—[Dr. Shaw says, that a great way on each side of Joppa, on the sea-coast, there is a range of mountains and precipices; and in these high situations are generally found the dens, holes, or caves, which are so frequently mentioned in Scripture; and which were formerly the lonesome retreats of the distressed Israelites.]—Bagster.—Baldwin I. presenting himself, with some troops, before Ascalon, the citizens were afraid to venture out to fight with him. On this finding it would be of no advantage to continue there, he ranged about the plains, between the mountains and the sea, and found villages, whose inhabitants, having left their houses, had retired with their wives and children, their flocks and herds, into "subterraneous caves." See 1 Sam. xiv. 11.

Ver. 3. and 38. The children of the East.—In this history are the descendants of the other sons of Keturah, (beside Midian,) who had settled themselves in the eastern parts, adjoining Midian.—Wells's Geography.

Ver. 11. To hide it.—Heb. "to cause it to flee;" i. e. to keep it out of sight of the Midianites. But was a wine-press a place for secrecy? The late C. Taylor suggests, that as the wine-press was used only during a short period, and then shut up, and probably had not been used at all for some years, it was a private place as he could find on this occasion. The original term means, to beat with a stick, which method was probably used only in threshing small quantities.—Fragments. No. xlviii.
Ver. 14. And the Lord looked, &c.—Here, as in many other places, the same person is called Jehovah who is called an angel; a sufficient proof, surely, that he was more than an angel.

come unto thee, and bring forth my * present, and set it before thee. And he said, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 And Gideon went in, and made ready * a kid, and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the flesh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and presented it.

20 And the angel of God said unto him, Take the flesh and the unleavened cakes, and lay them upon this rock, and pour out the broth. And he did so.

21 Then the angel of the Lord put forth the end of the staff that was in his hand, and touched the flesh and the unleavened cakes; and there rose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened cakes. Then the angel of the Lord departed out of his sight.

22 And when Gideon perceived that he was an angel of the Lord, Gideon said, Alas, O Lord God! for * because I have seen an angel of the Lord face to face.

23 And the Lord said unto him, Peace be unto thee; fear not: thou <sup>b</sup> shalt not die.

24 Then Gideon built an altar there unto the Lord, and called it * Jehovah-shalom: unto this day it is yet in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

25 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the Lord said unto him, Take thy father's young bullock, <sup>d</sup> even the second bullock of seven years old, and throw down the altar of Baal that thy father hath, and cut <sup>e</sup> down the grove that is by it:

26 And build an altar unto the Lord thy God upon the top of this <sup>f</sup> rock, <sup>g</sup> in the ordered place, and take the second bullock, and offer a burnt-sacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou shalt cut down.

27 Then Gideon took ten men of his servants, and did as the Lord had said unto him: and so it was, because he feared his father's household, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that he did it by night.

28 ¶ And when the men of the city arose early in the morning, behold, the altar of Baal was cast down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the second bullock was offered upon the altar that was built.

29 And they said one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they inquired and asked, they said, Gideon the son of Joash hath done this thing.

30 Then the men of the city said unto Joash, Bring out thy son that he may die: because he hath cast down the altar of Baal, and because he hath cut down the grove that was by it.

31 And Joash said unto all that stood against him, Will ye plead for Baal? will ye save him? he that will plead for him, let him be put to death whilst it is yet morning: if he be a god, let him plead for himself, because one hath cast down his altar.

32 Therefore on that day he called him <sup>b</sup> Jerubbaal, saying, Let Baal plead against him, because he hath thrown down his altar.

33 ¶ Then all the Midianites and the Amalekites and the children of the east were gathered together, and went over, and pitched in the valley of Jezreel.

34 But <sup>k</sup> the Spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon, and he <sup>m</sup> blew a trumpet; and Abi-ezer <sup>n</sup> was gathered after him.

35 And he sent messengers throughout all Manasseh; who also was gathered after him: and he sent messengers unto Asher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali; and they came up to meet them.

36 ¶ And Gideon said unto God, If thou wilt save Israel by my hand, as thou hast said, 37 Behold, <sup>o</sup> I will put a fleece of wool in the floor; and if the dew be on the fleece only, and it be dry upon all the earth beside, then shall I know that thou wilt save Israel by my hand, as thou hast said.

38 And it was so: for he rose up early on the morrow, and thrust the fleece together, making the attempt, who was himself the least of the meanest family of one of the smallest tribes of Israel. To silence his objections, and to convince him of his divine authority, the apparent angel now shows his true character, producing fire from the rock to consume his present, thereby turning it into a sacrifice; and then vanishes out of his sight. Gideon was at length convinced that he had received a heavenly visitant, and became alarmed, from the apprehension that such a vision might be fatal; he was assured, however, to the contrary, and built an altar, which he named Jehovah Shalom, the Lord send peace! This altar does not appear to have been intended for sacrifice, but as a memorial of the Lord's appearing to him on this occasion. (Josh. xxii. 26, 27.)

Ver. 25–40. Gideon commences war against Baal and the Midianites.—The circumstances under which Gideon was favoured with the vision of the angel of the Lord may be worthy of our remark, as analogous to those under which the Lord usually bestows his presence and his blessing. He was in a state of retirement from the world, laudably and industriously employed, deeply impressed with the distresses of his brethren and of his country, and becomingly sensible of his own unworthiness and insignificance; it is under such circumstances that we may reasonably hope to enjoy the divine presence and blessing.

To return, however, to the history of Gideon: the vision he had seen by day is confirmed by a divine dream by night, and he is enjoined to declare war against Baal, whose worship had

Ver. 18. My present.—Hebrew, Mincha, or “meat-offering;” rather, an offering of bread and flour. See note on Levit. ii. 1. Some have supposed this was intended for a sacrifice; but it is plain Gideon did not yet know the divine dignity of his visitor. He intended it as an hospitable entertainment, but the angel turned it into a sacrifice, and thereby Gideon discovered who he was. The following passage from Dr. Shaw's Travels, Harmer calls “a perfect commentary on this text:—“Besides a bowl of milk, and a basket of figs, raisins, or dates, which upon our arrival were presented to us to stay our appetites, the master of the tent where we lodged, fetched us from his flock, according to the number of our company, a kid or a goat, a lamb or a sheep; half of which was immediately seethed by his wife, and served up with cucumbers; the rest was made kab-ab; i. e. cut in pieces, and roasted; which we reserved for our breakfast or dinner next day.”

Ver. 25. Even the second bullock.—Margin, “and the second bullock.” By this it should seem both were offered; the one as a simple sin-offering, of been introduced even into his father's family. With the assistance of ten of his own servants he fulfilled his orders; and in consequence, in the morning, a great alarm was spread, and the author of this supposed impiety being soon known, the people of the town apply immediately to his father, to deliver him up to death. His father, however, demurred to this demand; not only influenced by paternal feelings, but also deeply self-convicted that he had been himself an idolater, and, as an Israelite, deserved punishment rather than his son; instead, therefore, of delivering up his son, he retaliates upon them the charge of idolatry, and puts the divinity of Baal to this test—it he be a god, he is able to defend himself. This suggestion probably came from Gideon, and therefore the name Jerubbaal was given to him; and he was afterwards called Jerub-besheth, the word Baal being put out, and Besheth, that is, shame, put in; which implies that this was the same Baal worshipped at Peor. (See Numb. xxv. 3. Hosea ix. 10.)

This opposition to idolatry excited the Midianites to revenge the cause of Baal, while the Spirit of God in Gideon roused the Israelites to self-defence. The young warrior was, however, still diffident and incredulous. That he, a stripling unaccustomed to war, without arms or troops, should be able to deliver Israel, seems to him so wonderful, that he thinks another miracle necessary, to satisfy him fully of the divine appointment, and to animate him to the work. Unreasonable as this may appear to us, the Lord condescended to silence all his doubts, and remove all his fears, by the double miracle of the fleece, which himself and his men might partake; the other as a burnt-offering, for which the grove he cut down would furnish wood.

Ver. 31. Let him plead for himself.—[The words are very emphatic: “Will ye plead in earnest, Jerubbaal, for Baal? Will ye really save, Jerubbaal, him? If he be God, Elohim, let Him contend for Himself, seeing His altar is thrown down.” Tacitus, mentioning the letter of Tiberius to the consuls in behalf of Cassius and Rubrius, two Roman knights, one of whom was accused of having sold a statue of Augustus, who had been deified, and the other of having sworn falsely by his name; said, “That divine honours were not decreed to his father (Augustus) to lay snares for the citizens: and if his statue in common with the images of the gods in general, was put up to sale with the houses and gardens, it could not be considered an injury to religion: That any false oath must be considered as an attempt to deceive Jupiter himself; but the gods must take cognizance of the injuries done unto them.”]—Bagster and wringed the dew out of the fleece, a bowl full of water.

Ver. 32. Jerubbaal.—That is, “Let Baal plead.”

39 And Gideon said unto God, "Let not thine anger be hot against me, and I will speak but this once: let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew."

40 And God did so that night: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Gideon's army of two and thirty thousand is brought to three hundred. 9 He is encouraged by the dream and interpretation of the barley cake. 16 His stratagem of trumpets and lamps in pitchers. 24 The Ephraimites take Oreb and Zeeb.

THEN <sup>a</sup> Jerubbaal, who <sup>is</sup> Gideon, and all the people that <sup>were</sup> with him, rose up early, and pitched beside the well of Harod: so that the host of the Midianites were on the north side of them, by the hill of Moreh, in the valley.

2 And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people that <sup>are</sup> with thee <sup>are</sup> too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel <sup>b</sup> vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.

3 Now therefore go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, saying, "Whosoever <sup>is</sup> fearful and afraid, let him return and depart early from mount Gilead. And there returned of the people twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand."

4 And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people <sup>are</sup> yet too <sup>d</sup> many; bring them down unto the water, and I will try them for thee there: and it shall be, <sup>that</sup> of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go.

5 So he brought down the people unto the water: and the Lord said unto Gideon, Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue,

6 And the number of them that lapped, <sup>putting</sup> their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men: but all the rest of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water.

7 And the Lord said unto Gideon, "By the three hundred men that lapped will I save you, and deliver the Midianites unto thy hand: and let all the <sup>other</sup> people go every man unto his place."

8 So the people took victuals in their hand, and their trumpets: and he sent all <sup>the rest of</sup> Israel every man unto his tent, and retained those three hundred men: and the host of Midian was beneath him in the valley.

9 ¶ And it came to pass the same † night, that the Lord said unto him, Arise, get thee down unto the host; for ‡ I have delivered it into thine hand.

10 But if thou fear to go down, go thou with Phurah thy servant down to the host:

14 And his fellow answered and said, This is nothing else, save the sword of Gideon the which, though simple, must have been doubly satisfactory, when it is known that the night dews in that country are very heavy. We are not warranted, under the Christian dispensation, to require any miraculous intimation of the divine will; for the word of God is now alone our guide and warrant. But there we have "line upon line, and precept upon precept;" besides the voice of Providence and the influence of Grace, which are as a word behind us, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it." (Isa. xxx. 21.)

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—25. Gideon defeats the Moabites, and delivers Israel.—Gideon being now fully satisfied that he should be the deliverer of Israel, collects his forces, which amounted to 32,000 men; only a third part of which, however, appear fit for soldiers; for, on the proclamation that all the fearful might leave the camp, 22,000 immediately return home; still the remaining 10,000, who appear willing to fight, are pronounced too many for the purpose; "Lest Israel vaunt themselves against me," (saith the Lord,) saying, Mine own hand hath saved me." These ten thousand are therefore reduced to three hundred, and those armed only with pitchers and with lamps, or torches; for "the battle was the Lord's." On the night before the expected engagement, Gideon is directed to go down privately into the camp of the enemy; and there he overhears a Midianite relate his dream, which is interpreted by his companion as ominous of their discomfiture. The former dreamed that "a cake of barley bread tumbled" into one of their tents, and overturned it; and his companion instantly interprets this of "the sword of Gideon," who, in himself, was no more able to cope with them than a cake of barley meal to overturn a tent. Gideon no sooner heard this, than he concluded both the dream and interpretation to be of the Lord, and immediately "worshipped;" that is, offered to God thanksgivings for this encouragement, and prepared his men with lamps, and pitchers, and trumpets, for the attack. The blaze of light at once bursting from three hundred lamps, or torches, amidst the darkness; the blast of three hundred trumpets, and the shout of three hundred men, amidst the stillness of the night, were certainly calculated both to surprise and to alarm; it should seem, also, that there were cowards among the Midianites, as well as in Israel; and a panic of this nature would spread like lightning among undisciplined troops; yet had it not been for a spirit of terror poured upon them from on high, it is reasonable to believe that some part of the Midianitish army might have rallied to the fight; instead of which, they all "ran, and cried, and fled;" and, in their confusion, unable to distinguish friends from foes, they fall upon each other. The force of Midian being thus broken, the whole army of Gideon appears to have been re-collected, to pursue the victory, and to destroy their enemies.

This history has afforded a favourite subject for allegory to CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Jerubbaal.—[It appears that Jerubbaal had now become the surname of Gideon. He is mentioned by Sanchoniathon, who lived in the reign of Ithobal, king of Tyre, and consequently a little after the time of Gideon, by the name of Jerubabais, a priest of Jero.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Mount Gilead.—[Gideon was certainly not at mount Gilead, east of Jordan, at this time; but rather near mount Gilboa, west of Jordan. Calmet thinks there must either have been two Gileads, which does not appear from Scripture, to be the case; or that the Hebrew text is corrupt, and that for Gilead we should read Gilboa. This reading, though adopted by Houbigant, is not confirmed by any MS. or version. Dr. Hales endeavours to reconcile the composition that in Gideon's army there were many eastern Mannassites from mount Gilead, near the Midianites; and therefore proposes to read, "Whosoever from mount Gilead is fearful and afraid, let him return (home) and depart early."—Bagster. Not Gilead beyond Jordan, but some other mountain of the same name.—Dr. Wall.

Ver. 5. Every one that lappeth, &c.—[The original word yalok, is precisely the sound which the dog makes in lapping. It appears that it is not unusual for the Arabs to drink water out of the palms of their hands: and, from this account, we learn that the Israelites did so occasionally. Dr. A. Clarke, in his edition of Harmer, has presented us with the following curious MS. note from Dr. Russell. "When they take water with the palms of their hands, they naturally place themselves on their hands to be nearer the water; but when they drink from a pitcher, or gourd, fresh filled, they do not sit down on their hands, and very often put the sleeve of their shirt over the mouth of the vessel, by way of strainer, lest small leeches might have been taken up with the water. For the same reason they often prefer taking the water with the palm of the hand, to lapping it from the surface." From the letters of Busbey, we learn, that the Eastern people are not in the habit of drinking standing. The 300 men, who satisfied their thirst in the most expeditious manner, by this sufficiently indicated their spirit and alacrity to follow Gideon in his dangerous enterprise; while the rest showed their love of ease, self-indulgence, effeminacy, and want of courage.]—Bagster. It was not uncommon among the ancients, when unprovided with vessels, to take up the water in their hands, and lap it thence, like a dog; and it is remarkable that the Hottentots, at this day, have a custom very similar. Campbell says, when they come to water, they stoop down, by which they throw it sufficient to allow the right hand to reach the water; but no farther than a foot. On such occasions, I never observed any of the water to be spilt, so as to wet their breasts. They perform it nearly as quickly as the dog, and satisfy their thirst in half the time taken by another man.—Mr. C.'s First Travels in Africa.

son of Joash, a man of Israel: for into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all the host.

15 And it was so, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and <sup>m</sup> the interpretation thereof, that he worshipped, and returned into the host of Israel, and said, Arise; for the LORD hath delivered into your hand the host of Midian.

16 ¶ And he divided the three hundred men into three companies, and he put <sup>n</sup> a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers, and <sup>o</sup> lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he said unto them, Look on me, and do likewise: and, behold, when I come to the outside of the camp, it shall be that, as I do, so shall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then blow ye the trumpets also on every side of all the camp, and say, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

19 ¶ So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outside of the camp in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly <sup>p</sup> set the watch: and they blew the <sup>q</sup> trumpets, and brake the <sup>r</sup> pitchers that were in their hands.

20 And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal: and they cried, The sword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

21 And they <sup>s</sup> stood every man in his place round about the camp: <sup>t</sup> and all the host ran, and cried, and fled.

22 And the three hundred <sup>u</sup> blew the trumpets, and the <sup>v</sup> LORD set every man's sword against his <sup>w</sup> fellow, even throughout all the host: and the host fled to Beth-shittah <sup>x</sup> in Zererath, and to the <sup>y</sup> border of Abel-meholah, unto Tabbath:

23 And the men of Israel gathered themselves together out of Naphtali, and out of Asher, and out of all Manasseh, and pursued after the Midianites.

24 ¶ And Gideon sent messengers throughout all mount <sup>z</sup> Ephraim, saying, Come down against the Midianites, and take before them the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan. Then all the men of Ephraim gathered themselves together, and took the waters unto <sup>a</sup> Beth-barah and Jordan.

25 And they took <sup>b</sup> two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they slew Oreb upon the rock Oreb, and Zeeb they slew at the wine-press of Zeeb, and pursued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon on the other side Jordan.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Gideon pacified the Ephraimites. 4 Succoth and Penuel refuse to relieve Gideon's army. 10 Zebah and Zalmunna are taken. 13 Succoth and Penuel are destroyed. 17 Gideon revenged his brethren's death on Zebah and Zalmunna. 22 He refused government. 24 His ephod cause of idolatry. 28 Midian subdued. 29 Gideon's children, and death. 33 The Israelites' idolatry and ingratitude.

AND the <sup>a</sup> men of Ephraim said unto him, <sup>b</sup> Why hast thou served us thus, that thou calledst us not, when thou wentest to fight with the Midianites? And they did chide with him <sup>c</sup> sharply.

2 And he said unto them, What have I done now in comparison of you? <sup>d</sup> Is not the glean- ing of the grapes of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abi-ezer?

3 God hath delivered into your hands the princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb: and what was I able to do in comparison of you? Then their <sup>e</sup> anger was abated <sup>f</sup> toward him, when he had said that.

4 ¶ And Gideon came to Jordan, and passed over, he, and the three hundred men that were with him, faint, yet pursuing them.

5 And he said unto the men of <sup>g</sup> Succoth, Give, I pray you, loaves of bread unto the people that follow me; for they be faint, and I am pursuing after Zebah and Zalmunna kings of Midian.

6 And the princes of Succoth said, <sup>h</sup> Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we should give bread unto thine army?

7 And Gideon said, Therefore when the LORD hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into my hand, <sup>i</sup> then I will <sup>j</sup> tear your flesh with the thorns of the wilderness and with briers.

8 And he went up thence to <sup>k</sup> Penuel, and spake unto them likewise: and the men of the Christian fathers, both of ancient and modern times; and without going into any of their extravagances, we know that the trumpet is an established emblem of the preaching of the gospel; that its preachers are frail as earthen vessels; that the treasures of which they are the depositaries are treasures of light and of fire, of wisdom and of zeal; and it is only by the display of heavenly light and holy love, that they can fulfil their mission with success, and promote the salvation of mankind.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—21. The Ephraimites, being offended with Gideon, are pacified, and the men of Succoth punished for inhospitality.—The tribe of Ephraim chide sharply with Gideon, for not being called earlier into the conflict, as if they were ambitious of military glory on the occasion; and their language fully justifies the Lord's intimation to Gideon, that Israel were disposed to "vaunt themselves" in such circumstances. (Chap. vii. 2.) The God of Israel will, however, suffer "no flesh to glory in his presence." But the Hebrew chief, while he intimates that the victory was the Lord's, at the same time softens them by an apology more flattering to their feelings; acknowledging that "the gleanings of Ephraim," that is, the capture of the two generals, Oreb and Zeeb, had rendered more service to the cause than "the vintage of Abi-ezer"; that is, than all his own exertions. (See Chap. vi. 11.) Thus "a soft answer turneth away wrath." The incident mentioned, however, in the first three verses, must have occurred after the capture of the princes of Midian, at the conclusion of the conflict, and consequently after the dispute with the men of Succoth, which here follows; for as yet, (ver. 4.) he had not passed over Jordan.

Ver. 15. The interpretation.—Hebrew, "The breaking thereof." N. B. The interpretation of a secret, or mystery, is, figuratively, breaking it open.

Ver. 18. The sword of the Lord.—The word sword is not now found in our printed Hebrew Bibles; but it is in the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, and in eight Hebrew MSS., also in the printed text of verse 20. There can therefore be no doubt but it has been here omitted by transcribers.

The reason that the people of Succoth, and of Penuel, refused to feed Gideon and his army, is stated to be the fear of Zebah and Zalmunna, who might revenge it on them, if they prevailed; the Hebrew chief, however, confident of success, threatens them on his return, and did not fail to execute his threat. War, "in its best estate," is cruelty; among uncivilized nations it is of course more barbarous, and more the result of personal feelings of hatred and revenge. In this war there fell 120,000 men, and though many, perhaps, escaped in flight, few, probably, without wounding, which rendered them miserable for life. Oh for that day when men shall "learn war no more!"

We are sorry to see so brave and good a man as Gideon intent upon revenge; but such is human nature; and "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," is a maxim of the Mosaic law, under the influence of which he now acted. First, he shows them his captives, Zebah and Zalmunna, and taunts them with the language they had used toward him, when he had applied to them for bread for his famished troops. He then "tore," or scourged them with the "thorns and briers of the wilderness;"—next he avenges himself of the people of Penuel by throwing down their tower, and slaying the men of the city, who probably defended it. He then proceeds to judge the captive princes; and, finding that Zebah and Zalmunna had slain his own brethren, and as they probably were his younger brethren, he calls upon his eldest son, as the natural avenger of their blood, to slay them. Jether was not, however, yet a soldier, and shrinking from the task, Gideon himself slew them; which, indeed, they preferred, as more honourable to themselves.

Ver. 24. Take before them the waters, &c.—Many of the Midianites fled to the fords of Jordan, in hopes, probably, of finding a passage through them; being met by the Ephraimites, who resided on the other side, they there destroyed their two chief generals slain, and their heads sent to Gideon.

Ver. 5, 8. Succoth . . . and Penuel, were both cities on the east side of Jordan.

Penuel answered him as the men of Succoth had answered him.

9 And he spake also unto the men of Penuel, saying, When I <sup>1</sup> come again in peace, I will break down this tower.

10 ¶ Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hosts with them, about fifteen thousand men, all that were left of all the hosts of the children of the east: for there fell <sup>2</sup> a hundred and twenty thousand men that drew sword.

11 And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents on the east of <sup>3</sup> Nobah and Jogbehah, and smote the host: for the host was <sup>4</sup> secure.

12 And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he pursued after them, and <sup>5</sup> took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and <sup>6</sup> discomfited all the host.

13 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash returned from battle before the sun was up, 14 And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and inquired of him: and he <sup>7</sup> described unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, <sup>8</sup> even threescore and seven men.

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth, and said, Behold Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me, saying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thy hand, that we should give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderness and briers, and with them he <sup>9</sup> taught the men of Succoth.

17 And he beat down the <sup>10</sup> tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the city.

18 ¶ Then said he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye saw at <sup>11</sup> Tabor? And they answered, As thou <sup>12</sup> art, so were they; each one <sup>13</sup> resembled the children of a king.

19 And he said, They were my brethren, <sup>14</sup> even the sons of my mother: as the Lord liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I would not slay you.

20 And he said unto Jether his first-born, <sup>15</sup> Up, and slay them. But the youth drew not his sword: for he feared, because he was yet <sup>16</sup> a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna said, Rise thou, and fall upon us: for as the man <sup>17</sup> is, so is his strength. And Gideon arose, and slew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the <sup>18</sup> ornaments that were on their camels' necks. 22 ¶ Then the men of Israel said unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy son, and thy son's son also: for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon said unto them, I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you: the Lord shall rule over you.

24 And Gideon said unto them, I would desire a request of you, that ye would give me every man the ear-rings of his prey. (For they had golden ear-rings, because they were <sup>19</sup> Ishmaelites.)

25 And they answered, We will willingly give them. And they spread a garment, and did cast therein every man the ear-rings of his prey.

26 And the weight of the golden ear-rings that he requested was a thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold; beside ornaments, and <sup>20</sup> a collars, and purple raiment that was on the kings of Midian, and beside the chains that were about their camels' necks.

27 And Gideon made <sup>21</sup> an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, <sup>22</sup> even in <sup>23</sup> Ophrah: and all Israel went thither a <sup>24</sup> whoring after it: which thing became a <sup>25</sup> snare unto Gideon, and to his house.

28 ¶ Thus was Midian subdued before the children of Israel, so that they lifted up their heads no more. And the country was in quietness forty years in the days of Gideon.

29 ¶ And Jerubbaal the son of Joash went and dwelt in his own house.

30 And Gideon had <sup>26</sup> threescore and ten sons <sup>27</sup> of his body begotten: for he had many wives.

31 And his concubine that was in Shechem, she also bare him a son, whose name he <sup>28</sup> called <sup>29</sup> Abimelech.

32 ¶ And Gideon the son of Joash died in a good <sup>30</sup> old age, and was buried in the sepulchre of Joash his father, in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

33 And it came to pass, as <sup>31</sup> soon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Israel turned again, and went a whoring after Baalim, and made <sup>32</sup> Baal-berith their god.

34 And the children of Israel remembered <sup>33</sup> not the Lord their God, who had delivered

Ver. 22—35. The Israelites propose to make Gideon king; but he rejects the offer.—The men of Israel, that is, the army, for every man was now a soldier; the men of Israel offer to make Gideon an hereditary sovereign; but he declines, both for himself and posterity, and counsels them to make the Lord alone their king; a circumstance which shows him not to have been ambitious of power, though he was not so free from the desire of riches. The Midianites, being the children of Ishmael, wore golden ear-rings, and the Hebrew chief begs for himself those which the army had taken in prey, amounting, in the whole, to 1,700 shekels of gold, "besides ornaments and collars, and purple raiment, and chains upon their camels' necks."

Ver. 10. Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor—No such place is elsewhere mentioned in Scripture; but the Vulgate translates the word, "they dwelt in," which agrees with the next verse, "the host was secure," and therefore was taken by surprise.

The Hebrew text might easily have been corrupted simply by the change of shin into ayin, letters very similar to each other.]—Bagster.

necks." His riches, however, soon became a snare to him, and eventually to all Israel: and thus riches, suddenly acquired, generally prove to professors of religion, when they have not a generous heart to bestow them, either on the cause of God, or in relief of the distressed. Gideon's first object was, indeed, of a religious nature. He made a superb ephod, probably for himself, or his domestic priest; and it is generally supposed that he imitated some other of the splendid ornaments of the tabernacle, a circumstance decidedly unlawful; but whether he had sufficient acquaintance with the law to know this, is doubtful. He seems, however, to have been ambitious of a splendid religious establishment at Ophrah, and

35 Neither <sup>a</sup> showed they kindness to the house of Jerubbaal, namely, Gideon, according to all the goodness which he had showed unto Israel

CHAPTER IX.

AND Abimelech the son of Jerubbaal went to <sup>a</sup> Shechem unto his mother's brethren, and communed with them, and with all the family of the house of his mother's father, saying,

2 Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem, <sup>b</sup> Whether is better for you, either that all the sons of Jerubbaal, which are <sup>c</sup> threescore and ten persons, reign over you, or that one reign over you? remember also that I am <sup>d</sup> your bone and your flesh.

3 And his mother's brethren spake of him in the ears of all the men of Shechem all these words: and their hearts inclined <sup>e</sup> to follow Abimelech; for they said, He is our brother.

4 And they gave him threescore and ten pieces of silver out of the house of <sup>f</sup> Baal-berith, wherewith Abimelech hired <sup>g</sup> vain and light persons, which followed him.

5 And he went unto his father's house at Ophrah, and slew <sup>h</sup> his brethren the sons of Jerubbaal, being threescore and ten persons, upon one stone: notwithstanding yet Jotham the youngest son of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himself.

6 And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the house of Millo, and went, and made Abimelech king, by the <sup>i</sup> plain of the pillar that was in Shechem.

7 ¶ And when they told it to Jotham, he went and stood in the top of mount <sup>j</sup> Gerizim, and lifted up his voice, and cried, and said unto them, Harken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you.

8 The <sup>k</sup> trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them; and they said unto the olive-tree, Reign thou over us.

9 But the olive-tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, <sup>l</sup> wherewith by me they honour God and man, and <sup>m</sup> go to be promoted over the trees?

10 And the trees said to the fig-tree, Come thou, and reign over us.

11 But the fig-tree said unto them, Should I forsake my sweetness, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees?

12 Then said the trees unto the vine, Come thou, and reign over us.

13 And the vine said unto them, Should I leave my wine, which <sup>n</sup> cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

14 Then said all the trees unto the <sup>o</sup> bramble, Come thou, and reign over us.

15 And the bramble said unto the trees, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my <sup>p</sup> shadow: and if not, let fire <sup>q</sup> come out of the bramble, and devour the <sup>r</sup> cedars of Lebanon.

probably neglected his attendance of the tabernacle, which led eventually to open idolatry. Thus it often happens that indifference to public worship leads to apostasy from true religion.

It is said, (ver. 27.) speaking of this epiph, that all Israel went "a whoring after it;" but, as it does not appear that they acknowledged any god besides Jehovah during Gideon's life, it may be said, how could this be spiritual adultery, which is always understood to be idolatry? In answer to this, we may remark, that the God of Israel was not only jealous of idol-worship, but of any worship contrary to his commands; if, therefore, Gideon presumed to wear the garments, or perform the duties of Aaron, or of his sons, it was a crime that subjected to the penalty of death, though it might not always be inflicted. Thus the worship of Jehovah himself, with rites not of his own appointing, and in a manner contrary to his express law, was a crime analogous to idolatry, or spiritual adultery, which includes every manner of preferring the creature to the Creator, or our inventions to his appointments.

Gideon, we are told, lived to a good old age, and the land had rest and peace during his government; but after his death, Israel soon forgot both their deliverer and their God, and the very epiph, with whatever it implied, which he had made at first, probably with no criminal design, was employed in the service of various idols, and especially of Baal-berith, their favourite god, to whom they probably gave this name, which means, "the Lord of the covenant," in mimicry of Jehovah, who was the Covenant God of Israel; and with a view to smooth the way, or to make the transition more easy from the service of the true God to idolatry. Apostasy is seldom sudden; the way to it is generally prepared by various gradations; principles are relaxed; men are conformed a little, and a little more, to the fashions and customs of the world, till it is at last found scarcely worth while to keep up a distinction, and all the restraints of religion are thrown off.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—33. Abimelech assumes the kingdom, and murders his brethren.—Though Gideon had many sons by his various wives, it was the son only of his concubine and slave who aspired to reign. This probably originated in the folly of his mother, who had called him Abimelech, (my father is king,) it is not unlikely with a view to excite his ambition for the kingdom, which his father had refused both for himself and his family. Ambition is bounded by no ties of justice or humanity. When a throne is in view, the power to attain it will never be restrained by scruples of right or equity; and when attained by violence, it will be secured, if possible, by the same means as here: the murder of all his father's other sons, though threescore and ten, was not thought too dear a price for the security of the usurper. The instruments of his cruelty were "vain and light persons"—"worthless and dissolute," says Dr. Clarke, assassins "hired" for the occasion. Thus his throne was founded in artifice and blood; how it prospered we shall see in the sequel, for "there is a God in heaven that judgeth righteously."

With all the art, and with all the cruelty of Abimelech, Jotham, one of his father's sons, far more worthy, and a man evidently of superior intelligence, providentially escapes by concealment; and probably lived to see the reward of his brother's cruelty and baseness. Jotham, however, particularly claims our notice as author of the oldest, and one of the most beautiful parables in existence, independent of its inspired authority. It is the nature of a parable, or fable, to give "tongues to trees," and here we find them in conversation. The trees resolve to choose a king, and apply successively to the olive, the fig-tree, and the vine, to reign over them; but they each plead excuses, and decline the intended honour, excusing themselves in a manner which might directly bring to the recollection of the hearers, the conduct of Gideon in refusing to take the office; and intimating that he who aspired to it was not likely to prove a blessing, like the olive, the fig-tree, or the vine; but would prove a mere bramble, and eventually destroy them.

What is here figuratively said of wine, that it "cheereth the heart of God and man," has been cavilled at as false and improper; but admits of an easy and beautiful explanation. Libations of wine formed a part of the sacrifices offered to Jehovah, and being of his appointment, must be acceptable

Ver. 35. Jerubbaal.—[Rather, Jerubbaal Gideon; as we say, Simon Peter; or call a person by his Christian and surname. Gideon was a mighty man of valour, a true patriot, evidently disinterested and void of ambition. He loved his country, and hazarded his life for it; but refused the kingdom, when offered to him and his heirs. The act of making the epiph was totally wrong; yet, probably it was done with no reprehensible design. Of his private character we know little—it does not appear to have been very exemplary.]—Bagster.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 4. Vain and light persons.—["Worthless and dissolute men;" persons who were living on the public, and had nothing to lose. Such was the foundation of his Babel government. By a cunning management of such unprincipled men most revolutions are brought about.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. On one stone.—On the great sacrificial stone belonging to the idol temple of Mexico, which is now exhibiting by Bullock, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, London, 30,000 human beings are said to have been sacrificed at the coronation of their last emperor. See Cullen's Mexico.

Ver. 8. Olive tree.—[The sayith, or olive tree, in the Linnean system, is a genus of the diospyra monogyna class of plants. It is of a moderate height, and grows best in sunny places. Its trunk is knotty; bark smooth, of an ash colour; wood solid and yellowish; leaves oblong, almost like those of the willow, of a dark green colour on the upper side, and whitish below. In June it puts forth white flowers, growing in bunches, each of one piece, widening towards the top, and dividing into four parts. After this succeeds the fruit which is oblong and plump; first green, then pale, and when quite ripe, black. Within it is enclosed a hard stone, filled with oblong seeds. It was the most useful of all the trees in the field or forest; as the bramble was the meanest and most worthless.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. Go to be promoted over the trees, &c.—See Margin; intimating that the office of a king was to watch over, and care for all his subjects.

Ver. 15. The bramble.—[Margin, "Thistle;" a kind of thorn-bush, of which the particular species is uncertain, and of no consequence. See Har- ris's Natural History, in Bramble and in Thorn, and compare Psal. lviij. 13.]

16 Now therefore, if ye have done truly and sincerely, in that ye have made Abimelech king, and if ye have dealt well with Jerubbaal and his house, and have done unto him according to the deservings of his hands;

17 (For my father <sup>a</sup> fought for you, and <sup>a</sup> adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian;

18 And <sup>a</sup> ye are risen up against my father's house this day, and have slain his sons, threescore and ten persons, upon one stone, and have made Abimelech, the <sup>a</sup> son of his maid-servant, king over the men of Shechem, because he is your brother;)

19 If ye then have dealt truly and sincerely with Jerubbaal and with his house this day, then <sup>a</sup> rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him also rejoice in you:

20 But if not, let <sup>a</sup> fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the house of Millo; and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the house of Millo, and devour Abimelech.

21 And Jotham ran away, and fled, and went to Beer, and dwelt there, for fear of Abimelech his brother.

22 ¶ When Abimelech had reigned three years over Israel,

23 Then God sent <sup>a</sup> an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem; and the men of Shechem <sup>a</sup> dealt treacherously with Abimelech:

24 That <sup>b</sup> the cruelty done to the threescore and ten sons of Jerubbaal might come, and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother, which slew them; and upon the men of Shechem, which <sup>c</sup> aided him in the killing of his brethren.

25 And the men of Shechem set liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal the son of Ebed came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem: and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him.

27 And they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes, and made <sup>d</sup> merry, and went into the house <sup>e</sup> of their god, and did eat and drink, and cursed Abimelech.

28 And Gaal the son of Ebed said, Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we should serve him? is not he the son of Jerubbaal? and Zebul his officer? serve the men of Hamor <sup>s</sup> the father of Shechem: for why should we serve him?

29 And <sup>b</sup> would to God this people were under my hand! then would I remove Abimelech. And he said to Abimelech, Increase thine army, and come out.

30 ¶ And when Zebul the ruler of the city heard the words of Gaal the son of Ebed, his anger was <sup>i</sup> kindled.

31 And he sent messengers unto Abimelech <sup>j</sup> privily, saying, Behold, Gaal the son of Ebed and his brethren be come to Shechem; and, behold, they fortify the city against thee.

32 Now therefore up by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field:

33 And it shall be, that in the morning, as soon as the sun is up, thou shalt rise early, and set upon the city: and, behold, when he and the people that is with him come out against thee, then mayest thou do to them <sup>k</sup> as thou shalt find occasion.

34 ¶ And Abimelech rose up, and all the people that were with him, by night, and they laid wait against Shechem in four companies.

35 And Gaal the son of Ebed went out, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and Abimelech rose up, and the people that were with him, from lying in wait.

36 And when Gaal saw the people, he said to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul said unto him, thou seest the shadow of the mountains as if they were men.

to him, who is therefore poetically represented as gratified thereby. So, in a preceding verse, the olive is said to "honour God," as well as man, because of the oil burnt before his presence in the sacred chandelier of the tabernacle. Some critics, however, considering that Jotham was addressing idolaters, choose to render the word Elohim plural, gods, and apply it to their idols, to whom it certainly may easily be accommodated, as they offered a similar tribute of oil and wine to the objects of their worship.

Ver. 34-57. Strife breaks out between Abimelech and the Shechemites.—Jotham had unprepared, or at least predicted, the discord and hatred between Abimelech and his besotted subjects, and that they should devour each other. Accordingly, after three years' reign, which seem to have produced nothing worth recording, the fire begins to break out; and that we may not refer the circumstance to the mere natural course of events, we are expressly informed that the hand of Providence was in it. That God, who has all the affairs of the universe under his control, has equal command over good and bad men, and pure and fallen spirits, and often employs the worst of them to fulfil his will, and makes them the instruments of punishment to each other. So in this instance, "God sent an evil spirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem;" and that with the express design, "that the cruelty done to the sons of Jerubbaal (Gideon) might come" home to them; and their blood be laid on Abimelech their murderer, and the men of Shechem who "aided" and assisted him. This evil spirit created mutual jealousies between them; on the one part suspicion, and on the other treachery and treason. The men of Shechem, we are told, set liers in wait for their king in the top of the mountains, doubtless to assassinate him, and in the meantime they robbed all that came that way. The very men who had so lately raised Abimelech to power, were now no less ready to pull him down. A party of the disaffected meeting to keep their vintage festival, one Gaal, a factious demagogue of the same unprincipled character as Abimelech, conspires against him, and endeavours to supplant him. But Zebul, faithful to his unworthy master, sends him secret intelligence, whereby he comes upon the city by surprise, and Gaal, who had vaunted himself against him, is constrained to go out and fight with him. He is however discomfited. Abimelech takes the city, and the people flying for shelter to an idol temple, the temple and all whom it contained, being above 1000 persons, are consumed to ashes.

Abimelech now flushed with victory, besieges Thebez, and the people, as in the other instance, take refuge in the tower of the city, which he attempts to burn also; but while in the act of holding a firebrand against the door, a woman on the top Ver. 20. The house of Millo.—This is supposed to have been a sort of town, where all the principal persons were accustomed to assemble.

Ver. 21. Beer.—[Probably the Beer mentioned by Maundrell, three hours or a half, or about ten miles, north of Jerusalem, towards Shechem. It is situated toward the south, on an easy declivity; and has a fountain of excellent water, at the bottom of the hill, from which it has taken its name. Close to the well are the mouldering walls of a ruined convent. Dr. Richardson says, that it seems to have been once a place of considerable consequence.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. Trode the grapes and made merry.—(Margin, "songs.") This festivity (the vintage) was usually accompanied with singing and shouting. (See Gen. xvi. 10.)

Ver. 28. Zebul his officer.—The governor of Shechem, ver. 30. (Margin, "his officer.")—Rather, "and I would say to Abimelech," as the LXX. renders it; for, as Dr. Wall observes, this was not said in the presence of Abimelech, as our translation imports; but at an intemperate feast in his absence, when he boasted he would challenge him.]—Bagster. That is, boasted he had his back for he was absent: perhaps he sent, or pretended to send, a challenge to that effect to Abimelech.

Ver. 31. Fortify the city.—[Under pretence of repairing the walls and towers, they were actually putting the place in a state of defence, intending to seize on the government as soon as they found Abimelech coming against them.]—Bagster.

Ver. 35. Gaal.—[Of this person we know no more than is here recorded. He was probably one of the descendants of the Canaanites, who hoped, from the state of the public mind, and their disaffection to Abimelech, to cause a revolution, and thus to restore the ancient government as it was under Hamor, the father of Shechem. Josephus says he was a man of authority, who sojourned with them, with his armed men and kinsmen: and that the Shechemites desired that he would allow them a guard during the vintage.]—Bagster.

Ver. 36. Shadow of the mountains.—Harnier quotes a traveller in the Holy Land as saying, that there are many fragments of rocks scattered up and down the country, which may easily be imagined to look like parties of men at a distance. The fact is, Zebul wished to deceive Gaal, and lull him into security.

37 And Gaal spake again and said, See there come people down by the middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of <sup>m</sup> Meonenim.

38 Then said Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou <sup>n</sup> saidst, Who is Abimelech, that we should serve him? is not this the people that thou hast despised? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

39 And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech.

40 And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him, and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah: and Zebul thrust out Gaal and his brethren, that they should not dwell in Shechem.

42 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people went out into the field; and they told Abimelech.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and, behold, the people were come forth out of the city; and he rose up against them, and smote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, rushed forward, and stood in the entering of the gate of the city: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and slew them.

45 And Abimelech fought against the city all that day; and <sup>o</sup> he took the city, and slew the people that was therein, and beat down <sup>p</sup> the city, and sowed it with <sup>q</sup> salt.

46 ¶ And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, they entered into a hold of the house of the god <sup>r</sup> Berith.

47 And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together.

48 And Abimelech gat him up to mount <sup>s</sup> Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an axe in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his shoulder, and said cast down part of a mill-stone upon his head, and fractured his skull: on which, finding his cause hopeless, and still anxious to avoid the supposed disgrace of dying by the hands of a woman, he directs his armour-bearer to thrust him through, and dies.

Thus God (says the inspired writer) rendered the wickedness of Abimelech and of the men of Shechem, upon their own heads: and "upon them came the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal." And thus we see, that though crimes of the most atrocious nature may succeed for a time, yet the sins of wicked men will sooner or later "find them out;" and there is no escape from the righteous vengeance of the God of all the earth.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—18. The governments of Tola and of Jair, and the oppression of the Philistines and the Ammonites.—The governments of Tola and of Jair afford no event for historical record, except that the latter had thirty sons who rode on asses colts (a mark of honour) and who possessed thirty cities, which were called Havoth-jair, or "the villages of Jair," and therefore certainly places of no great consequence. It is lamentable to observe that the children of Israel adhered to the worship of Jehovah no longer than they were either in affliction or under the strong control of some pious supreme magistrate. This however may serve to show the great importance of a wise and efficient magistracy; and Ver. 37. By the plain of Meonenim.—Some translate this, "By the way of the oaks," or oaken groves; or others, "By the way of the magicians," or "regarders of times," as in our own margin. "Probably (says Dr. Clarke) it was a place in which augurs and soothsayers dwelt;" and it is not improbable that they dwelt, like the Druids, among the oaks.

Ver. 45. And sowed it with salt.—(Salt in small quantities renders land extremely fertile; but too much of it destroys vegetation. Every place, says Pliny, in which salt is found, is barren, and produces nothing. Hence the sowing of a place with salt was a custom in different nations to express permanent desolation. Adrian, (A. D. 114.) resolving to level Jerusalem with the ground, not to be rebuilt, strewn salt on the foundations. Sigonius observes, that when Milan was taken, A. D. 1162, the walls were razed, and it was sown with salt. And Brantome informs us, that it was an ancient custom in France, to sow the house of a man with salt, who had been declared a traitor to his king. Charles IX. king of France, the most base and perfidious of human beings, caused the house of Admiral Coligni (whom he and the 50 ¶ Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped against Thebez, and took it.

51 But there was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

55 And when the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place.

56 ¶ Thus God rendered <sup>w</sup> the wickedness of Abimelech, which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren:

57 And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and upon them came the <sup>x</sup> curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal.

CHAPTER X.

1 Tola judgeth Israel in Shamir. 3 Jair, whose thirty sons had thirty cities. 6 The Philistines and Ammonites oppress Israel. 10 In their misery God sendeth them to their false gods. 15 Upon their repentance he punisheth them.

AND after Abimelech there arose to <sup>y</sup> defend Israel Tola the son of Puah, the son of Dodo, a man of Issachar; and he dwelt in Shamir in mount Ephraim.

2 And he judged Israel twenty and three years, and died, and was buried in Shamir.

no sooner, indeed, are any people liberated from the controls of law and government, than they fall into anarchy and irreligion, which generally go together, and soon sink the people into the lowest degradation, and reduce them under slavery to the nearest despot. This was the case with Israel: the tribes west of Jordan fell into the hands of the Philistines, and those on the east of that river, into the hands of the children of Ammon.

It is the natural tendency of trouble, whether national or personal, to set us on reflection; such was the case with Israel on this and many other occasions. And they no sooner reflected, than they perceived that all their misfortunes originated in their apostasy. They therefore resolve immediately to forsake their idols and return unto Jehovah; but he replied, (either by the high priest, or by some accredited prophet,) "Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen; let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation." While, however, the Lord appears to turn a deaf ear to their complaints, his heart melts with pity over them; "his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel," and he provided for them a deliverer.

Let us turn our attention now from Israel to ourselves, and we shall find here, 1. A faithful picture of the fickleness and rebellion of the human heart. 2. A representation of the nature of true penitence, which casts the sinner at the footstool of divine mercy, in an unconditional surrender: "We have sin-

Ptolemy relates, that Pyrrhus was killed at the siege of Thebes, by a piece of a tile, which a woman threw upon his head.]—Bagster.

Ver. 56. God rendered.—[Both the fratricide Abimelech and the unprincipled men of Shechem had the iniquity visited upon them of which they had been guilty. Man's judgment may be avoided; but there is no escape from that of God. How many houses have been sown with salt in France, by the just judgment of God, for the massacre of the Protestants on the eve of St. Bartholomew. See note on ver. 45.]—Bagster.

3 ¶ And after him arose Jair, <sup>a</sup> a Gileadite, and judged Israel twenty and two years.

4 And he had thirty sons that <sup>c</sup> rode on thirty ass colts, and they had thirty cities, which <sup>d</sup> are called <sup>e</sup> Havoth-jair unto this day, which <sup>f</sup> are in the land of Gilead.

5 And Jair died, and was buried in Camon.

6 ¶ And <sup>f</sup> the children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim, and Ashtaroth, and the gods of Syria, and the gods of <sup>g</sup> Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and the gods of the Philistines, and forsook the Lord, and served not him.

7 And the angel of the Lord was hot against Israel, and he <sup>h</sup> sold them into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon.

8 And that year they vexed and <sup>i</sup> oppressed the children of Israel eighteen years, all the children of Israel that <sup>j</sup> were on the other side Jordan in the land of the Amorites, which <sup>k</sup> is in Gilead.

9 Moreover the children of Ammon passed over Jordan to fight also against Judah, and against Benjamin, and against the house of Ephraim; so that Israel was sore <sup>l</sup> distressed.

10 ¶ And the children of Israel cried unto the Lord, saying, We have sinned against thee, both because we have forsaken our God, and also served Baalim.

11 And the Lord said unto the children of Israel, Did not I deliver you from the <sup>m</sup> Egyptians, and from the <sup>n</sup> Amorites, from the children of <sup>o</sup> Ammon, and from the Philistines?

12 The <sup>p</sup> Zidonians also, and the <sup>q</sup> Amalekites, and the Maonites, did <sup>r</sup> oppress you; and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand.

13 Yet ye have forsaken <sup>s</sup> me, and served other gods: wherefore I will deliver you no more.

14 Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen; let them <sup>t</sup> deliver you in the time of your tribulation.

15 ¶ And the children of Israel said unto the Lord, We have sinned: do thou <sup>u</sup> unto us whatsoever <sup>v</sup> seemeth good unto thee; deliver us only, we pray thee, this day.

16 And they put away <sup>w</sup> the <sup>x</sup> strange gods from among them, and served the Lord: and his soul was <sup>y</sup> grieved <sup>z</sup> for the misery of Israel.

17 ¶ Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, and encamped in Gilead. And the children of Israel assembled themselves together, and encamped in <sup>a</sup> Mizpeh.

18 And the people and princes of Gilead said one to another, What man <sup>b</sup> is he that will begin to fight against the children of Ammon? he shall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

CHAPTER XI.

1 The covenant between Jephthah and the Gileadites, that he should be their head. 12 The treaty of peace between him and the Ammonites is in vain. 29 Jephthah's vow 32 His conquest of the Ammonites. 34 He performeth his vow on his daughter.

NOW Jephthah <sup>a</sup> the Gileadite was <sup>b</sup> a mighty man of valour, and he <sup>c</sup> was the son of <sup>d</sup> a harlot: and Gilead begat Jephthah. 2 And Gilead's wife bare him sons; and his wife's sons grew up, and they thrust out Jephthah, and said unto him, Thou shalt not <sup>e</sup> inherit in our father's house; for thou <sup>f</sup> art the son of a strange woman.

3 Then Jephthah fled <sup>g</sup> from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob: and there were gathered vain <sup>h</sup> men to Jephthah, and went out with him.

4 ¶ And it came to pass <sup>i</sup> in process of time, that the children of Ammon made war against Israel.

5 And it was so, that when the children of Ammon made war against Israel, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob:

6 And they said unto Jephthah, Come, and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.

7 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, Did <sup>j</sup> not ye hate me, and expel me out of my father's house? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress?

8 And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, Therefore we turn again <sup>k</sup> to thee now, that thou mayest go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be our head <sup>l</sup> over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah said unto the elders of Gilead, If ye bring me home again to fight against the children of Ammon, and the Lord deliver them before me, shall I be your head?

10 And the elders of Gilead said unto Jephthah, The <sup>m</sup> Lord <sup>n</sup> be witness between us, if we do not so according to thy words.

11 Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head <sup>o</sup> and captain over them: and Jephthah uttered all his words before the Lord in <sup>p</sup> Mizpeh.

med: do thou unto us whatsoever seemeth good unto thee; deliver us only, we pray thee, this day." And, 3. A just representation of the goodness and grace of God. Like the father of the returning prodigal, his heart yearns over the repentant sinner; and no sooner does he sink at his heavenly father's feet, than he falls upon his neck, and kisses him. (Luke xv. 11, &c.)

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—33. The early history of Jephthah, and his defeat of the Ammonites.—In the close of the preceding chapter, we see the people and princes of Gilead advertising (as it were) for a captain to lead them against the children of Ammon. At length they recollect Jephthah, whom they had banished for his illegitimacy, or perhaps (as some understand it) for his being the son of a foreigner, a Canaanitish woman. This circumstance seems to have led him, being naturally of a bold and enterprising disposition, to a kind of predatory life, with a number of followers, certainly not of the best character; and he became "a mighty man of valour." Hearing this, they resolve to sacrifice their private feelings to the public cause, and entreat him to become their captain. After some reproach on his part, for their former unkindness, and on their part a solemn promise of fidelity to him and to the cause, he engages in the design; but, knowing with whom he had to do, he is careful to recapitulate the terms of their agreement before the Lord in Mizpeh, and of course before all the people, who were there in camp assembled, by whom his appointment was confirmed and ratified.

These preliminaries settled, Jephthah immediately sends messengers to the king of Ammon, to demand an explanation of his conduct, in sending an army into their country; and argues very forcibly with him, on the ground that the land was theirs, having been assigned to them by the Lord of the whole earth, who had also put them in possession of it by a series of miracles, of which the king could not be ignorant. Moreover, they had not taken their land from the Ammonites, but from the Amorites; from Sihon king of Heshbon, and Og king

Ver. 12. Maonites.—[The LXX. has "the Midianites," which Dr. Wall thinks he true reading. But the Maonites might be a tribe of Arabs, inhabitants of Maon, (Jos. xv. 55. 1 Sa. xxiii. 24, 25; xxv. 2.) which assisted Moab.]—B. CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. Son of a harlot.—[Probably zonah should be rendered, as in Jos. ii. 1. a hostess or innkeeper; so Targum of Jonathan, zeboah bay itzeth mundekah, "and he was the son of a woman, a tavern-keeper." Ver. 3. Tob.—[Probably the same as Ish-Tob; and appears to have been a part of Syria, near Zobah, Rehob, and Maachah, east of Jordan, and in the most northern part of the portion of Manasseh. If so, it could not be far from Gilead, the country of Jephthah. This country is called Tobis or Tubin, 1 Mac. v. 13. and the Jews who inhabited this district, Tubient; 3 Mac. xii. 17.]—B. Ver. 11. Mizpeh.—[This Mizpeh was east of Jordan, in the mountains of Gilead, (Ge. xxxi. 49.) and hence called Mizpeh of Gilead, (ver. 19.) to distinguish it from another place of the same name, west of Jordan, in the tribe of Judah. Jos. xv. 38.]—B. Ver. 11. Mizpeh.

12 ¶ And Jephthah sent messengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, saying, What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against me to fight in my land?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon answered unto the messengers of Jephthah, Because "Israel took away my land, when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto "Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore restore those lands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah sent messengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon:

15 And said unto him, Thus saith Jephthah, Israel took not "away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when Israel came up from Egypt, and walked "through the wilderness unto the Red sea, and came to "Kadesh;

17 Then Israel sent messengers unto the king of Edom, saying, Let me, I pray thee, pass through thy land: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they sent unto the king of Moab: but he would not consent: and Israel abode in Kadesh.

18 Then they went along through the wilderness, and compassed "the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the east side of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, but came not within the border "of Moab: for Arnon was the border of Moab.

19 And Israel sent "messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon; and Israel said unto him, Let us pass, we pray thee, through thy land into my place.

20 But Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his coast: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought against Israel.

21 And the LORD God of Israel delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Israel, and they smote them: so Israel possessed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.

22 And they possessed all the coasts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderness even unto Jordan.

23 So now the LORD God of Israel hath dispossessed the Amorites from before his people Israel, and shouldest thou possess it?

24 Wilt not thou possess that which "Chemosh thy god giveth thee to possess? So "whomsoever the LORD our God shall drive "out from before us, them will we possess.

25 And now art thou any thing better than Balak "the son of Zippor, king of Moab? did he ever strive against Israel, or did he ever fight against them, 26 While Israel dwelt in "Heshbon and her towns, and in "Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coasts of Arnon, three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?

27 Wherefore I have not sinned against thee, but thou doest me wrong to war against me: the LORD the Judge "be judge "this day between the children of Israel and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he sent him.

29 ¶ Then the "Spirit of the LORD came upon "Jephthah, and he passed over Gilead, and Manasseh, and passed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he passed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah vowed "a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, 31 Then it shall be, that "whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall "surely be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 ¶ So Jephthah passed over unto the children of Ammon to fight against them; and the LORD delivered them into his hands.

33 And he smote them from Aroer, even till thou come to "Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto "the plain of the vineyards, with a very great slaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were subdued before the children of Israel.

34 ¶ And Jephthah came to "Mizpeh unto his house, and, behold, his daughter came out to meet him with "timbrels and with dances: and she was his only child; "beside her he had neither son nor daughter.

of Bashan, and were not bound to inquire how they came by it; but having been put in possession of it by the God of Israel, and having now enjoyed peaceable possession for three hundred years, to him they appealed for the maintenance of their right. So Jephthah, animated by the Spirit of the Lord, in confidence of the divine support, goes to war with the Ammonites, gains a complete victory over them, and liberates his country, that is, the land of Gilead, and all their territory east of Jordan.

From what is said of Chemosh, (ver. 24.) Voltaire and other infidel writers have pretended, that Jephthah here acknowledges the divinity of their idol, and that they had received possessions from him. In answer to this, however, Bishop Horne very properly remarks, that his was what "logicians style an argument ad hominem; (that is) an argument formed upon the principles of the adversaries, and therefore conclusive to them. (As if he had said,) You deem yourselves entitled to any possession acquired, as you imagine, by the assistance of him (Chemosh) whom you call your god, and cannot reasonably expect us to yield that which we know the Lord our God has awarded to us."

Ver. 12. Sent messengers.—[In this Jephthah acted in accordance with the av of Moses; and hence the justice of his cause would appear more forcibly to the people.]—Basster.

Ver. 31. And I will offer it—Margin, "OR I will offer it."—[tohaaleetheshoo olah, rather, as Dr. Randolph and others contended, "and I will offer him (or to him, i. e. Jehovah), a burnt-offering;" for hoo, may with much more propriety be referred to the person to whom the sacrifice was to be made, than to the thing to be sacrificed. Unless understood in this way, or as the marginal reading, it must have been the vow of a heathen or a mad-man. If a dog, or other unclean animal, had met him, he could not have made it a burnt-offering; or if his neighbour's wife, sons, &c., his vow gave him no right over them.]—B. there mentioned, that we might connect it with its fulfilment. It has been a matter of much controversy, in what sense Jephthah's vow should be understood. Deistical writers have urged this as an instance of human sacrifice among the Jews, and some interpreters, both Jewish and Christian, have agreed with them, as to the fact; but we are most decidedly of the opposite opinion, and for the following reasons:

1. His vow did not require it. That was, (ver. 31.) "When I return in peace, whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, shall surely be the LORD's; and," or, "or I will offer it up for a burnt-offering." Taking the translation in the margin, (for which we have given sufficient authority in the note,) there is no difficulty; who, or whatsoever came forth, was to be the LORD's; that is, devoted to his service in the tabernacle; or, if a clean beast, offered up in sacrifice. But suppose that even this were not admissible, (though allowed by all the learned,) still the latter clause completely exonerates Jephthah from offering up his daughter; for the text (upon very good authority) may be read thus: "And I will offer HIM (i. e. Jehovah) a burnt-offering;" that is, in addition to devoting the person who shall come to meet me to the LORD's service, "I will offer to him a clean beast for a burnt-offering;" so that on no rational mode of interpretation was the death of see Ex. xxi. 17. "His father or his mother;" Ge. xli. 44. "Hand or foot;" Nu. xxii. 26. "Right hand or left;" De. iii. 24. "In heaven or in earth;" and so frequently. — I will offer it.—Some have supposed a letter dropped in the text, which would render the personal pronoun him, obligatory. But for this supposition there is no need, since, as Parkhurst's remarks, the word hu (as it stands) is often used for a personal pronoun, and the preposition to is implied, as in our own language; of which that ingenious lexicographer gives the following instances: Ge. xxvii. 4. "Could not speak peaceably (to) him;" 2 Sam. xv. 4. "Do (to) him justice;" xx. 5. "Appointed (to) him." See also Dr. Clarke's comment, and Dr. Randolph's celebrated Sermon on Jephthah's Vow. 35 And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent <sup>p</sup> his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter! thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot <sup>q</sup> go back.

36 And she said unto him, My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as <sup>r</sup> the Lord hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And she said unto her father, Let this thing be done for me: Let me alone two months, that I may <sup>s</sup> go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

38 And he said, Go. And he sent her away for two months: and she went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

39 And it came to pass at the end of two months, that she returned unto her father, who <sup>t</sup> did with her according to his vow which he had vowed: and she knew no man. And it was a <sup>u</sup> custom in Israel,

CHAPTER XII.

1 The Ephraimites, quarrelling with Jephthah, and discovered by Shilboleth, are slain by the Gileadites. 7 Jephthah dieth. 8 Ibban, who had thirty sons and thirty daughters, 11 and Elon, 13 and Abdon, who had forty sons and thirty nephews, judged Israel.

AND <sup>a</sup> the men of Ephraim <sup>b</sup> gathered themselves together, and went northward, and said unto Jephthah, Wherefore passedst thou over to fight against the children of Ammon, and didst not call us to go with thee? we will burn thy house upon thee with fire.

2 And Jephthah said unto them, I and my people were at great strife with the children of Ammon; and when I called you, ye delivered me not out of their hands.

3 And when I saw that ye delivered me not, I put <sup>c</sup> my life in my hands, and passed over against the children of Ammon, and the Lord delivered them into my hand: wherefore then are ye come up unto me this day, to fight against me?

4 Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim: and the men of Gilead smote Ephraim, because they said, Ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim among the Ephraimites, and among the Manassites.

5 And the Gileadites took the passages <sup>d</sup> of Jordan before the Ephraimites: and it was so, that when those Ephraimites which were escaped said, Let me go over; that the men his daughter called for. What has led commentators to this interpretation, seems to be the law, Levit. xxvii. 29, "None devoted, which shall be devoted of man, shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death." But the original term there used is cherem, which implies an anathema, or curse; but Jephthah employs no anathema; his was a simple vow, and could not be brought under that law. (See exposition and note on the above passage.)

2. The law did not permit it. Nothing unclean might be offered up on the sacred altar, much less a human victim. The heathen offered their children unto Moloch, but the law expressly says, "Thou shalt not do so unto the Lord thy God; for every abomination to the Lord, which he hateth, have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods." (Deut. xii. 30. See also Isa. lxvi. 3.) Nor had parents, in any case, authority to take the lives of their children; for in cases when a son was most disobedient and refractory, and actually incurred the penalty of death thereby, yet must not the parent inflict it, but he must take him before the judge for punishment. (Deut. xxi. 18—21.) And suppose Jephthah's slave had met him, neither had the master power over the life of his slave, Exod. xxi. 20, 26, 27; and in the case of a Hebrew slave, at least, it would be murder, for he was bound to set him free at the end of seven years.

3. There is nothing in the narrative to prove that he sacrificed her. It is only said, that he did with her according to his vow, and his vow was, to devote her to the Lord. Now it appears that there were females residing at the tabernacle, and some way assisting in its duties, probably as singers. (See Ezra ii. 65.) Thus of the Midianitish virgins captured in war, thirty-two of them were devoted to this service. (Num. xxi. 35—40.) But why, it may be said, was he so dejected at the loss of his daughter, if this were all? This objection is not difficult to answer. Is it no trial to an affectionate father to lose the company and services of an only daughter? and especially to lose all chance of his name and family being perpetuated in Israel; and that too at the moment that his name had become distinguished by military glory, and his alliance was likely to be sought for by the first families in Israel?

There are also circumstances in the narrative that, to say the least, render her sacrifice, in a literal sense, very improbable. In the first place, when she came forth to meet her father, it was at the head of a band of virgins, with timbrels and with dances; secondly, when she went to bewail her virginity on the mountains, it is likely she was attended by the same "virgins, her companions;" and, lastly, after she left her father, still the same virgins, probably, went to visit her at the tabernacle, and "lament with her" four days in every year, by an "ordinance," or appointment, doubtless, of her father, who was now judge in Israel. All this was natural, supposing

Ver. 39. Did with her according to his vow.—[That Jephthah did not sacrifice his daughter, but consecrated her to the service of God in the tabernacle, in a state of celibacy, will, we imagine, be sufficiently evident from the following considerations:—1. Human sacrifices were ever an abomination to Jehovah, of which Jephthah could not be ignorant; and consequently he would neither have made such a vow, nor carried it into execution. 2. We are expressly told (ver. 28.) that Jephthah was under the influence of the Spirit of God, which would effectually prevent him from imbruing his hands in the blood of his own child. 3. He had it in his power to redeem his daughter at a very moderate price, (Le. xxvii. 4.) and surely the blood of his daughter, his only child, must have been of more value than thirty shekels. 4. Besides, who was to perform the horrid rite? Not Jephthah himself, who was no priest, and in whom it would have been most unnatural and inhuman; and the priests would certainly have dissuaded him from it. 5. The sacred historian informs us, that she bewailed her virginity, that she knew no man, and that the Israelitish women went yearly, lethamnoth, to comfort or lament with the daughter of Jephthah.—Bagster.

Upon a view of the whole, though Jephthah's vow was certainly a very rash one, and in no way to be justified, or imitated, yet we see no reason to represent him as a murderer, and of his own daughter, whom the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews has enrolled among those Old Testament worthies most remarkable both for their faith and for their valour. (Heb. xi. 32.) See an able exposition of this difficult passage in the works of President Edwards, vol. 9. page 300—308.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—15. The quarrel between Jephthah and the Ephraimites.—Well doth the Psalmist say, "It is a good thing for brethren to dwell together in unity." (Psalm cxxxiii. 1.) for quarrels among strangers are seldom so trivial in their rise, or so serious in their consequences, as those of brethren. Most lamentable is the history now before us. About a century before, the Ephraimites had complained against Gideon, for not calling them to go to war with him against the Midianites; now they are no less angry with Jephthah for not inviting them to assist him against the Ammonites. At first he reasons with them; "Are you come to fight against me, who have just asked my life for the deliverance of the country?" But to fight they are determined, and since Jephthah did not call them to fight with him against the Ammonites, they will now fight against him. The greatest talkers, however, are not always the greatest doers: Jephthah gives them a hint of this. He had sent to them on some former occasion, and they had done nothing; and now they would burn his house, because he did not send for them again. First they abuse him, and then they fight him; but quarrelsome people are not always valiant. They are defeated and flee, and now the Gileadites seek revenge; forty and two thousand are slain, which are more than the whole tribe consisted of at the setting up the tabernacle; so that it must have been now reduced very low.

The slaughter was indeed dreadful, but the incident which took place at the ford of Jordan, has to some seemed incredible, since the men of Ephraim certainly spake the same language with the Gileadites. But in all countries there are various shades of pronunciation.

The judges here named, after Jephthah, seem to have possessed only a local authority in the north-east of Canaan, and nothing is said of their administration, good or evil, but that they had large families, and rode on "asses' colts;" a mark of dignity, as before mentioned. (Chap. v. 10. and x. 4.)

This chapter may, however, afford us a beautiful moral lesson—to cultivate peace among brethren, in the first instance. And when differences unhappily arise, not to insist on our own peculiarities, the Shilboleths of our party, to the injury of our brethren, and the ruin of the church. It has been justly observed, that in the church of Christ, those differences have derate price, (Le. xxvii. 4.) and surely the blood of his daughter, his only child, must have been of more value than thirty shekels. 4. Besides, who was to perform the horrid rite? Not Jephthah himself, who was no priest, and in whom it would have been most unnatural and inhuman; and the priests would certainly have dissuaded him from it. 5. The sacred historian informs us, that she bewailed her virginity, that she knew no man, and that the Israelitish women went yearly, lethamnoth, to comfort or lament with the daughter of Jephthah.—Bagster.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 4. Fugitives of Ephraim.—This, probably, is a reflection on of Gilead said unto him, Art thou an Ephraimite? If he said, Nay;

6 Then said they unto him, Say now Shibboleth: and he said Sibboleth: for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they took him, and slew him at the passages of Jordan: and there fell at that time of the Ephraimites forty and two thousand.

7 ¶ And Jephthah judged Israel six years. Then died Jephthah the Gileadite, and was buried in one of the cities of Gilead.

8 ¶ And after him I Izbaz of Beth-lehem judged Israel.

9 And he had thirty sons, and thirty daughters, whom he sent abroad, and took in thirty daughters from abroad for his sons. And he judged Israel seven years.

10 Then died Izbaz, and was buried at Beth-lehem.

11 ¶ And after him E Elon, a Zebulonite, judged Israel; and he judged Israel ten years.

12 And Elon the Zebulonite died, and was buried in h Aijalon in the country of Zebulun.

13 ¶ And after him I Abdon the son of Hillel, a Pirathonite, judged Israel.

14 And he had forty sons and thirty i nephews, that rode b on threescore and ten ass colts: and he judged Israel eight years.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—25. An angel appears to Manoah, and predicts the birth of Samson.—We find Israel again in the hands of their enemies; and why? Because they had again turned their backs upon their best friend; and a continual propensity to forsake their God, as constantly made them a prey to their enemies. In fact, those who forsake God, throw themselves into the arms of their enemies. Professors who go back into the world are, of course, exposed to its stings; and those who sow to the flesh, must expect to reap its fruits; for as naturally as a bad tree bringeth forth bad fruit, so naturally doth sin "bring forth death." (Rom. vii. 5.) This captivity of Israel, however, appears but partial; certain of the tribes of Dan and Simeon, residing in the vicinity of the Philistines, probably joined in their sports, and were of course partakers of their idolatries and vices. This intermixture of the nations produced, to the Israelites, much vexation; and in the issue, destruction to the Philistines. From what period, however, these forty years are to be reckoned, and how far the power of the Philistines extended over Israel, are points not easy to be ascertained, and in a popular work like this, by no means necessary.

Jephthah, who was banished from Gilead, and collected an army (or banditti rather perhaps) around him by the report of his valour in the land of Tob; among whom, probably, might be some of both the tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh.

It is well known that several nations cannot pronounce certain letters. The sound of th cannot be pronounced by the Persians, no more than by some European nations; though it is common sound among the Arabians. To this day, many of the German Jews cannot articulate th, for which they substitute ss; thus for bath, a house, they say bass.—B. drink not wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing:

5 For, lo, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and no e razor shall come on his head: for the child shall be h a Nazarite unto God from the womb: and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.

6 ¶ Then the woman came and told her husband, saying, A man of God came unto me, and his i countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible: but I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name:

8 ¶ Then Manoah entreated the Lord, and said, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.

9 And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haste, and ran, and showed her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I am.

12 And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass. h How shall we order the child, and i how shall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the Lord said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman let her beware.

14 She m may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: all that I commanded her let her observe.

15 ¶ And Manoah said unto the angel of the Lord, I pray thee, n let us detain thee, until we shall have made ready a kid o for thee.

16 And the angel of the Lord said unto Ma-

The prominent object in this chapter is an angelic vision, which predicts the birth of Samson, who, more than twenty years hence, was to be their deliverer. This man was a Nazarite from his birth, the laws of which institution will be found, with some remarks in reference to this instance, Numb. vi. 2, &c. The appearance, also, so fully accords with those to Gideon, to Joshua, and to the more ancient patriarchs, that we cannot hesitate a moment in pronouncing this angel to be the same illustrious person as appeared to them. (Compare chap. vi.) There are some circumstances, however, which may throw light upon the other appearances, as well as this; as, 1. "His countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible!" (ver. 6.) From this we may infer, that he was attended with a glory like Moses, whose face shone so that the people could not bear to look at him, till he put on a veil. (Exod. xxxiv. 29, &c.) Manoah's wife, possibly, had heard of this circumstance, and therefore addressed him as a man of God; that is, a prophet. 2. Manoah's wife, however, did not dare to inquire his name, but Manoah himself did, under the pretence that he might do him honour when his words came to pass. The angel declines this, declaring that his name was secret, "wonderful," or mysterious; too much so for them to comprehend it. 3. Manoah offers a burnt-offer-ascertained. Dr. Greg. Sharp contends that it was that of X, which is not far different from Z. The writer once witnessed the great difficulty of teaching a Somersetshire boy to pronounce Sunday; he called it Zunday. — Forty and two thousand.—[Arbaim ooshenayim aleph, "forty and two thousand," here the (Raish) and, may mean simple addition; and this number may denote 2040, and not 42,000. At the last census of the Israelites (Nu. xxvi. 37.) the whole tribe of Ephraim only amounted to 32,500, compared with which this last number appears far too great.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 6. I asked him not.—[The Vulgate renders this clause very differently, the negative not being omitted: "Whom when I asked who he was, and whence he came, and by what name he was called, would not tell me; but this he said," &c. The negative is also wanting in the Septuagint, as noah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread: and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto the Lord. For Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the Lord.

17 And Manoah said unto the angel of the Lord, What is thy name, that when thy sayings come to pass we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the Lord said unto him, Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?

19 So Manoah took a kid with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the Lord: and the angel did wonderously; and Manoah and his wife looked on.

20 For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the Lord ascended in the flame of the altar. And Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.

21 But the angel of the Lord did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife. Then Manoah knew that he was an angel of the Lord.

22 And Manoah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God.

23 But his wife said unto him, If the Lord were pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands, neither would he have showed us all these things, nor would as at this time have told us such things as these.

24 ¶ And the woman bare a son, and called his name Samson: and the child grew, and the Lord blessed him.

25 And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan between Zorah and Eshtaol.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Samson desired a wife of the Philistines. 5 In his journey he killeth a lion. 8 In a second journey he findeth honey in the carcass. 10 Samson's marriage feast. 12 His riddle by his wife is made known. 19 He spoileth thirty Philistines. 20 His wife is married to another.

AND Samson went down to a Timnath, and saw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines.

2 And he came up, and told his father and his mother, and said, I have seen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philistines: now therefore get her for me to wife.

3 Then his father and his mother said unto him, Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines? And Samson said unto his father, Get her for me; for she pleaseth me well.

4 But his father and his mother knew not that it was of the Lord, that he sought an occasion against the Philistines: for at that time the Philistines had dominion over Israel.

5 ¶ Then went Samson down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and, behold, a young lion roared against him.

6 And the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman; and she pleased Samson well.

8 ¶ And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aside to see the carcass of the lion: and, behold, there was a swarm of bees and honey in the carcass of the lion.

9 And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and ing; not to the angel, who forbids it, because he knew him not; but to Jehovah. The angel, however, ascended in the flame of the sacrifice, and thus doing wondrously, the pious couple are thereby convinced that their visitor was more than human—that he was divine; for they said, “we shall surely die, because we have seen God.”

This fear, as Jay excellently remarks, is not difficult to be accounted for: “Ever since man became a sinner, an enemy to God, every approach of the Deity has awakened in him terror and confusion. Our consciences naturally tell us, that we deserve nothing but heavy tidings from the invisible world; we therefore dread every messenger from thence. And even when God comes to us in mercy, the same sentiment occurs, and sometimes leads us, like Manoah, to mistake his design, and draw a fearful conclusion from it.” But we must not omit to admire the reasoning of Manoah's wife, who argues their safety, as the same writer justly remarks, on two grounds; “1. The acceptance of their sacrifice. It is not his manner to accept the offering and reject the person. ‘The Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering; but unto Cain and his offering he had not respect.’ 2. The secrets with which he had favoured them; ‘Neither would he have shown us all these things, nor would, as at this time, have told as such things as these.’ This regards the birth of their son, his education, his deliverance of their country: if the accomplishment of this be certain, our destruction is impossible.”

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—20. Samson marries, makes a feast, quarrels with the Philistines, and is revenged.—The close of the preceding chapter informed us of the birth and growth of Samson. This chapter opens with his courtship and marriage, which was very properly reprobated by his parents, as contrary to the Mosaic law. Samson, as is often the case with only and darling sons, was wayward; he had not been subjected to control, and would not now submit to it. The matter, however, was “of the Lord:” not by his direction or approbation, but by the permission of his providence; and it formed an essential link in that chain of events which led to the liberation of Israel from the Philistines.

But there are several circumstances in this part of Samson's history, which may afford us practical and useful hints.—1. Samson's motive in the choice of a wife, was the same that most young men are influenced by to the present day, she pleased him; that is, in all probability, he was captivated with her beauty; and what was the consequence? She seduced and betrayed him; an issue always to be feared, when beauty is not guarded by religious, or at least by virtuous principles. “Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.” (Prov. xxxi. 30.) 2. Samson made a marriage feast, “for so used the young men to do.” And such a custom has the highest sanction, that of our Lord himself, who wrought his first miracle on such an occasion in Cana of Galilee. (John ii. 1, &c.) 3. On these occasions, it seems, the whole time was not spent in eating and drinking, or in music and dancing; but the young people exercised each other's wit by riddles or conversation. The plan here adopted is not, even now, uncommon among young people: but in all references to chance, there is great danger of exciting the angry passions, especially where the shame is considerable, as in this instance. Indeed the relations of Samson's wife, seeing the feast half over, and unable to make out the riddle, begin to be outrageous, and threaten to burn her and her father's house with fire, if she did not elicit its meaning from her husband. On the other hand, Samson felt himself perfectly secure, but could not resist her importunity and tears. She at length teased him out of the secret, and told it to the Philistines, just in time for them to win their reward. Samson, seeing himself betrayed, is now equally irritated; vows vengeance against the Philistines, and slays and strips thirty of them, to pay his companions their reward; and then returns in anger to his father's house.

As to the riddle itself, the historian sufficiently explains it.

It is in the Complutensian Polyglott: “And I asked him whence he was, and his name, but he did not tell me.” This is also the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus; but the Septuagint in the London Polyglott, the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, read the negative particle with the Hebrew text; I asked not his name, &c. —Bagster.

Ver. 18. It is secret.—[It was because his name was secret that Manoah wished to know it. But the angel does not say it was secret, but hoo paltee, “it is wonderful;” the very character given to the Messiah:—“His name shall be called powerful, wonderful,” Is. ix. 6.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. He did wondrously.—That is, he acted suitably to his name, (ver. 20.) CHAP. XIV. Ver. 5. A young lion roared against him.—Hebrew, “in meeting him.” A similar instance occurred to David, 1 Sam. xvii. 34. The most extraordinary circumstance is, the ease with which Samson slew the lion:

“He rent him as he would have rent a kid.” [Now it is not intimated that he did this by his own natural strength; but by the supernatural strength communicated by the Spirit of the Lord coming mightily upon him; which strength was not at his own command, and was, by the will of God, attached to his hair and nazarate.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. A swarm of bees and honey in the carcass of the lion.—[It is probable, that the flesh had been entirely consumed off the bones, which had become dry; and the body having been thrown into some private place, (for Samson turned aside to visit it,) a swarm of bees had formed their combs in the cavity of the dry ribs, or region of the thorax:—nor was it a more improper place than a hollow rock: nor was the thing uncommon, if we may credit ancient writers: Herodotus, Serenus, and Alaropanus.]—Bagster.—A similar instance is alluded to by Virgil, of honey in the carcasses of oxen. This mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcass of the lion.

10 ¶ So his father went down unto the woman: and Samson made there a feast; for so used the young men to do.

11 And it came to pass, when they saw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him.

12 ¶ And Samson said unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you: if ye can certainly declare it me within the seven days of the feast, and find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets and thirty change of garments:

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then shall ye give me thirty sheets and thirty change of garments. And they said unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said unto them, Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that they said unto Samson's wife, Entice thy husband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, lest we burn thee and thy father's house with fire: have ye called us to take that we have? is it not so?

16 And Samson's wife wept before him, and said, Thou dost but hate me, and lovest me not: thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and hast not told it me. And he said unto her, Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and shall I tell it thee?

17 And she wept before him the seven days, while their feast lasted: and it came to pass on the seventh day, that he told her, because she lay sore upon him: and she told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city said unto him on the seventh day before the sun went down. What is sweeter than honey? and what is stronger than a lion? And he said unto them, If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

19 ¶ And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he went down to Ashkelon, and slew thirty men of them, and took their spoil, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle. And his anger was kindled, and he went up to his father's house.

20 But Samson's wife was given to his companion, whom he had used as his friend.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Samson is denied his wife. 3 He burneth the Philistines' corn with foxes and firebrands. 6 His wife and her father are burnt by the Philistines. 7 Samson smiteth their hip and thigh. 9 He is bound by the men of Judah, and delivered to the Philistines. 14 He killeth them with a jawbone. 18 God maketh the fountain En-Hakkore for him in Lehi.

BUT it came to pass within a while after, in the time of wheat harvest, that Samson visited his wife with a kid; and he said, I will go in to my wife into the chamber. But her father would not suffer him to go in.

2 And her father said, I verily thought that thou hadst utterly hated her; therefore I gave her to thy companion: is not her younger sister fairer than she? take her, I pray thee, instead of her.

3 ¶ And Samson said concerning them, Now shall I be more blameless than the Philistines, though I do them a displeasure.

4 And Samson went and caught three hundred foxes, and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between two tails.

5 And when he had set the brands on fire, he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines, and burnt up both the shocks, and also the standing corn, with the vineyards and olives.

6 Then the Philistines said, Who hath done this? And they answered, Samson, the son-

Some expositors have spiritualized it, than which nothing is more easy; but, as we are not fond of unwarranted allegories, we shall only deduce from it one general observation; namely, that our sweetest enjoyments often arise from our greatest difficulties and dangers; and delightful is it, when we can look back on all the way which the Lord has led us through the wilderness, and say, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us."

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—20. Samson, going to visit his wife, and finding her given to another, burns the corn of the Philistines, and destroys a thousand men.—There is no doubt that Samson loved his wife, even to dotage; and, therefore, though he left her in anger and disgust, he wishes to return, and make it up with her; for which purpose he takes her a kid in the time of wheat-harvest. On arriving at her father's house, however, he is informed that she was given to another, who was his friend; that is, "the friend of the bridegroom," at his marriage. Samson now considers himself justified in any revenge that he might take, and therefore he conceals the following plan. Having collected three hundred foxes, (or jackals,) he fastens firebrands to their tails, and sends them blazing among their corn, by which means it is consumed: and not only their corn but their vineyards and oliveyards are greatly damaged. There is no reason in revenge; the Philistines, in their turn, burn his wife and her father, though they had both sided with them against Samson. He again, burning with resentment, smote them "hip and thigh," with a great slaughter. The Philistines now gather together in great force, and the men of Judah, terrified by their threatenings, persuade Samson to suffer them to bind him, and to deliver him up for the preservation of his country. Partly through being wearied out with impotency and contention, and knowing, perhaps, that all their binding would be in vain, when "the Spirit of the Lord," in his miraculous power, came upon him, he submits, and is delivered into the hands of the Philistines, who raise a shout of triumph on the occasion: but no sooner does he hear the shout, than the Spirit of the Lord returns upon him, and with the first weapon that came to hand, which happened to be the jawbone of an ass, he slew, or at least discomfited, a thousand men.

Samson is now exhausted with fatigue, which produced great thirst, and he seemed ready to faint and die, when the Lord clave a hollow place—not in the jawbone, as our translators have rendered it by mistake, but in Lehi, rendered in ver. 17, Ramath-lehi, from the circumstance of his there casting down his weapon—and a spring of water immediately arose, which quenched his thirst, and saved his life; and in gratitude for this mercy, Samson called it En-hakkore, "the well of him that called," or cried, unto the Lord.

This history has been made the subject of so much profane wit, that it seems to require some farther notice. It has been asked, Where could Samson collect three hundred foxes? but the foxes here meant were not exactly the foxes of our must have been some considerable time after his former visit, as some think, when the bones had become dry; but Virgil allows only nine mornings for such a phenomenon.

Ver. 12. Shirts.—[Or, shirts. This will receive illustration from Jackson's description of the Moorish dress:—"It resembles that of the ancient patriarchs, as represented in paintings; (but the paintings are taken from Asiatic models;) that of the men consists of a red cap and turban, a (sleeved) shirt, which hangs outside of the drawers, and comes down below the knee; a (sleeved) coat, which buttons close before, and down to the bottom, with large open sleeves; over which, when they go out of doors, they throw carelessly, and sometimes elegantly, a luyck, or garment of white cotton, silk, or wool, five or six yards long, and five feet wide. The Arabs often speak with the caftan, and even with the shirt, wearing nothing but the layck."—Bagster.

Ver. 15. On the seventh day.—Not of the feast, but of the week, which was probably the fourth day of the feast; indeed the LXX, Arabic, and Syriac, read "the fourth day" in the text. See Boothroyd.

Ver. 18. If ye had not ploughed with my heifer.—Calmet explains this as referring to the corruption and infidelity of his wife. See various instances in Orient. i. c. No. 409.

Ver. 20. His companion.—That is, "the friend of the bridegroom," so called, who had supplanted him.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 4. Caught three hundred foxes.—[Dr. Kennicott and others contend that for shualim, "foxes," we should read shualim, "handfuls," or sheaves of corn. But, 1. The word lachad, rendered caught, never signifies simply to get or take, but always to catch, seize, or take by assault or stratagem. 2. Though the proposed alteration is sanctioned by seven MSS. yet all the versions are on the other side. 3. Admitting this alteration, it will be difficult to prove that the word means either a sheaf or a handful of corn in the ear and straw. It occurs but twice in Scripture (1 Kings xx. 10. Is. xl. 12. Ecc. xiii. 9.) where it evidently means as much as can be contained in the hollow of the hand; but when handfuls of grain in the shock, or sheaves are intended, very different words are used. See Rb. ii. 15, 16, &c. 4. It is not hinted that Samson collected them alone, or in one day; he might have employed many hands and several days in the work. 5. The word shual, properly denotes the jackal, which travellers describe as an animal between the wolf and fox, gregarious, as many as 200 having been seen together, and the most numerous of any in eastern countries; so that Samson might have caught many of them together in nets. —Firebrands.—Hac he put a fire-brand to each.

in-law of the Timnite, because he had taken his wife, and given her to his companion. And the Philistines came up, and burnt <sup>1</sup> her and her father with fire.

7. ¶ And Samson said unto them, Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you, and after that I will cease.

8 And he smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter: and he went down and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam.

9 ¶ Then the Philistines went up, and pitched in Judah, and spread themselves in <sup>2</sup> Lehi.

10 And the men of Judah said, Why are ye come up against us? And they answered, To bind Samson are we come up, to do to him as he hath done to us.

11 Then three thousand men of Judah <sup>3</sup> went to the top of the rock Etam, and said to Samson, Knowest thou not that the Philistines are <sup>4</sup> rulers over us? what is this that thou hast done unto us? And he said unto them, As they did unto me, so have I done unto them.

12 And they said unto him, We are come down to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines. And Samson said unto them, Swear unto me, that ye will not fall upon me yourselves.

13 And they spake unto him, saying, No; but we will bind thee fast, and deliver thee into their hand: but surely we will not kill thee. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 ¶ And when he came unto Lehi, the Philistines shouted against him: and <sup>5</sup> the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and the <sup>6</sup> cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire, and <sup>7</sup> his bands were loosed from off his hands.

15 And he found a <sup>8</sup> new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand, and took it, and slew a thousand men therewith.

16 And Samson said, With the jawbone of an ass, <sup>9</sup> heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an ass have I slain a thousand men.

country, but rather jackals, a smaller animal, which the celebrated traveller Hasselquist calls "the little eastern fox;" which is always gregarious, and goes in troops, and of which, therefore, with some assistance, such a number might easily be collected. The brands were probably formed of some slow-burning material, which would allow them to get among the corn, whether standing or in sheaves; and in that country, at certain times, all vegetation was so dry as to be combustible; hence large fields of grass, or forests of trees, were often set on fire and consumed. The slaying of a thousand men with such a weapon as the jawbone of an ass, has also been thought ridiculous; but it is not so much the weapon, as the hand that wields it, or rather, the power by which that hand was strengthened, that must be considered. The circumstances in which he was placed are also to be remarked. His enemies behold him led, bound with cords, into the midst of their army, without the least apprehension of an attack; when, all at once, the cords burst like tow, and seizing upon the first weapon that comes to hand, he falls upon his enemies, and utterly routs them before they are aware, and they fly in all directions. (See note on ver. 16.)

But the character of Samson also calls for observation. This is the first time we find him calling "on the name of the Lord," and that in great extremity. In such circumstances, as Dr. Kennicott thinks more reasonable, they would have taken to cover, and thus defeated the design of Samson. — Bagster.

Ver. 8. Hip and thigh. — This is supposed to refer to the practice of wrestlers, "hip and thigh men," who, by the twisting of their limbs, threw each other, with great violence, to the ground. Thus, it is possible, Samson threw the Philistines with great force, who, like the modern Turks, were perhaps expert at this exercise. — Taylor's Fragments, No. 143. — Top. — Rather, "clef" of the rock. The word usually signifies a cleft. See the Lexicons, "a chief;" "a thousand men." (Some would render the words aleph ish, "a chief;" "a thousand men," and not aleph, which signifies a chief; besides which the Hebrew idiom would, even in that case, require it to be ish aleph, "a man, a chief," and not aleph ish, "a chief, a man.") Add to which, that every version renders it "a thousand men." — Bagster.

Ver. 16. Heaps upon heaps. — This makes good sense in English, but hardly answers to the original. Parkhurst renders it, "I have put them into the utmost confusion;" Dr. Boothroyd better, "I have utterly routed them."

Ver. 20. Twenty years. — Our translators, in a marginal note, say, "He 17 And it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking, that he cast away the jawbone out of his hand, and called that place <sup>10</sup> Ramath-lehi.

18 ¶ And he was sore athirst, and called on the Lord, and said, <sup>11</sup> Thou hast given this great deliverance into the hand of thy servant: and now shall I die for thirst, and fall into the hand of the uncircumcised?

19 But God clave a hollow place that was in <sup>12</sup> the jaw, and there came <sup>13</sup> water thereout, and when he had drunk, his spirit came <sup>14</sup> again, and he revived: wherefore he called the name thereof <sup>15</sup> En-hakkore, which is in Lehi unto this day.

20 And he judged <sup>16</sup> Israel in the days of the Philistines twenty years.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Samson at Gaza escapeth, and carrieth away the gates of the city. 4 Delilah, corrupted by the Philistines, enticeth Samson. 6 Thrice she is deceived. 15 At last she overcometh him. 21 The Philistines take him, and put him in prison. 22 His strength renewing, he pulleth down the house upon the Philistines, and dieth.

THEN went Samson to Gaza, and saw there <sup>17</sup> a harlot, and went into her.

2 And it was told the Gazites, saying, Samson is come hither. And they compassed <sup>18</sup> him in, and laid wait for him all night in the gate of the city, and were <sup>19</sup> quiet all the night, saying, In the morning, when it is day, we shall kill him.

3 And Samson lay till midnight, and arose at midnight, and took the doors of the gate of the city, and the two posts, and went away with them, <sup>20</sup> bar and all, and put them upon his shoulders, and carried them up to the top of a hill that is before Hebron.

4 ¶ And it came to pass afterward, that he loved a <sup>21</sup> woman <sup>22</sup> in the valley of Sorek, whose name was Delilah.

5 And the lords of the Philistines came up unto her, and said unto her, <sup>23</sup> Entice him, and see wherein his great strength lieth, and by what means we may prevail against him, that we may bind him to <sup>24</sup> afflict him: and we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of silver.

6 And Delilah said to Samson, Tell me, I

it is hard to draw any decisive estimate of character. His present feelings were perhaps temporary, but when his eyes were put out, and he was sent to grind in the prison-house, then these temporary feelings were, we may surely hope, matured to settled piety, and a steady faith in God.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—31. Samson enticed by harlots, betrays his own secret, and is subdued, but finally avenged of all his enemies.—We have just mentioned, that Samson's religious character was not yet formed, though he had cried to the Lord so vehemently in his distress; for in this chapter we find him going after harlots, and instead of having the firmness to deny their solicitations, he betrays his own secret, and they betray him into the hands of his enemies. With them also he prevaricates in a manner inconsistent with the character of a wise and good man. He had a right to refuse to discover the truth; yet he had no right to tell a falsehood. But he paid dearly for this conduct in the end. Through the force of his passions, and the weakness of his resolution, he lost all his supernatural strength, and became weak as another man. Cabnet remarks, that the weakness of his heart was more astonishing than the strength of his body.

Falling now into the hands of his enemies, he is treated with all the cruelty which, in those barbarous times, was commonly displayed to conquered enemies. First, his eyes (Samson) seems to have judged South-west Israel." These are included in the forty years of Eli's judiciary at Ramath-lehi.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Gaza.—Gaza, a city of great antiquity, was situated between Raphia and Askelon, twenty-two miles north of the former, and sixteen south of the latter, according to the Antonine Itinerary; three miles from the sea, according to Arrian, and thirty-four from Ashdod or Azotus, according to Diodorus Siculus. It was a place of great strength and importance, and successively belonged to the Philistines, Hebrews, Chaldeans, and Persians; which latter defended it for two months against Alexander the Great, who finally took and destroyed it. It was afterwards rebuilt; and alternately possessed by the Egyptians, Syrians, and Jews. The present town, which the Arabs call Razza, is situated on an eminence, and is rendered picturesque by the number of fine minarets which rise majestically above the buildings, with beautiful date trees interspersed. It contains upwards of 2000 inhabitants. — Bagster. — A harlot.—Hebrew, "a woman a harlot." Dr. Clarke supposes that she also kept a public house. See Note on Joshua ii. 1.

Ver. 3. A hill before Hebron.—The LXX render it, "A hill that looketh to-

7 And Samson said unto her, if they bind me with seven <sup>1</sup> green withs that were never dried, then shall I be weak, and be as <sup>1</sup> another man.

8 Then the lords of the Philistines brought up to her seven green withs which had not been dried, and she bound him with them.

9 Now there were men lying in wait, abiding with her in the chamber. And she said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is broken when it <sup>1</sup> toucheth the fire. So his strength was not known.

10 And Delilah said unto Samson, Behold, thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mightest be bound.

11 And he said unto her, If they bind me fast with new ropes <sup>1</sup> that never were occupied, then shall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and said unto him, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber. And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

13 And Delilah said unto Samson, Hitherto thou hast mocked me, and told me lies: tell me wherewith thou mightest be bound. And he said unto her, If thou weavest the seven locks of my head with the web.

14 And she fastened it with the pin, and said unto him, the Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awaked out of his sleep, and went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web.

15 ¶ And she said unto him, <sup>2</sup> How canst thou say, I love thee, when thy heart is not with me? thou hast mocked me these three times, and hast not told me wherein thy great strength lieth.

16 And it came to pass, when she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him, so that his soul was <sup>3</sup> vexed unto death;

17 That he <sup>4</sup> told her all his heart, and said unto her, there hath not come a razor upon my head; for <sup>5</sup> I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak, and be like any other man.

18 And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart, she sent and called for the lords of the Philistines, saying, Come up this once, for he hath showed me all his heart. Then the lords of the Philistines came up unto her, and brought money in their hand.

19 And <sup>6</sup> she made him sleep upon her knees, and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to afflict him, and his strength went from him.

20 And she said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, <sup>7</sup> I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself. And he wist not that the Lord was <sup>8</sup> departed from him.

21 ¶ But the Philistines took him, and <sup>9</sup> put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and <sup>10</sup> bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison house.

22 Howbeit the hair of his head began to grow again <sup>11</sup> after he was shaven.

23 ¶ Then the lords of the Philistines gathered them together for to offer a great sacrifice unto <sup>12</sup> Dagon their god, and to <sup>13</sup> rejoice: for they said, Our god hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people saw him, they <sup>14</sup> praised their god: for they said, Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, <sup>15</sup> which slew many of us.

25 And it came to pass, when their hearts were <sup>16</sup> merry, that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us <sup>17</sup> sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison house; and he made <sup>18</sup> them sport: and they set him between the pillars.

26 ¶ And Samson said unto the <sup>19</sup> iad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the house was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport.

28 And Samson called <sup>20</sup> unto the Lord, and said, O Lord God, <sup>21</sup> remember me, I pray thee.

were "bored out," and then he was put to grind corn in his prison-house, like a common slave. Nor was this all. In celebrating a feast to their idol Dagon, they send for him to insult him and make them sport. Yes: those who fell under the weight of his arm, or fled from him in confusion but a little time before, have now the meanness to insult him in their cups, and, probably, the impiety to blaspheme the God of Israel also; but they likewise paid dearly for their folly.

Patriotism was certainly a prominent virtue among the Hebrews, especially under the Theocracy; and they had some special reasons to regard their country with peculiar satisfaction:—it was assigned to them immediately by God—it was rescued from their enemies by a miraculous power, and they were favoured with laws and institutions incomparably preferable to those of other nations. We need not, therefore, wonder at their anxiety for its prosperity, nor their indignation against its enemies, though they carried the latter to a degree inconsistent with the philanthropic principles of ward Hebron." Boothroyd renders it, "Opposite to Hebron;" but Hebron itself was twenty miles off.

Ver. 7. Seven green withs.—Margin, "New cords." Strong cords are in some countries formed from osiers, &c. but the LXX. seem to understand it of cords formed of the nerves of cattle, which are also very strong.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 13. If thou weavest the seven locks of my head with a web.—This verse seems to end abruptly; but the LXX. has here an addition, which we insert, without presuming to decide whether it should be considered as text or comment. "If thou weavest the seven locks of my head with the web, and shalt fasten them with the pin in the wall, I shall become like other men: and so it was, that when he slept, Delilah took the seven locks of his head, and wove them with the web, and fastened it with the pin to the wall, and said unto him," &c. The addition is in Italics. See Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 21. Put out his eyes.—Hebrew, "Bored out." There are two ways in which this cruel operation was performed; either by piercing the sight, or by the gospel, which will not allow us to imprecate vengeance against our enemies; on the contrary, we are required to love and pray for them. This was not, however, the case with Samson: he lived under the old dispensation, when many things were suffered, "through the hardness of their hearts." (Matt. xix. 8.)

The Jewish hero was now oppressed with anguish, and worn out with the taunts and cruelties of the Philistines; it was very natural and lawful for him, therefore, to pray for deliverance; but with this, as we shall find was often the case with David and other Old Testament worthies, he mingles a petition for revenge: "And now, O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me only this once, that I may be avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes!"

From the prayer of this petition being granted, some divines have hastily inferred that it was wholly acceptable to God; but we doubt this inference. The Lord often hears and answers the prayers of his people, though mingled with much digging out the eye-balls with a dagger; which, cruel as it is, is by no means uncommon in the East.

Ver. 22. Dagon their god.—Of this idol we shall give some account on 1Sam. v. 2. &c.

Ver. 25. He made them sport.—Probably they exacted from him some feats of strength and agility, which made him weary.

Ver. 27. Upon the roof 3000.—[Samson therefore, says Dr. Shaw, must have been in a court or area below; and consequently the temple will be of the same kind with the ancient sacred enclosures, which were only surrounded either in part, or on all sides, with some plain or cloistered buildings. Several palaces, doutouras, (as the courts of justice are called in those countries,) are built in this fashion. On their public festivals and rejoicings, the roofs of these cloisters are crowded with spectators. I have often seen numbers of people diverted in this manner on the roof of the dey's palace at Algiers; which, like many others, has an advanced cloister, over against the gate of the and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes.

29 And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life.

31 Then his brethren and all the house of his father came down, and took him, and brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eshtaol in the burying-place of Manoah his father. And he judged Israel twenty years.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Of the money that Micah first stole, then restored, his mother maketh images, 5 and the ornaments for them. 7 He hireth a Levite to be his priest.

AND there was a man of a mount Ephraim, whose name was Micah.

2 And he said unto his mother, The eleven hundred shekels of silver that were taken from thee, about which thou cursedst, and spakest of also in mine ears, behold, the silver is with me; I took it. And his mother said, Blessed be thou of the Lord, my son.

3 And when he had restored the eleven hundred shekels of silver to his mother, his mother said, I had wholly dedicated the silver unto the Lord from my hand for my son, to make a graven image and a molten image: now therefore I will restore it unto thee.

4 Yet he restored the money unto his mother; and his mother took two hundred shekels of silver, and gave them to the founder, who made thereof a graven image and a molten image: and they were in the house of Micah.

imperfection and alloy: so far as they accord with his will they are granted, and where they do not, they are forgiven.

Some have represented Samson as an illustrious type of Christ; but, we believe, without authority from Scripture, and with little honour to our Saviour. There is only one point which we think will bear notice in characters so morally dissimilar. Samson "conquered when he fell;" and so did our Lord Jesus. "Through death he destroyed him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil. Having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it." (Heb. ii. 14. Coloss. ii. 15.)

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—13. Micah restores money to his mother which he had previously stolen, and she devotes it to promote idolatry.—It is impossible to fix the date of the event related in this chapter; but it must have been when religion was at a very low ebb, and the worship of Jehovah, though not renounced, mingled with idolatrous rites. The government was also in a state of anarchy, for there was "no king," nor any supreme governor, "in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes." At this period, an Ephraimite, named Micah, it seems, had robbed his mother of 1100 shekels of silver, and was not suspected; but his conscience smote him, and her bitter imprecations on the unknown thief, led him to restore it. She then as loudly blessed her son, partly rejoicing to see the money, and partly in his reform. As, however, the money had been devoted to religious purposes, (whether before or after it was stolen, the narrative does not say,) she takes 200 shekels to the founder, for a graven and molten image; Micah also procures an ephod and teraphim, and, in short, a complete house of God, and consecrates palace, like a long pent-house, supported by one or two contiguous pillars in front, or centre.—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Two middle pillars.—It is plain there were more pillars; but the centre pillars being removed, on which the weight mainly rested, the rest gave way. The fall of so large a building, by the removal of two pillars, has been objected to; but Dr. Shaw describes buildings in the form of cloisters, made for a similar purpose, in which "the pulling down the front or centre pillars only, which supported it, would be attended with a like catastrophe."—See Oricut. Cust. Nos. 86. and 791. From the History of Samson, it is generally supposed, was derived that of Hercules; and M. De Lavour, an ingenious French writer, has drawn out the parallel at full length, an abridgment of which may be seen in Dr. Clarke's Commentary.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. There was a man.—[It is extremely difficult to fix the chronology of this and the following transactions. Some think them to be here in their natural order; others that they happened in the time of Joshua, or immediately after the ancients who outlived him. All that can be said with certainty is, that they happened when there was no king in Israel; that is, about the time of the Judges, or in some time of the anarchy. Ver. 6.]—Bagster.

7 ¶ And there was a young man out of Beth-lehem-judah of the family of Judah, who was a Levite, and he sojourned there.

8 And the man departed out of the city from Beth-lehem-judah to sojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim to the house of Micah, as he journeyed.

9 And Micah said unto him, Whence comest thou? And he said unto him, I am a Levite of Beth-lehem-judah, and I go to sojourn where I may find a place.

10 And Micah said unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a priest, and I will give thee ten shekels of silver by the year, and a suit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

11 And the Levite was content to dwell with the man; and the young man was unto him as one of his sons.

12 And Micah consecrated the Levite; and the young man became his priest, and was in the house of Micah.

13 Then said Micah, Now know I that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 The Danites send five men to seek out an inheritance. 3 At the house of Micah they consult with Jonathan, and are encouraged in their way. 7 They search Laish, and bring back news of good hope. 11 Six hundred men are sent to surprise it. 14 In the way they rob Micah of his priest, and his consecrated things. 22 They win Laish, and call it Dan. 30 They set up idolatry, wherein Jonathan inherited the priesthood.

IN those days there was no king in Israel: and in those days the tribe of the Danites one of his sons to be his priest. The custom seems to have been, for those who resided at a distance from the tabernacle in Shiloh, to imitate its sacred furniture and rites—to form a little tabernacle of their own, for domestic worship for themselves and neighbours; to have a priest of their own to perform the sacred rites, and thus save the trouble and expense of a journey to the tabernacle at Shiloh three times in the year. But as all this apparatus seems intended for the worship of Jehovah, our translators seem to have erred in calling this "a house of gods," in the plural; and even the graven image might be no more than an imitation of the cherubim in the most holy place. One thing, however, troubled Micah: he had made his son a priest, who was not a Levite, and he seems to have known that no other tribe was entitled to the priesthood; he was, therefore, highly gratified when a young Levite called on him and offered his services, which were immediately accepted on terms satisfactory to both parties. Micah comforted himself from this circumstance—"Now I know that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest." Here, however, he was mistaken; he was only adding sin to sin; for though every priest must be a Levite, yet only those of the family of Aaron were entitled to the priesthood; and his pretending to ordain him who certainly had no right, made the matter still worse. After all, had the whole been regular and legal, it is but a poor ground on which to assure ourselves of the divine blessing, that we attend his house and hear his ministers, if the heart be not right with God.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—31. Micah sets up a schismatic and idolatrous worship, but the Danites rob him of his priest and be omitted, as it appears to have been but one image; for "it (not they) was in the house of Micah."—Boothroyd.

Ver. 5. A house of gods.—We have repeatedly remarked, that the word Elohim is plural, and when applied to idols, is rightly so translated; but as here is no mention of any god but Jehovah, we conceive it should be rendered, "A house of God." So Scott, and many others. —Teraphim.—See I Sam. xix. 13, 16, and note. They were probably an imitation of the cherubim.

Ver. 7. Of the family of Judah.—Many suppose these words an interpolation, (see Boothroyd's Heb. Bible,) for how could a Levite belong to Judah? He is not, however, said to be of the tribe, but of the "family of Judah;" and there were not other Judah's beside the patriarch? In after times, we read of a Judah among the Levites, Ezra x. 23, and might not the immediate father of this young Levite have borne that name? Some, however, suppose him related to the tribe of Judah by his mother's side; but the text does not say tribe.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. No king.—[The word maltech, which generally means a king, is sometimes taken for a supreme ruler, governor, or judge, (see Ge. xxvi. 31. De. xxxv. 5. &c.) and it is probable it should be so understood here, and in the parallel passages.]—Bagster.

bought them an inheritance to dwell in; for unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them among the tribes of Israel.

2 And the children of Dan sent of their family five men from their coasts, <sup>c</sup>men of valour, from <sup>d</sup>Zorah, and from Eshtaol, to spy out the land, and to search it; and they said unto them, Go, search the land: who when they came to mount Ephraim, to the house of Micah, they lodged there.

3 When they were by the house of Micah, they knew the voice of the young man the Levite: and they turned in thither, and said unto him, Who brought thee hither? and what makest thou in this place? and what hast thou here?

4 And he said unto them, Thus and thus dealeth Micah with me, and hath hired me, and I am his priest.

5 And they said unto him, <sup>e</sup>Ask counsel, we pray thee, of God, that we may know whether our way which we go shall be prosperous.

6 And the priest said unto them, <sup>f</sup>Go in peace: before the Lord is your way wherein ye go.

7 ¶ Then the five men departed, and came to <sup>g</sup>Laish, and saw the people that were therein, how they dwelt careless, after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and secure; and there was no <sup>h</sup>magistrate in the land, that might put them to shame in any thing; and they were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any man.

8 And they came unto their brethren to <sup>i</sup>Zorah and Eshtaol: and their brethren said unto them, What say ye?

9 And they said, <sup>j</sup>Arise, that we may go up against them: for we have seen the land, and, behold, it is very good: and are ye still? be not slothful to go, and to enter to possess the land.

10 When ye go, ye shall come unto a people <sup>k</sup>secure, and to a large land: for <sup>l</sup>God hath given it into your hands; a place where <sup>m</sup>there is no want of any thing that is in the earth.

11 ¶ And there went from thence of the family of the Danites, out of Zorah and out of Eshtaol, six hundred men <sup>n</sup>appointed with weapons of war.

12 And they went up, and pitched in <sup>o</sup>Kirjath-jearim, in Judah: wherefore they called that place <sup>p</sup>Mahaneh-dan unto this day: behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim.

13 And they passed thence unto mount Ephraim, and came unto the house of Micah.

14 ¶ Then answered the five men that went to spy out the country of Laish, and said unto their brethren, Do ye know that there is in these houses <sup>q</sup>an ephod, and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? now therefore consider what ye have to do.

15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the house of the young man the Levite, even unto the house of Micah, and <sup>r</sup>saluted him.

16 And the <sup>s</sup>six hundred men appointed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, stood by the entering of the gate.

17 And the five <sup>t</sup>men that went to spy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: and the priest stood in the entering of the gate with the six hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

18 And these went into Micah's house, and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image. Then said the priest unto them, What do ye?

19 And they said unto him, Hold thy peace, <sup>u</sup>lay thy hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, and be <sup>v</sup>to us a father and a priest: is it better for thee to be a priest unto the house of one man, or that thou be a priest unto a tribe and a family in Israel?

20 And the priest's heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midst of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones and the cattle and the carriage before them.

22 ¶ And when they were a good way from the house of Micah, the men that were in the dols.—When we read repeatedly in this book, that “in those days there was no king in Israel;” we must understand it to import, that the country was in a state of anarchy, without any settled government; and must therefore be prepared to read of crimes, disgraceful not only to that country, but (some of them) to human nature, even in its present depraved state.

In the preceding chapter, we read of a young man, a Levite, who had been engaged irregularly (not being of the family of Aaron) as a priest in the house of Micah, the Ephraimite, and who had set up a private chapel, in imitation of the sacred tabernacle. Some of the tribe of Dan, finding their present territory too contracted, send out five of their valiant men to seek new territory. On coming to mount Ephraim, in their way they call at the house of Micah, and recognise the voice of the young man, the Levite: either they had met with him before, and recollected something remarkable in his voice; or else, observing that he did not speak as an Ephraimite, they are curious to know from what part of the country he had come, and what occupation he had in that place, of both which he readily informs them. They then state to him the business they were upon, and desire him to inquire of the Lord whether they should succeed in their design. What means the young man had to make such an inquiry, it is difficult to say, since the Urim and Thummim were with the tabernacle at Shiloh; he brings them, however, an answer of peace, and they accordingly succeed in their design, by finding a place occupied by a colony of Canaanites, well adapted to their wishes. Of this they make a full report to their brethren on their return, and excite them to go and take possession; urging, that it was a good country, and as the people dwelt secure and at ease, there would be no difficulty in taking them by surprise. Upon this, six hundred emigrants set forward, well armed, and accompanied by the spies. Coming again to the house of Micah, on mount Ephraim, the spies inform their brethren of his religious establishment; and making no conscience of plundering either friends or foes, they take with them Micah's priest, and teraphim, and all his finery, to form a similar establishment of their own. As to the priest, who was evidently a mercenary character, he is easily persuaded it was better for him to be the priest of a whole tribe, than of an individual.

Micah, indeed, is not so soon satisfied; but, collecting his servants and neighbours together, he pursues after the Danites, and complains piteously of the injury he had received: “Ye have taken away my Elohim, which I made, and the priest, and are gone away, and what have I more?” The Danites, however, like true banditti, bid him hold his tongue, on the penalty of his life; and make off with their booty.

They now came to Laish, or Leshem, smote the people with the edge of the sword, and having burnt their city, built another in its neighbourhood, which “they called after the name of Dan their father.”

As to the young priest, though at first pleased with his situation, he appears not to have continued long in favour: for

Ver. 3. Knew the voice.—They knew, by his pronunciation, that he was not an Ephraimite. See chap. xii. 6. and note.

Ver. 6. Before the Lord is your way.—By this it is evident that the young priest professed to ask counsel of the true God only, though he did it by improper means, his priesthood being merely a mockery of that of Aaron.

Ver. 7. Laish.—Called “Leshem,” Josh. xix. 47. These people, it is supposed, were a colony of Zidonians, (or Sidonians,) at a great distance from the parent country. Sidon was a rich seaport town; and to live after the Zidonians, was to live in ease and luxury.—No magistrate.—Hebrew, “Possessor (or heir) of restraint;” which is certainly the object of the magistracy.

—No business with (any) man.—For Adam, (man,) the LXX. read Aram, meaning Syria. The difference between the Hebrew words is much less than in English. But Dr. Boothroyd reads, “No intercourse with other men.”

Ver. 12. Mahaneh-Dan.—That is, “the camp of Dan.” See chap. xli. 25 which seems to intimate that this event took place before the time of Samson.

Ver. 19. Lay thy hand upon thy mouth.—(This was the token of silence. The god of silence, Harpocrates, is represented on ancient statues with his fingers pressed on his lips. These men were evidently very ignorant: and absurdly concluded, that they should, by taking Micah's gods, secure the presence and favour of the God of Israel, in their expedition and settlement houses near to Micah's house were gathered together, and overtook the children of Dan.

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan. And they turned their faces, and said unto Micah, <sup>w</sup> What aileth thee, <sup>x</sup> that thou comest with such a company?

24 And he said, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the priest, and ye are gone away: and what have I more? and what is this that ye say unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan said unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, lest <sup>y</sup> angry fellows run upon thee, and thou lose thy life, with the lives of thy household.

26 And the children of Dan went their way: and when Micah saw that they were too strong for him, he turned and went back unto his house.

27 ¶ And they took the things which Micah had made, and the priest which he had, and <sup>z</sup> came unto Laish, unto a people that were at quiet and secure: and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and burnt the city with fire.

28 And there was no <sup>a</sup> deliverer, because it was far from Zidon, and they had no business with any man; and it was in the valley that lieth by <sup>b</sup> Beth-rehob. And they built a city, and dwelt therein.

29 And <sup>c</sup> they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Israel: howbeit the name of the city was Laish at the first.

30 ¶ And the children of Dan set up the graven image: and Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh, he and his sons were priests to the tribe of Dan until the <sup>d</sup> day of the captivity of the land.

31 And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the house of God <sup>e</sup> was in Shiloh.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 A Levite goeth to Beth-lehem to fetch home his wife. 16 An old man entertaineth him at Gibeah. 22 The Gibeonites abuse his concubine to death. 29 He divideth her into twelve pieces, to send them to the twelve tribes.

AND it came to pass in those days, when there was no king in Israel, that there was a certain Levite sojourning on the side of mount Ephraim, who took to him <sup>a</sup> a concubine out of Beth-lehem-judah.

2 And his concubine played the whore against they employed one Jonathan, the son of Gershom, and set up a sort of rival worship at Dan, which continued all the time that the tabernacle remained at Shiloh.

Some commentators have endeavoured to clear both Micah and the Danites from the charge of idolatry, because they worshipped not the idols of the heathen, but only the teraphim, which were probably, in part, at least, copied from the cherubim in the most holy place; but the cherubim themselves were never intended to be worshipped; for all use of images in worship was, by the second commandment, made idolatry. Thus in the Roman Catholic controversy, we consider the adoration of the crucifix as idolatry, not because Christ is an idol, (God forbid!) but because all image worship is forbidden.

CHAP. XIX. Ver 1—30. The Levite and his concubine.—How changeable are human affairs! Our brightest prospects are often they perhaps supposed the piety of their motives, and the goodness of their end, would justify the means. But it was a base robbery of Micah, aggravated by the Levite's ingratitude, and their menaces. —Bagster.

Ver. 30. Gershom the son of Manasseh.—As Manasseh had no such son, and Moses had, there has been a strong suspicion that we should here read Moses, as the original names differ but in one letter; and the Jews themselves have given countenance to this, by placing the N (name) over, instead of between, the other letters, as they say, in honour of Moses, that he might not be disgraced with such a grandson! The question is, however, of very little consequence. —Until the day of the captivity.—Namely, of the ark. See 1 Sam. iv. 11, which agrees with the next verse. "All the time that the house of God was in Shiloh."

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 2. Played the whore.—A concubine was a secondary wife; infidelity in her, therefore, was adultery; the ancient versions, however, soften the crime, by representing her as having left her husband only from some "dislike," or disgust. They, as well as many modern commentators, seem to have been influenced by the idea, that if she had been criminal, her him, and went away from him unto her father's house to Beth-lehem-judah, and was there <sup>b</sup> four whole months.

3 And her husband arose, and went after her, to speak <sup>c</sup> friendly unto her, and to bring her again, having his servant with him, and a <sup>d</sup> couple of asses: and she brought him into her father's house: and when the father of the damsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him.

4 And his father-in-law, the damsel's father, retained him; and he abode with him three days: so they did eat and drink, and lodged there.

5 And it came to pass on the fourth day, when they arose early in the morning, that he rose up to depart: and the damsel's father said unto his son-in-law, <sup>e</sup> Comfort thy heart with a morsel of <sup>f</sup> bread, and afterward go your way.

6 And they sat down, and did eat and drink both of them together: for the damsel's father had said unto the man, Be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and let thy heart be merry.

7 And when the man rose up to depart, his father-in-law urged him: therefore he lodged there again.

8 And he arose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damsel's father said, Comfort thy heart, I pray thee. And they tarried <sup>h</sup> until afternoon, and they did eat both of them.

9 And when the man rose up to depart, he, and his concubine, and his servant, his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said unto him, Behold, now the day <sup>i</sup> draweth toward evening, I pray you tarry all night: behold, <sup>k</sup> the day <sup>l</sup> groweth to an end, lodge here, that thy heart may be merry; and to-morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayest go <sup>m</sup> home.

10 But the man would not tarry that night, but he rose up and departed, and came <sup>n</sup> over against <sup>o</sup> Jebus, which is Jerusalem; and there were with him two asses saddled, his concubine also was with him.

11 And when they were by Jebus, the day was far spent; and the servant said unto his master, Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in into this city of the Jebusites, and lodge in it.

12 And his master said unto him, We will unexpectedly clouded, and the deepest calamities suddenly overtake us. We should therefore learn to moderate our affections, to lower our hopes as to this world, and to stand prepared for the worst.—They who teach others, should put themselves to any inconvenience to enforce their precepts by their own example.—More inhumanity and villany may be found among degenerate professors of Christianity, than among infidels: and in general, where we expect the most kindness, we meet with the greatest injuries, that we may learn to "cease from man."—An unfeeling disregard to the wants of others generally accompanies sensuality and ungoverned lusts: and there are numbers who imitate the example of those, whose shameful crimes have been recorded in their punishment, to one who copies the examples of hospitality, integrity, and piety, mentioned with commendation in the Scriptures. When men have cast off the fear of God, they are frequently given up to their own husband would never have gone after her, "to speak friendly to her, or comfort her." This, however, is not certain; such instances have been known; and her crime might have been a single act of turpitude, and under some palliating circumstances: moreover, her husband might have heard of her showing signs of penitence, which his affection led him to cherish. The conduct of her father, in wishing him to stay, seems to intimate an anxiety to have them perfectly reconciled before he parted with them.

Ver. 9. Draweth toward evening.—The day groweth to an end.—Hebrew, "It is pitching (time) of the day;" that is, when travellers pitch their tents, or, as others, "The day (i. e. the sun) is about to pitch its tent." See Psal. xix. 4. (Dr. Shaw observes, "Our constant practice was to rise at break of day, set forward with the sun, and travel to the middle of the afternoon; at which time we began to look out for encampments of Arabs; who, to prevent such parties as ours from living at free charges upon them, take care to pitch in woods, valleys, or places the least conspicuous.")—Bagster.

Ver. 11. Jebus.—That is, Jerusalem, where the Jebusites held the strong hold of Zion. See note on chap. i. 9.

not turn aside hither into the city of a stranger, that is not of the children of Israel; we will pass over to Gibeah.

13 And he said unto his servant, Come, and let us draw near to one of these places to lodge all night, in Gibeah, or in <sup>1</sup> Ramah.

14 And they passed on and went their way; and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah, which belongeth to Benjamin.

15 And they turned aside thither, to go in and to lodge in Gibeah: and when he went in, he sat him down in a street of the city: for there was no man that took them into his house to lodging.

16 ¶ And, behold, there came an old man from his <sup>2</sup> work out of the field at even, which was also of mount Ephraim; and he sojourned in Gibeah: but the men of the place were Benjamites.

17 And when he had lifted up his eyes, he saw a wayfaring man in the street of the city: and the old man said, Whither goest thou? and whence comest thou?

18 And he said unto him, We are passing from Beth-lehem-judah toward the side of mount Ephraim; from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to the <sup>3</sup> house of the Lord; and there is no man that <sup>4</sup> receiveth me to house.

19 Yet there is both straw and provender for our asses; and there is bread and wine also for me and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy servants: there is no want of any thing.

20 And the old man said, Peace <sup>5</sup> be with thee; howsoever let all thy wants lie upon me; only lodge not in the <sup>6</sup> street.

21 So <sup>7</sup> he brought him into his house, and gave provender unto the asses: and they washed their <sup>8</sup> feet, and did eat and drink.

22 ¶ Now as they were making their hearts <sup>9</sup> merry, behold, the men of the city, certain <sup>10</sup> sons of Belial, <sup>11</sup> beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house, the old man, saying, <sup>12</sup> Bring forth the man that came into thy house, that we may know him.

vile lusts, even to disgrace human nature, and to exceed the very beasts in brutishness: and Israelites especially, who rebel against the light, and grow hardened under the means of grace, will become as abandoned as the inhabitants of Sodom, and far more inexorable.—When iniquity becomes generally triumphant, few will dare to protest against it; and it is safer to venture into a den of lions than into such recesses of iniquity. Yet in the worst of times, there are some who venture scorn and reproach, in being kind to the servants of God for his sake; and who do not grudge the expense of hospitality: for while idleness and sensual lusts waste a man's substance, honest labour and frugality afford the means of being liberal. But such persons live as strangers in this world, and must expect to be abused by their wicked neighbours, except when an equitable government affords them benign protection.—In imitating the good actions of God's people, men are very liable to be betrayed into their faults, against which they need be doubly circumspect: and an unbelieving policy often induces them to make unwarrantable concessions; but committing sin to avoid danger will generally involve them in still greater difficulties.—The righteous Lord permits trans-23 And the man, the master of the house, went out unto them, and said unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not so wickedly; seeing that this man is come into my house, do not this <sup>13</sup> folly.

24 Behold here is my daughter a maiden, and his concubine; them I will bring out now, and <sup>14</sup> humble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not <sup>15</sup> so vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: so the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they knew her, and abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to spring, they let her go.

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house where her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord rose up in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way: and, behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold.

28 And he said unto her, Up, and let us be going. But none answered. Then the man took her <sup>16</sup> up upon an ass, and the man rose up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his house, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and <sup>17</sup> divided her, together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the coast of Israel.

30 And it was so, that all that saw it said, There was no such deed done nor seen from the day that the children of Israel came up out of the land of Egypt unto this day: consider <sup>18</sup> of it, take <sup>19</sup> advice, and speak your minds.

CHAPTER XX.

1 The Levite in a general assembly denounceth his wrong. 8 The decree of the assembly. 12 The Benjamites, being cited, make head against the Israelites. 18 The Israelites in two battles lose forty thousand. 26 They destroy by a stratagem all the Benjamites except six hundred.

¶ THEN <sup>20</sup> all the children of Israel went out, and the congregation was gathered together as one man, from <sup>21</sup> Dan even to Beergressors to execute his just vengeance on one another: and if the scene described in this chapter appears exceedingly horrible, what will be the discoveries of the day of judgment! Yet such is human nature! And though few believe the humbling truth, the seeds of all this wickedness are in every human heart! and if we have not committed such abominations in our lives, we owe the more gratitude to the Lord, for the restraints of his providence, or the influences of his grace. While therefore it behoves those in authority to "consider, take advice, and speak their minds," by what means crimes may be best prevented, or so punished that others may "hear, and fear, and do no more such wickedness;" we may each of us consider, how to escape from the wrath to come, to mortify the sins of our own hearts, to resist Satan's temptations, and to avoid the pollutions that are in the world; and how we may best be prepared for meeting temporal calamities, and enabled to extract benefit from them.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—48. Outrage of the men of Gibeah.—The abhorrence of the crime here expressed, and the determination of the Israelites to punish the criminals, were very for the conduct of this Levite, in going so far to fetch home his concubine, in treating her with so much kindness all the way, and then sacrificing her to the brutal lust of these wretches. There are mysteries in human conduct, as well as in nature and religion, which we cannot explain; but that day in which "God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts,"—that day "shall declare it" Rom. ii. 16. 1 Cor. iii. 13.

Ver. 28. Divided her—into twelve pieces.—[It is probable, that with the pieces he sent to each tribe a circumstantial account of the barbarity of the men of Gibeah; and that they considered each of the pieces as expressing an execration. That a similar custom prevailed in ancient times is evident from 1 Sa. xi. 7. And Lucian, speaking of the Scythians and Molossians, says, "When any one had received an injury, and had not the means of avenging himself, he sacrificed an ox, and cut it in pieces, which he caused to be dressed and publicly exposed; then he spread out the skin of the victim, and sat upon it with his hands tied behind him. All who chose to take part in the injury which had been committed, took up a piece of the ox, and swore to supply and maintain for him, one five horses, another ten, others still more, some infantry; each according to his strength and ability. They who had only their

Ver. 15. No man took them in.—[There was probably no inn, or house of public entertainment in this place; and therefore they could not have a lodging unless furnished by mere hospitality. But these Benjamites seem to have added to their other vices, avarice and inhospitality, like the inhabitants of Akoura in mount Lebanon, mentioned by Burckhardt.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. House of the Lord.—[The LXX., "I am going to my own house;" which is probably the true reading, as we find (ver. 23.) that he really went home; yet he might have gone previously to Shiloh, or to "the house of the Lord," because that was also in mount Ephraim.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. All thy wants.—[Here was genuine hospitality:—"Keep your bread and wine for yourselves, and your straw and provender for your asses; you may need them before you finish your journey: I will supply all your wants for this night; only do not lodge in the street."]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Here is my daughter.—We have no hesitation in admitting, that sodomy is the worst species of uncleanness; and we know the high point of honour to which hospitality is carried in the East; but how to account for the "righteous Lot" and this hospitable stranger offering their own daughters to satisfy these detestable ruffians, we do not know; still less can we account sheba, with the land of Gilead, unto the Lord in Mizpeh.

2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in the assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand footmen that <sup>d</sup> drew sword.

3 (Now the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Israel were gone up to Mizpeh.) Then said the children of Israel, Tell us, how was this <sup>e</sup> wickedness?

4 And <sup>f</sup> the Levite, the husband of the woman that was slain, answered and said, I <sup>g</sup> came into Gibeah that belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine, to lodge.

5 And the men of Gibeah rose against me, and beset the house round about upon me by night, and thought to have slain me: and my concubine have they <sup>h</sup> forced, that she is dead.

6 And <sup>i</sup> I took my concubine, and cut her in pieces, and sent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Israel: for they have committed lewdness and folly in Israel.

7 Behold, ye are all children of Israel; <sup>k</sup> give here your advice and counsel.

8 ¶ And all the people arose as one man, saying, We will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his house.

9 But now this shall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah; we will go up by lot against it;

10 And we will take ten men of a hundred throughout all the tribes of Israel, and a hundred of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to fetch victual for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Israel.

11 So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, <sup>l</sup> knit together as one man.

12 ¶ And the tribes of Israel sent <sup>m</sup> men through all the tribe of Benjamin, saying, What wickedness is this that is done among you?

13 Now therefore deliver us the <sup>n</sup> men, the children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and put away <sup>o</sup> evil from Israel. But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Israel:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, to go out to battle against the children of Israel.

15 And the children of Benjamin were numbered at that time out of the cities twenty and six thousand men that drew sword, beside the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbered seven hundred chosen men.

16 Among all this people there were seven hundred chosen men <sup>p</sup> left-handed; every one could sling stones at a hair breadth, and not miss.

17 And the men of Israel, beside Benjamin, were numbered four hundred thousand men that drew sword: all these were men of war.

18 ¶ And the children of Israel arose, and <sup>q</sup> went up to the house of God, and asked <sup>r</sup> counsel of God, and said, Which of us shall go up first to the battle against the children of Benjamin? And the Lord said, Judah shall go up first.

19 And the children of Israel rose up in the morning, and encamped against Gibeah.

20 And the men of Israel went out to battle against Benjamin; and the men of Israel put themselves in array to fight against them at Gibeah.

21 And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and <sup>s</sup> destroyed down to the ground of the Israelites that day twenty and two thousand men.

22 ¶ And the people the men of Israel encouraged themselves, and set their battle again in array in the place where they put themselves in array the first day.

23 (And <sup>t</sup> the children of Israel went up and wept before the Lord until even, and asked counsel of the Lord, saying, Shall I go up again to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother? And the Lord said, Go up against him.)

24 And the children of Israel came near against the children of Benjamin the second day.

25 And Benjamin went forth against them out of Gibeah the second day, and destroyed <sup>u</sup> down to the ground of the children of Israel again eighteen thousand men; all these drew the sword.

proper; but they seem to have acted with too much precipitation and resentment. There were "with them also sins against the Lord:" the abomination of Gibeah was both an evidence and effect of national degeneracy; and it called for deep humiliation and lamentation, that such wickedness had been wrought in Israel, as well as for indignation against the criminals. They ought, therefore, to have begun with repentance and reformation; with solemn sacrifices, and earnest supplications. This was required in other wars, and much more in such a war as this. No absolute resolution should have been made, till these things had been thoroughly attended to; or till inquiry had been made of the Lord, what he would have them to do on so melancholy an occasion. They were not commanded to levy war against any tribe or city in Israel, except for idolatry: and they had attempted nothing against the idolatrous Danites; whose conduct, though less destructive to the peace of society, more immediately struck at the honour of God and the interests of religion; and more directly belonged to the injunction given by Moses. Not attending to these previous duties and considerations, but going forth to battle under the guilt of their own unrepented sins; confiding in their superior numbers, and the goodness of their cause; and elated with self-preference, on account of their exemption from this crime, and their zeal to punish it; they persons, engaged to march themselves. Now, an army composed of such soldiers, far from retreating or disbanding, was invincible, as it was engaged by oath."—Bagster.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1. Unto the Lord in Mizpeh.—The extraordinary conduct of the Levite respecting his concubine was, it should seem, understood, and the effect intended. The grand council of the tribes of Israel is collected at Mizpeh, on the confines both of Judah and Benjamin, when the Levite relates his case before them, and the people unanimously resolve on vengeance. They therefore send deputies to the children of Benjamin, in whose country Gibeah was, demanding that the murderers should be delivered up to justice; instead of which, however, the Benjamites prepare for battle, to defend them; a circumstance that seems to indicate a very great degree of depravity among them.

Ver. 16. Left-handed.—By 1 Chron. xii. 2. it should rather seem that these Benjamites were ambidexters; i. e. persons who could use both hands alike. —Sling-stones.—[The sling was a very ancient warlike instrument; and, in the hands of those who were skilled in the use of it, produced astonishing effects. The inhabitants of the islands of Baleares, now Majorca and Minorca, were the most celebrated slingers of antiquity. They did not permit their children to break their fast, till they had struck down the bread they had to eat from the top of a pole or some distant eminence. Vegetius tells us, that slingers could, in general, hit the mark at 600 feet distance.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. House of God.—Hebrew, Beth-el; (so ver. 26 and 31.) Dr. Boothroyd supposes the ark, which was sometimes taken from the tabernacle, might be now at Beth-el, which was in the way to Gibeah, and Phinehas with it. See ver. 28. Others, however, suppose that they went to Shiloh. —Which of us shall go up first?—It is observable, the inquiry was not whether they should go to battle, this was determined by themselves, without consulting the Lord, who, as King of Israel, and could certainly have been consulted; and this is generally considered as the ground of their defeat being in the first instance permitted.

Ver. 23. Go up against him.—That is, Benjamin. This answer is certainly sufficiently express: How then shall we account for the second defeat of Judah? They had wept before the Lord, and asked counsel of him, and yet were defeated a second time with great slaughter. In a former case—the attack of Ai, under Joshua,—when Israel was defeated, it was found that they had been guilty of some secret iniquity, and the similarity of circumstances in this case, would lead us to a similar conclusion: but if so, the cause is not revealed.

Some have indeed supposed, it was their connivance at the system of idolatry, practised in the tribe of Dan, that rendered them so unsuccessful against Benjamin; but for this we have no authority, for nothing of the kind is hinted by the inspired historian; we must leave this, therefore, among the mysteries which a future state only can explain. The only thing we can ascertain, with any certainty is, that all parties were deeply criminal, and were employed to punish one another; first, the Benjamites were criminals, in protecting the wicked inhabitants of Gibeah; secondly, the Israelites, in waging a war of extermination against the Benjamites, and especially before inquiring of God whether they did right to wage such war.

26 ¶ Then <sup>v</sup> all the children of Israel, and all the people, went up, and came unto the house of God, and <sup>w</sup> wept, and sat there before the LORD, and fasted that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Israel inquired of the LORD, (for <sup>x</sup> the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days, 28 And <sup>y</sup> Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, <sup>z</sup> stood before it in those days,) saying, Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease? And the LORD said, Go up; for <sup>a</sup> to-morrow I will deliver them into thy hand.

29 ¶ And Israel set <sup>b</sup> liers in wait round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Israel went up against the children of Benjamin on the third day, and put themselves in array against Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out against the people, and were drawn away from the city; and they began to smite of the <sup>c</sup> people, and kill, as at other times, in the highways, of which one goeth up to <sup>d</sup> the house of God, and the other to Gibeah in the field, about thirty men of Israel.

32 And the children of Benjamin said, They are smitten down before us, as at the first. But the children of Israel said, Let us flee, and draw them from the city unto the highways.

33 And all the men of Israel rose up out of their place, and put themselves in array at Baal-tamar: and the liers in wait of Israel came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah.

34 And there came against Gibeah ten thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and the battle was sore: but <sup>e</sup> they knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD smote Benjamin before Israel: and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thousand and a hundred men: all these drew the sword.

36 So the children of Benjamin saw that they were smitten: for the men of Israel gave place <sup>f</sup> to the Benjamites, because they trusted unto the liers in wait which they had set beside Gibeah.

37 And the liers in wait hastened, and rushed upon Gibeah; and the liers in wait <sup>g</sup> drew themselves along, and smote all the city with the edge of the sword.

38 Now there was an appointed <sup>h</sup> sign between the men of Israel <sup>i</sup> and the liers in wait, that they should make a great <sup>j</sup> flame with smoke rise up out of the city.

39 And when the men of Israel retired in the battle, Benjamin began to smite <sup>k</sup> and kill of the men of Israel about thirty persons: for they said, Surely they are smitten down before us, as in the first battle.

40 But <sup>l</sup> when the flame began to arise up out of the city with a pillar of <sup>m</sup> smoke, the Benjamites looked behind them, and, behold, <sup>n</sup> the flame of the city ascended up to heaven.

41 And when the men of Israel turned again, the men of Benjamin were <sup>o</sup> amazed: for they saw that evil <sup>p</sup> was come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Israel unto the way of the wilderness; but the battle <sup>q</sup> overtook them; and them which came out of the cities they destroyed in the midst of them.

43 Thus they inclosed the Benjamites round about, and chased them, and trode them down <sup>r</sup> with ease <sup>s</sup> over against Gibeah toward the sun-rising.

44 And there fell of Benjamin <sup>t</sup> eighteen thousand men; all these were men of valour.

45 And they turned and fled toward the wilderness unto the rock of <sup>u</sup> Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men; and pursued hard after them unto Gidom, and slew two thousand men of them.

46 So that all which fell that day of Benjamin were twenty and five thousand men that drew the sword; all these were men of valour.

47 But <sup>v</sup> six hundred men turned and fled to the wilderness unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months.

48 And the men of Israel turned again upon the children of Benjamin, and smote them with the edge of the sword, as well the men of every city, as the beast, and all that <sup>w</sup> came to hand: also they set on fire all the cities that <sup>x</sup> they came to.

CHAPTER XXI.

NOW <sup>a</sup> the men of Israel had sworn <sup>b</sup> in Mizpeh, saying, There shall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife.

2 And the people came <sup>c</sup> to the house of God, met at first with severe rebukes; and the Benjamites were employed to chastise them, before they executed the vengeance of God upon the Benjamites, for their far more atrocious wickedness. These observations may help to explain the difficulty, which strikes the reader at the first perusal of this chapter; how it was that with so good a cause, and such ardent zeal, they should be for a time unsuccessful, and suffer such heavy losses.

The conduct of the Israelites was very equitable in this demand: but perhaps the rulers or elders of Gibeah ought previously to have been applied to, to deliver up all the criminals to justice. However, the refusal of the Benjamites, and their protection of those who had committed this horrible wickedness, because they were of their own tribe, prove them to have been deeply corrupted, and (all their advantages considered) as ripe for divine vengeance, as the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah had been.—Confiding in their own valour and military skill, they seem to have first prepared for battle in this unequal contest with such superior numbers.—T. Scott.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—25. Benjamin nearly destroyed.—When the passions are vehemently excited, those measures appear needful, which are afterwards perceived to be unreasonable and unlawful; and therefore when we at all suspect this to be our case, we should be sure to proceed with great caution and

Ver. 28. Phinehas.—[It is evident from this mention of Phinehas the son of Eleazar, that these transactions must have taken place not long after the death of Joshua.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Let us flee.—[This was done, not only because they had placed an ambuscade behind Gibeah, which was to enter and burn the city as soon as the Benjamites left it; but it would seem, that the slingers, by being within the city and its fortifications, had great advantage over the Israelites by their slings, when they could not come among them with their swords, unless they got them in the plain country.]—Bagster.

Ver. 38. A great flame with smoke.—Hebrew, "Elevation of smoke;" that is, a pillar reaching to the clouds apparently.

Ver. 47. Rock Rimmon.—[The rock Rimmon was doubtless a strong place; but it is uncertain where situated. It is probable, however, that it was near, and took its name from the village of Remmon, mentioned by Eusebius, fifteen miles north from Jerusalem. It appears that rocks are still resorted to in the East as places of security; and some of them are even capable of sustaining a siege. De la Roque says, that "the Grand Seigneur, wishing to seize the person of the emir, (Fakr-eddin, prince of the Druzes,) gave orders to the pachs to take him prisoner: he accordingly came in search of him, with a new army, in the district of Chouf, which is part of mount Lebanon, wherein is the village of Gesin, and close to it the rock which served for a retreat to the emir. It is named in Arabic, Magara Gesin, i. e. the cavern of Gesin, by which name it is famous. The pacha pressed the emir so closely, that this unfortunate prince was obliged to shut himself up in the cleft of a great rock, with a small number of his officers. The pacha besieged him there several months; and was going to blow up the rock by a mine, when the emir capitulated."—B.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. Now the men of Israel had sworn.—This oath is not before mentioned, and adds much to the horror of the scene, as it shows that the Israelites had less pity for their brethren, the Benjamites, than they had for the Canaanites, whom, in some instances, they spared, contrary to the divine command. They had destroyed men, women, and children, except only a few hundred men, who had taken refuge in the rock of Rimmon; and even to and abode there till even before God, and "lifted up their voices, and wept sore ;

3 And said, O LORD God of Israel, why is this come to pass in Israel, that there should be to-day one tribe lacking in Israel ?

4 And it came to pass on the morrow, that the people rose early, and "built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.

5 And the children of Israel said, Who is there among all the tribes of Israel that came not up with the congregation unto the LORD ? For they had made a great oath concerning him that came not up to the LORD to Mizpeh, saying, He shall surely be put to death.

6 And the children of Israel "repented them for Benjamin their brother, and said, There is one tribe cut off from Israel this day.

7 How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing we have sworn by the LORD that we will not give them of our daughters to wives ?

8 ¶ And they said, What one is there of the tribes of Israel that came not up to Mizpeh to the LORD ? And, behold, there came none to the camp from Jabesh-gilead "to the assembly.

9 For the people were numbered, and, behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation sent thither twelve thousand men of the valiantest, and commanded them, saying, Go "and smite the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead with the edge of the sword, with the women and the children.

11 And this is the thing that ye shall do, Ye shall utterly destroy every male, and every woman that hath lain by man.

12 And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young "virgins, that had known no man by lying with any male: and they brought them unto the camp to "Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

13 And the whole congregation sent some "to speak to the children of Benjamin that "were in the rock Rimmon, and to "call peaceably unto them.

14 And Benjamin came again at that time ; and they gave them wives which they had saved alive of the women of Jabesh-gilead : and yet so they sufficed them not.

15 And the people repented "them for Benjamin, because that the LORD had made a breach "in the tribes of Israel.

16 ¶ Then the elders of the congregation said, How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing the women are destroyed out of Benjamin ?

17 And they said, There must be an inheritance for them that be escaped of Benjamin, that a tribe be not destroyed out of Israel.

18 Howbeit we may not give them wives of our daughters: for "the children of Israel have sworn, saying, Cursed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin.

19 Then they said, Behold, there is a feast of the LORD in Shiloh "yearly in a place which is on the north side of Beth-el, "on the east side "of the highway that goeth up from Beth-el to Shechem, and on the south of Lebonah.

20 Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, saying, Go and lie in wait in the vineyards ;

21 And see, and, behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance "in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin.

22 And it shall be, when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will say unto them, "Be favourable unto them for our sakes: because we reserved not to each man his "wife in the war: for ye did not give unto him at this time, that ye should be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did so, and took them wives, according to their number, of them that danced, whom they caught: and they went and returned unto their inheritance, and repaired the "cities, and dwelt in them.

24 And the children of Israel departed thence at that time, every man to his tribe and to his family, and they went out from thence every man to his inheritance.

25 In those days "there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own "eyes.

deliberation, if we would not make work for bitter repentance. This danger attends all contests, public and private; and a good cause often becomes the occasion of great crimes, as the excess of zeal carries men beyond all the bounds of equity and humanity.—Well might the politic Romans refuse a triumph to the commander who conquered in civil war; in which the common interest is weakened, and the common enemies exult, whatever party acquires the ascendancy. Such unnatural contentions are generally conducted with the most pertinacious fury, and envenomed resentment, through the depravity of the human heart and the subtlety of Satan. But this enemy is most of all gratified, when he can excite divisions and contentions in the church, by which the truth is disgraced, the weak and prejudiced are stumbled, and the enemies of religion alone rejoiced. Yet many persons of apparent godliness use greater asperity against their brethren, who are not exactly of their mind, than against the avowed opposers of all religion! But contests thus managed end in bitterness; and the combatants will ere long weep over the effects of their own success.—Nothing can be more absurd, than solemn oaths and vows made in the heat of passion: many have by them entangled themselves in inextricable perplexity; and been thus induced to add one these they had bound themselves not to give any of their family for wives. They now, however, repent their indiscriminate destruction, and commit another crime to repair the consequences of the former.

Ver. 7. How shall we do?—Their first design seems to have been to exterminate the whole tribe, at which they are now shocked.

Ver. 8. Jabesh-gilead.—(This place, as its name imports, was situated in Gilead, east of Jordan. Eusebius and Jerome say it was a great town in their time, standing upon a hill, six miles south from Pella, in the way to Gerasa, now Derash. The Wady Yabes, mentioned by Burckhardt, which empties itself into the Jordan, in the neighbourhood of Bisan or Bethshan, (see 1 Sa. xxxi. 11.) and upon which Pella was situated, (celebrated by Pliny, for its fine waters,) seems to have taken its name from Jabesh. Near this spot, we must therefore look for its site; and the place called Kalaat Rabbad, seems to correspond, very nearly, to the spot; though it probably still retains among the Arabs its ancient name.)—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Go and smite, &c.—They find the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead had furnished no assistance to the war, which perhaps they did not approve; therefore, without any inquiry, or giving them any opportunity of defence, they determine on putting them all to the sword, except their virgin daughters, which, to the number of four hundred, they affect to bestow generously upon their brother Benjamin; and as these were insufficient, they put them in the way to steal two hundred more!

Ver. 19. Lebonah.—(Maundrell supposes, that either Khan Leban, which is situated on the eastern side of a "delicious vale," four leagues south from Shechem, and two leagues north from Beth-el, or the village of Leban, which is on the opposite side, occupies the site of the ancient Lebonah. It is eight hours, or about 24 miles from Jerusalem, according to Dr. Richardson.)—H.

Ver. 22. Be favourable, &c.—The similarity of this history to that of the rape of the Saline virgins, must strike every one who has read the Roman story, and in substance amounts to this: The early Romans being much in want of wives, Romulus proclaimed a great feast, in honour of Neptune, and invited all the neighbouring tribes to it; but nearly at the close of the games, the young Romans rushed in among them, and carried off seven hundred women, whom they honourably made their wives and fellow-citizens.

Ver. 23. Went and returned.—(It appears that the Benjamites acted in the most honourable way to the women they had thus violently carried off, and may rest assured, that they took them to an inheritance more than equal to their own. But this transaction, as well as the indiscriminate massacre of the people of Jabesh-gilead, as Dr. Gray observes, was certainly stamped with injustice and cruelty; and must be condemned on those principles which the Scriptures elsewhere furnish.

Ver. 25. In those days there was no king in Israel.—These three chapters conclude with the same words with which they began; and inform us, that these events occurred in a time of complete anarchy, when "every man did that which was right in his own eyes;" the only apology for such events as they contain—events "on all sides brutal, cruel, and ferocious."

crime to another, or to use the most disingenuous evasions and equivocations. Of all things, such solemn and important engagements require the most cautious reflection on future probable consequences.—Our penitent confessions, and devotional exercises, are too often succeeded by relapses into sin, for want of simply seeking direction from God, and depending on him to uphold us.—Even necessary justice should be executed with deep concern: and men would not be forward in inflicting vengeance on the less guilty, while more atrocious criminals were spared, were they not more ambitious of dominion for themselves, than zealous for the glory of God.—Even lawful employments may induce habits, which will be apt to influence the conduct in concerns of another nature, and with very bad effect: we should therefore seek for self-knowledge, keep a strict watch over our hearts, and duly consult the word of God as the rule of our duty.—T. Scott.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON JUDGES.

[The Book of Judges forms an important link in the history of the Israelites. It furnishes us with a lively description of a fluctuating and unsettled nation; a striking picture of the disorders and dangers which prevailed through magistracy; when "the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through by-ways;" when few prophets were appointed to control the people, and "every one did that which was right in his own eyes." It exhibits the contests of true religion with superstition; and displays the beneficial effects that flow from the former, and the miseries and evil consequences of the latter. It is a most remarkable history of the long suffering of God towards the Israelites, in which we see the most signal instances of his justice and mercy alternately displayed; the people sinned, and were punished; they repented, and found mercy. These things are written for our warning: none should presume, for God is just; none need despair, for God is MERCIFUL.]

Independently of the internal evidence of the authenticity of this sacred book, the transactions it records are not only cited or alluded to by other inspired writers, but are farther confirmed by the traditions current among heathen nations. Thus, the circumstance of Jephthah's devoting his daughter gave rise to the story of Iphigenia, (Iphthygenia, i. e. the daughter of Jephthah), being sacrificed by her father Agamemnon to gain the gods over to his side. The Vulpinaria, or feast of foxes, celebrated by the Romans at the feast of Ceres, in the month of April, (the Jewish harvest, but the Roman seed-time,) in which they fixed burning torches to the tails of a number of foxes, and let them run through the circus till they were burnt to death, said to be in revenge upon that species of animal for having once burnt up the fields of corn, was evidently derived from the story of Samson, probably conveyed into Italy by the Phœnicians. In the history of Samson and Delilah, we have the original of Nisus, king of Megara, and his daughter Scylla, who cut off the fatal purple lock, upon which victory depended, and gave it to his enemy Minos, then at war with him, who by that means destroyed both him and his kingdom. And, to mention no more, it appears highly probable, that Samson is the original and essential Hercules of fable; for, although the poets have united several particulars drawn from Moses and Joshua, and have added their own inventions, yet the most capital and considerable belong to Samson, and are distinguished by characters so peculiar to him, as to render him easily discerned throughout the whole.—Bagster.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

The author of this Book is unknown, but not improbably was Samuel; and the time, though not certain, is supposed to have been about the period of Gideon being called to the office of judge of Israel. Then Israel was grievously oppressed by the Midianites, who, invading the land of Israel, had stripped them of their corn, and created an artificial famine; the only famine mentioned (as is remarked by Bishop Patrick) during the administration of the judges. (See Jdg. vi. 4, 5.)

The narrative itself may be abridged into a few words: Elimelech, an inhabitant of Beth-lehem, accompanied by his wife Naomi and two sons, (Mahlon and Chilion,) being driven by famine, as above stated, from the land of Israel, goes to sojourn in the land of Moab, where he died. His two sons marry two Moabitish women, Ruth and Orpah, the former of which forms the subject of this interesting story. In the course of ten years, both the young men die; and Naomi, accompanied by her two daughters-in-law, returns to Judea, where peace and plenty were now restored. On the way, she persuades them to go back to their relations in Moab, to which Orpah reluctantly consents; but Ruth positively refuses to leave her mother-in-law. At length, through the leadings of Providence, she becomes known to Boaz, a rich land-owner of the tribe of Ephraim, who was related to Elimelech, her deceased father-in-law, to whom she is shortly married, and becomes the mother of Obed, the grandfather of David, and ancestor of David's Son and Lord.

The design of this book is, according to Henry, to lead us, 1. Into the true doctrine of providence; to show how conversant it is about our private concerns, and to teach us "in all our ways to acknowledge God;" and to adore his mercy in all the events which concern us. 2. To lead us to Christ, who descended from Ruth, and part of whose genealogy concludes the book. 3. In the conversion of Ruth the Moabitess, we have also a type of the calling of the Gentiles into the fellowship of the Messiah. We may add, 4. It is particularly interesting, as affording a beautiful picture of the simplicity of ancient manners, and the best illustration of the Hebrew law of redemption. It follows admirably after the Book of Judges, to which it may be considered as an Appendix, and affords a pleasing relief, after the barbarous events related in the three last chapters of that book.

Not only has this book largely shared the encomiums of Jewish and Christian writers, but the following classical remarks are from an author who cannot be suspected of partiality for the Scriptures. "The history of Ruth is written with a natural and affecting simplicity. We know nothing in either Homer or Herodotus that goes to the heart like this answer of Ruth to her mother, 'Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge,' &c. (ch. i. 16, 17.) There is a sublimity in this simplicity. . . . We have often said, that these times and manners have nothing in common with our own, whether good or bad; their spirit is not ours; their good sense is not ours. It is on this very account that the Pentateuch, the books of Joshua and Judges, are a thousand times more instructive than Homer and Herodotus."—(Voltaire: quoted Crit. Rev. July, 1796.)

CHAPTER I.

1 Elimelech driven by famine into Moab, dieth there. 4 Mahlon and Chilion, having married wives of Moab, die also. 6 Naomi, returning homeward, disavoweth her two daughters-in-law from going with her. 14 Orpah leaveth her, but Ruth with great constancy accompanieth her. 19 They two come to Beth-lehem, where they are gladly received.

NOW it came to pass in the * days when the judges <sup>b</sup> ruled, that there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah <sup>c</sup> went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and his two sons.

2 And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephraimites <sup>d</sup> of Beth-lehem-judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and <sup>e</sup> continued there.

3 And Elimelech Naomi's husband died; and she was left, and her two sons.

4 And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelled there about ten years.

5 And Mahlon and Chilion died also both of them; and the woman was left of her two sons and her husband.

6 ¶ Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that the LORD had visited his <sup>f</sup> people in giving <sup>g</sup> them bread.

7 Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her; and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

8 And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mother's house: the LORD <sup>h</sup> deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me.

9 The LORD grant you that ye may find rest,

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—22. Elimelech is driven by famine into Moab, and dies there: Naomi returns with Ruth.—We have already stated (in the introduction to this book, that the famine here referred to was probably that which occurred in the time of Gideon, when the Midianites had stripped the country, and he was compelled privately, and with a staff, to beat out the small portion of corn which he had secretly preserved from the hand of their oppressor. (See Judges vi. 11.) Elimelech was now compelled to leave his native country to seek bread in a heathen land. "Nothing but necessity (says good Bishop Hall) can dispense with the local relinquishing of God's church: not pleasure, nor profit, nor curiosity. Those who are famished out, God calls; yea, drives from thence. He hath not confined any man (to remain) to his necessary destruction."

Though Elimelech, however, escaped from famine, he could not fly from death, for himself and his two sons appear to have been all cut off within a short period of each other; they had, indeed, before their death, married, in that country, two Moabitish females, named Orpah and Ruth, both of whom are represented as strongly attached to their mother-in-law Naomi, who, after ten years' residence in that country, set out on her return to Canaan, attended by these two daughters.

On her way, however, Naomi feels much concern for her daughters-in-law, as having no means to provide for them; and advises them to go back to the homes of their respective parents, where they were not likely to suffer want. They both weep at the thoughts of parting from their mother, but at length Orpah kisses her and returns home; but Ruth determines to remain, and addresses her mother in those affecting words already referred to:—"Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Orpah, it ap-each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them; and they lifted up their voice, and wept.

10 And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people.

11 And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands?

12 Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have a husband. If I should say, I have hope, if I should have a husband also to-night, and should also bear sons;

13 Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for it grieveth me much for your sakes that the hand of the Lord is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her.

15 And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law.

16 And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God:

17 Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me.

18 When she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her.

19 ¶ So they two went until they came to Beth-lehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Beth-lehem, that all the city was moved about them, and they said, Is this Naomi?

20 And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the Lord hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in the beginning of barley-harvest.

CHAPTER II.

1 Ruth gleaneth in the fields of Boaz. 4 Boaz taking knowledge of her, sheweth her great favour. 18 That which she got, she carrieth to Naomi.

And Naomi had a kinsman of her husband's, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was Boaz.

2 And Ruth the Moabitess said unto Naomi, Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace. And she said unto her, Go, my daughter.

3 And she went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

4 ¶ And, behold, Boaz came from Beth-lehem, and said unto the reapers, The Lord be with you. And they answered him, The Lord bless thee.

5 Then said Boaz unto his servant that was set over the reapers, Whose damsel is this?

6 And the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab:

7 And she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house.

8 Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens:

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

10 Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?

11 And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been showed me, I all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thy husband: and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore.

hears, though not without weeping, had returned back to her people and her gods; but Ruth declares her determination to adhere to her mother's God, and to her people: "Jehovah do so to me and more also, if aught but death part thee and me!" "When we take the Lord for our God (says Henry) we must take his people for our people; even though they be poor and despised people."

"So they went on till they came to Beth-lehem." Naomi left Beth-lehem under the protection of a husband; but now measures back her steps, a poor and solitary widow. Yet she comes home to her country and her God, and brings with her character of more value than either friends or riches. She could not, however, but feel her trying circumstances, and when she was recognised by her former neighbours, who call her by her name, Naomi, which means pleasant, she instantly replies, "Call me no more Naomi, but Mara, (that is, bitter,) for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." Thus are we wont to conclude under all circumstances of affliction, though it may be those afflictions, as in the present instance, are not only working together for good, but just ready to produce it.

"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour:
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."—Cowper.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—23. Ruth goes to glean in the fields of Boaz, and is favourably noticed by him.—The Hebrew law respecting gleanings we have already noticed, (see on Levit. xix. 9;) and such is the benevolent character of that law, that it has recommended itself to adoption in our and other Christian countries. It was a mark, however, of poverty, and appears to have been the only chance, so to speak, of Ver. 11. Any more sons.—[This alludes to the custom that when a married man died, without leaving posterity, his brother should take his widow; and the children of such marriages were accounted those of the deceased brother. This address of Naomi to her daughters-in-law is exceedingly tender, persuasive, and affecting.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Ruth clave.—[The LXX. add, "and returned to her own people." The Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, are to the same purpose. It seems a very judicious addition, and agrees with the assertion in the next verse; and is accordingly adopted by Houbigant as a part of the text.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Unto her gods.—[They were probably both idolaters at this time, that they were proselytes is an unfounded conjecture; and the conversion of her probably now commenced.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. All the city was moved.—[From this it would appear that Naomi was not only well known but also highly respected at Beth-lehem; a proof that Elimelech was of high consideration at that place.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Barley harvest.—[At the beginning of Spring: for the barley-harvest began immediately after the passover, and that festival was held on the 15th of Nisan, corresponding nearly with our March.]—Bagster.

CHAP. II. Ver. 2. Glean ears of corn.—This, formerly, was the general custom in England, and supposed to be recognised by the common law; but it has lately been decided, by the Court of Common Pleas, that any person may prevent it on his own grounds.—Tomlin's Law Dict.

Ver. 4. Boaz came from Beth-lehem.—Homer represents the master of the field a king among his reapers, with his staff, or sceptre, in his hand.

Ver. 6. The servant, &c.—[This seems to have been a kind of steward, who had the under-management of the estate. Some think that an officer of this kind is intended by Homer, in the description he gives of a harvest field, as represented by Vulcan on one compartment of the shield of Achilles. He is there styled a king, and his staff is called a sceptre; and he stands in white dignity, merely to see that the work is well done, and that each performs his task.]—B.

Ver. 7. In the house.—A tent, or shed, erected for the shelter or refreshment of the reapers, &c.

12 The LORD recompense <sup>k</sup> thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the LORD God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come <sup>m</sup> to trust.

13 Then she said, "Let me find <sup>o</sup> favour in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken <sup>p</sup> friendly unto thy handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thy handmaidens.

14 And Boaz said unto her, At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and she did eat, and was sufficed, and <sup>q</sup> left.

15 And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and <sup>r</sup> reproach <sup>s</sup> her not:

16 And let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not.

17 So she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley.

18 ¶ And she took it up, and went into the city: and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her that she had reserved after she was sufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughtest thou? blessed be <sup>t</sup> he that did take knowledge of thee. And she showed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz.

20 And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, Blessed <sup>u</sup> be he of the LORD, who hath not left off <sup>v</sup> his kindness to the living and to the dead. And Naomi said unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, one <sup>w</sup> of our next kinsmen.

21 And Ruth the Moabitess said, He said unto me also, Thou <sup>x</sup> shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest.

22 And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go

CHAPTER III.

1 By Naomi's instruction, 5 Ruth lieth at Boaz's feet. 8 Boaz acknowledgeth the right of a kinsman. 14 He sendeth her away with six measures of barley.

THEN Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, shall <sup>a</sup> I not seek rest <sup>b</sup> for thee, that it may be well with thee?

2 And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou <sup>c</sup> wast? Behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing-floor.

3 Wash thyself therefore, and <sup>d</sup> anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyself known unto the man, until he shall have done eating and drinking.

4 And it shall be, when he lieth down, that thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie and thou shalt go in, and <sup>e</sup> uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou shalt do.

5 And she said unto her, All that thou sayest unto me I will do.

6 ¶ And she went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her.

7 And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was <sup>f</sup> merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

8 And it came to pass at midnight, that the man was afraid, and <sup>g</sup> turned himself: and, behold, a woman lay at his feet.

9 And he said, Who art thou? And she answered, I am Ruth thy handmaid: spread <sup>h</sup> therefore thy skirt over thy handmaid; for thou art <sup>i</sup> a near kinsman.

10 And he said, Blessed <sup>j</sup> be thou of the LORD, my daughter: for thou hast showed more kindness in the latter end than at the <sup>k</sup> beginning, inasmuch as thou followest not young men, whether poor or rich.

11 And now, my daughter, fear not; I will supplying the necessities of this poor widow and her daughter. "Let me now go to the field, (says Ruth,) and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find favour;" that is, after whoever may allow me, for there were probably brutes in that country, as in ours, that would reduce the privilege almost to nothing. It was "her hap," however, to light on a part of the fields belonging to Boaz; and thus our chances are God's providences. The pious farmer comes into the fields to visit and to encourage his reapers. "The Lord be with you," said he; and they answered, "The Lord bless thee." A beautiful example this of the piety and simplicity of primitive times; and a striking instance of the harmony between urbanity and true religion, which is always disgraced by moroseness and ill-temper. Seeing, however, a strange woman in the field, Boaz inquires of his overseer whose damsel she was; and understanding it to be Naomi's daughter-in-law, of whose kind and dutiful conduct towards her mother he appears to have been informed, he encourages her to continue gleaning after his maidens, and charges his young men in no way to interrupt her.

Naomi hearing this account, begins to see the hand of Providence in the business, reminds her daughter that Boaz was one of their nearest kinsmen, and intimates an anticipation of much greater things than these, in which views Ruth no doubt participated—for she did as she was desired—kept fast by the young people of Boaz, until the full end of harvest.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—18. Naomi directs Ruth how to attract the attention of Boaz, with a view to marriage.—This narrative has provoked the censures of the enemies of revelation, as disclosing a scheme to entrap Boaz, and at the same time exposing the virtue of Ruth to great danger. No doubt but the manners and customs of the East, as respects the conduct of the sexes to each other, are very different from ours; many things among them appear to us disgusting, while they revolt at other things in our manners as no less offensive to them. We here see Boaz, though master of the estate, after winnowing his corn, goes to lie down by the heap which he had winnowed. But it must be remembered, that in eastern countries they know nothing of the luxury of a feather bed—neither do they undress, as we do; but merely inwrap themselves in their loose garments, and lay themselves down on a pallet or mattress, or sometimes the bare ground—and so sleep. Boaz did so, as Naomi had anticipated, and Ruth, as directed, gently raises the bottom of his robe from off his feet,

Ver. 14. Dip thy morsel in the vinegar.—According to Calmet, this was not the strong acid used for sallads, &c. but a kind of small wine, (hence forbidden to the Nazarenes,) much used in harvest time, and a usual drink of the common soldiers.—He reached her parched corn.—M. Michael says, "To day we crossed the valley of Elassar, near some corn-fields, where one of the Arabs plucked some green ears of corn, parched them for us, by putting them into the fire, and then, when roasted, rubbed out the grain in his hands."

Ver. 17. An ephah of barley.—"Not less than seven gallons and a half; a good day's work."—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 18. That she had reserved.—Part of her dinner, probably, which she had reserved for Naomi.

Ver. 20. To the living and the dead.—To herself and her late husband.—One of our next kinsmen.—Hebrew, "Of our redeemers." Goel signifies a near kinsman, who hath the right to redeem the inheritance, or revenge the death of his relative. See chap. iv.

Ver. 23. The wheat-harvest.—This followed about a month after the barley-harvest, which was now concluding.

CHAP. III. Ver. 2. Winnoweth.—[It is probable that the winnowing of grain was effected by taking up a portion of the corn in a sieve, and letting it down slowly in the wind; thus the grain would, by its own weight, fall in one place, while the chaff, &c. would be carried to a distance by the wind. It is said here that this was done at night; probably what was threshed out in the day was winnowed in the evening, when the sea-breeze set in, which was common in Palestine.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Went to lie down.—[Such was the simplicity of those early times, that the most wealthy persons looked after their own affairs, both at home and in the field. These threshing-floors were covered at top to keep off the rain, but lay open on all sides, that the wind might come in freely for winnowing the corn; which being done, it is probable they were shut up at night, with doors fitted to them, that if any one lay there he might be kept warm, and the corn be secured from robbers.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. Spread thy skirt.—[Heb. "spread thy wing;" the emblem of protection; and a metaphor taken from the young of fowls, which run under the wings of their mother from birds of prey. Even to the present day, when a Jew marries a woman, he throws the skirt of his faith over her, to signify that he has taken her under his protection.]—Bagster.

do to thee all that thou requirest: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman.

12 And now it is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than I.

13 Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as the Lord liveth: lie down until the morning.

14 ¶ And she lay at his feet until the morning: and she rose up before one could know another. And he said, Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor.

15 Also he said, Bring the vail that thou hast upon thee, and hold it. And when she held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her: and she went into the city.

16 And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, Who art thou, my daughter? And she told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And she said, These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18 Then said she, Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day.

CHAPTER IV.

Boaz calleth into judgment the next kinsman. 6 He refuseth the redemption according to the manner in Israel. 9 Boaz buyeth the inheritance. 10 He marrieth Ruth. 12 She beareth Obed the grandfather of David. 18 The generation of Pharez.

WHEN went Boaz up to the gate, and sat him down there: and, behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by; unto whom he said, Ho, such a one! turn aside, sit down here. And he turned aside, and sat down.

2 And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said, Sit ye down here. And they sat down.

3 And he said unto the kinsman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, to spread it over herself, as claiming his protection. Waking in the night, and finding a woman at his feet, he feels alarmed, and inquires her name, to which she omits not to add that he was a near kinsman, and begs him to spread again his skirt, or rather wing, (as the Hebrew expression is,) over her, as his duty was; for neither she nor her mother seem to have been aware that there was a kinsman nearer.

In estimating the propriety of conduct, the characters of the parties must here also be taken into consideration. Boaz was an aged, rich, and powerful man; a prince, or as the Rabbins suppose, a judge in Israel. Ruth was a widow, young in comparison with Boaz, and bore the character of a virtuous woman with all that knew her. Boaz also commends her for not following "young men, whether rich or poor;" which seems to intimate that her character and personal charms might have engaged a young husband, but that she preferred building up the house of her former spouse by means of the gift of kin, according to the Mosaic law.

Boaz was not only rich, but generous; and therefore would not suffer Ruth to return to her mother without a present, and a substantial one; and therefore, probably, loaded her with as much corn as she could well carry, which fully satisfied her mother that their kinsman was in earnest, and would not rest till he had honourably fulfilled his promise. On this part of his conduct, Bishop Hall remarks with his usual point, "I stead of touching her as a wanton, he blesses her as a sister, encourages her as a friend, promises her as a kinsman, rewards her as a patron, and sends her away laden with hopes and gifts; no less chaste, but more happy than she came. O admirable temperance, worthy the progenitor of him, in whose peace and heart was no guile."

The LXX. translate it an apron, and Vulgate, a cloak. By the circumstances of the story, it must have been of a considerable size: and accordingly Dr. Shaw thinks it was no other than the hyke, the finer sort of which, such as are still worn by ladies and persons of distinction among the Arabs, he takes to answer to the peplos, or robe of the ancient Greeks.—18 measures.—The quantity of this barley is uncertain. sellet a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's:

4 And I thought to advertise thee, saying Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beside thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it.

5 Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 ¶ And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this was the manner in former time in Israel concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; a man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in Israel.

8 Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee. So he drew off his shoe.

9 ¶ And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.

10 Moreover Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witnesses this day.

11 And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, We are witnesses. The Lord make the woman that is come into thy house like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the house of Israel: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Beth-lehem:

ries Ruth.—The gate of the city was a court of Elders or Judges, or, in modern terms, a police office, where the magistrates sat to determine all controversies in a summary manner. Hither Boaz repairs, and meets, as he no doubt expected, the nearer kinsman, whom he calls into court, without appearing immediately to recollect his name. On explaining the business, the nearer kinsman makes no objection to redeem the estate, till he finds there is a wife to be taken with it, and that her children were to be reckoned to her former husband; upon hearing this, he immediately declines the bargain, having a family of his own which would thereby be injured. Boaz, therefore, undertakes it according to his promise, and the agreement is at once concluded with all the due formalities of law.

The law of the case we have already seen, (Deut. xxv. 5—9.) and the case before us affords the most perfect illustration of that law; only here the contemptuous ceremony of spitting in the face, or rather before him, (see note on Deut. xxv. 9,) who refused to purchase, is omitted, as the arrangement with Boaz appears to have been satisfactory to all parties. The pulling off the shoe (or sandal) however was attended to, as necessary to a transfer of the land. The marriage of Ruth becomes of course connected with the redemption of the estate, and Boaz, immediately on the purchase, receives the congratulation and blessing of all present. Ruth being taken home, speedily proves pregnant, and on bearing a son, Naomi, her mother-in-law, receives the warmest congratulations from her own sex, and they bless God on her behalf for such a kinsman as she had found in Boaz. The whole of this narrative is extremely simple, beautiful, and pathetic; but nothing more so, perhaps, than the circumstance respecting Naomi, near the close: she "took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse unto it." Never was woman more delighted, or gumist thought, for he adds, "And she received strength from the Lord to carry it."—Bagster.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 6. I cannot redeem.—(The Targum seems to give the proper sense of this passage: "I cannot redeem it, because I have a wife already; and it is not fit for me to bring another into my house, lest brawling arise in it; and lest I hurt my own inheritance. Do thou redeem it, for thou hast no wife, which hinders me from redeeming it.")—B.

Ver. 7. Plucked off his shoe.—(This custom does not refer to the law about refusing to marry a brother's widow, but was usual in the transfer of inheritances: for this relative was not a brother, but simply a kinsman; and the 13 ¶ So Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and she bare a son.

14 And the women said unto Naomi, Blessed be the Lord, which hath not left thee this day without a kinsman, that his name may be famous in Israel.

15 And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law, which loveth thee, which is better to thee than seven sons, hath borne him.

18 ¶ Now these are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron,

"Now (says Bishop Hall) is Mara (bitter) turned back again to Naomi, (pleasant); and Orpah, if she hear of this in Moab, cannot but envy at her sister's happiness. O the sure and bountiful payments of the Almighty! Who ever came under his wing in vain? Who ever lost by trusting in him? Who ever forsook the Moab of this world for the true Israel, and did not at last rejoice in the change?"

To return, however, to the conduct of Boaz, as the goel or redeemer of Naomi's forfeited inheritance, we cannot, and surely ought not, to omit to refer to a greater name than Boaz, even a name above every name. "Our Lord Jesus Christ (says shoe was not pulled off by Ruth, but by the kinsman himself. The Targumist, instead of his shoe, renders "his right hand glove," it probably being the custom, in his time, to give that instead of a shoe. Jarchi says, "When we purchase any thing new, it is customary to give, instead of a shoe, a handkerchief or vail."—Bagster.

Henry) is our Redeemer. At a vast expense he redeemed our heavenly inheritance, which by sin was forfeited into the hands of divine justice, and which we should never have been able to redeem. He likewise purchased a peculiar people, whom, though poor and despised, strangers and foreigners, like Ruth, he espoused to himself, that the name of our dead and buried race might not be cut off for ever. He even ventured the mar-ning of his own inheritance to do this: for though he was rich, for our sakes he became poor; but he was abundantly recom-pensed, by his heavenly Father, who hath therefore highly ex-alted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow."

the time of Moses, is evident from the history of Tamar: see note on Gen. xxviii. 8-10, and it is a curious fact, that a custom very similar prevails among the Mongolian Tartars, as remarked by Michaelis, in the work just re-ferred to.

Ver. 15. Better than seven sons.—That is, one such daughter as Ruth is better than seven sons, who might die childless, like Mahlon and Chilion.

Ver. 17. Obed.—That is, "a servant;" alluding to his being the nourisher of her old age.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON RUTH.

[The authenticity and canonical authority of this sacred book cannot be questioned; and the Evangelists, in describing our Saviour's descent, have fol-lowed its genealogical accounts. To delineate part of this genealogy appears to be the principal design of the book: it had been foretold that the Messiah should be of the tribe of Judah, and it was afterwards revealed that he should be of the family of David; and therefore it was necessary, to prevent the least suspicion of fraud or design, that the history of that family should be written before these prophecies were revealed. And thus this book, these prophecies, and their accomplishment, serve mutually to illustrate each other. The whole narrative is extremely interesting and instructive; and is written with the most beautiful simplicity. The distress of Naomi; her affectionate concern for her daughter-in-law; the reluctant departure of Orpah; the dutiful attachment of Ruth; and the sorrowful return to Bethlehem, are very beautifully told. The simplicity of manners, likewise, which is shown in the account of Ruth's industry and attention to Naomi; of the elegant charity of Boaz; and of his acknowledgment of his kindred with Ruth, afford a very pleasing contrast to the turbulent scenes described in the preceding Book. And, while it exhibits, in a striking and affecting manner, the care of Divine Provi-dence over those who sincerely fear God, and honestly aim at fulfilling his will, the circumstance of a Moabitess becoming an ancestor of the Messiah seems to have been a pre-intimation of the admission of the Gentiles into his Church. It must be remarked, that, in the estimation of the Jews, it was disreaceful to David to have derived his birth from a Moabitess; and Shi-miel, in his revilings against him, is supposed by them to have tauntingly re-flected on his descent from Ruth. This book, therefore, contains an intrinsic proof of its own verity, as it reveals a circumstance so little flattering to the sovereign of Israel; and it is scarcely necessary to appeal to its admission into the canon of Scripture, for a testimony of its authentic character. Add to which, that the native, the amiable simplicity in which the story is told, is a sufficient proof of its genuineness. There are several sympathetic circum-stances recorded which no forger could have invented; there is too much of nature to admit any thing of art.]—Bagster.

THE FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL, OTHERWISE CALLED, THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS.

In the Hebrew canon, this and the following book form but one, and derive their name from the prophet Samuel; whose history and transactions are re-lated in the first book, and by whom, it is highly probable, the former part of it, as far as the twenty-fourth chapter, was written; while the latter part, as well as the second book, are ascribed to the prophets Gad and Nathan, (see 1 Chron. xxix. 29.) and in this opinion the Jews acquiesce. Others, with Cal-met, suppose these books to be much more recent than these persons; but that they were composed out of their memoirs. The equality of the style, the frequent eulogiums on the character and conduct of Samuel, the connex-ion of the materials, particular quotations and remarks on certain events, are, Calmet supposes, proofs sufficiently clear of what he assumes. These books, it is said, contain remarks and expressions which could only proceed from a contemporary author, and others which are evidences of a much later age. It is probable, however, that these supposed marks of posteriority may easily be accounted for, on the supposition that they were added by Ezra when he formed the canon of Scripture. In the Septuagint and Vulgate, they are called the First and Second Book of Kings. The first book consists of thirty-one chapters, containing an account of the birth of Samuel; with the thanksgiving song of Hannah; the mal administration of Eli's sons; the call of Samuel, and the denunciation against Eli's house, the capture of the ark by the Philistines, and the completion of God's judgment against the house of Eli; the chastisement inflicted on the Philistines for retaining the ark; its return, and the punishment of those who profaned its sanctity; the repentance of the people at Mizpeh, and the subduing of the Philistines; the election of Saul for a king, in consequence of the ill-advised desire of the Israelites; the wars of Saul with the Philistines; his sins and rejection; the anointing of David; his victory over Goliath; his unjust persecutions by Saul; the death of Samuel, whom Saul consults by means of the witch of Endor; the defeat, death, and burial of Saul and his sons.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. Hannah . . . and Peninnah.—Names in the East are often yearly 'to worship and to sacrifice unto the LORD of hosts in Shiloh. And the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the priests of the LORD, were there.

4 ¶ And when the time was that Elkanah offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her sons and her daughters, portions:

5 But unto Hannah he gave a 'worthy portion; for he loved Hannah: but 'the LORD had shut up her womb.

6 And her adversary also 'provoked her sore, for to make her fret, because the LORD had shut up her womb.

7 And as he did so year by year, when 'she went up to the house of the LORD, so she provoked her; therefore she wept, and did not eat.

8 Then said Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, why weepest thou? and why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I 'better to thee than ten sons?

9 ¶ So Hannah rose up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk. Now Eli the priest sat upon a seat by a post of the temple of the LORD.

10 And she was 'in bitterness of soul, and prayed unto the LORD, and wept sore.

11 And she vowed 'a vow, and said, O LORD of hosts, if thou wilt indeed 'look on the affliction of thy handmaid, and remember 'me, and not forget thy handmaid, but wilt give unto thy handmaid 'a man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and there shall no razor 'come upon his head.

12 ¶ And it came to pass, as she 'continued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, she spake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought she had been drunken.

14 And Eli said unto her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah answered and said, No, my lord, I am a woman 'of a sorrowful spirit: I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have 'poured out my soul before the LORD.

16 Count not thy handmaid for a daughter of Belial: for out of the abundance of my 'complaint and grief have I spoken hitherto.

17 Then Eli answered and said, Go in peace: and the God of Israel grant 'thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

18 And she said, Let thy handmaid find grace in thy sight. So the woman went her way, and did 'eat, and her countenance was no more sad.

19 ¶ And they rose up in the morning early, and worshipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; and the LORD remembered 'her.

20 Wherefore it came to pass, 'when the time was come about after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son, and called his name 'Samuel, saying, Because I have asked him of the LORD.

21 And the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear 'before the LORD, and there abide for ever.

23 And Elkanah her husband said unto her, Do 'what seemeth thee good; tarry until thou have weaned him; only 'the LORD establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her son suck until she weaned him.

24 ¶ And when she had weaned him, she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the house of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And they slew a bullock, and brought the child to Eli.

26 And she said, O my lord, as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the LORD.

27 For this child I 'prayed; and 'the LORD hath given me my petition which I asked of him:

should vex each other, and at the same time embitter the situation of their husband. Elkanah appears to have been a wise and good man, particularly attached to Hannah, for her amiable disposition and pious character, though not, so far as appears, deficient in tenderness to any part of his family. As to Hannah, her unhappiness and discontent is very sufficiently accounted for: instead, however, of returning the unkindness of her rival, or meditating revenge, she betakes herself to prayer, and her prayers eventually are heard.

But Eli evidently mistakes her character; he saw her, as it appears, under very suspicious circumstances; her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: and as she had been eating and drinking with her husband, it was not unnatural to suppose she might be intoxicated. Hannah, however, gives a sober, a modest, and a pious answer: "No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit," and in great distress; but "I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink;" from which we may infer, that she had drunk only water, but she had "poured out her soul before the Lord," and was therefore greatly grieved, to be thus taken for "a daughter of Belial;" a wicked and profligate woman, of which we shall soon find there were too many loitering about the doors of the tabernacle. When the venerable high priest hears this, he is satisfied; and therefore gives her his blessing; and she returns in peace, and is no more sad.

Her prayer is heard, and her request granted; and unlike too many, who neither wait an answer nor return thanks for it, she records her gratitude in the name she gives her son; and so soon as he can be weaned, she takes him, with a liberal provision for sacrifice, and brings him to Eli, to remain under his care, and serve the Lord for ever. "And he" (Samuel) was no sooner returned unto the Lord, than he "there worshipped," and devoted himself to the Lord's service, and to attendance on his high priest, Eli. Happy is it when parents, considering their children as given them by the Lord, seriously devote them to his service; and doubly happy they, whose children no sooner enter the threshold of the tabernacle, than they begin to worship.

significant. Hannah signifies kind, or gracious; Peninnah, a pearl, or perhaps ruby. The former being denominated from her temper, the latter from her complexion.

Ver. 3. The LORD of hosts.—This is the first time this phrase occurs; for its import, see the exposition of Gen. xxxii. 24—32.

Ver. 5. A worthy portion.—Margin. "A double portion;" still more literally, "A portion of two faces." These portions were probably peace-offerings; and the action itself appears to have had "two faces," or objects, the one to express his love to Hannah, and the other in hopes (through this double portion) that she might be favoured with offspring.

Ver. 6. Her adversary (i. e. Peninnah) provoked her.—Margin. "angered her." It was too customary for women that were fruitful, to reproach, and perhaps ridicule, those that were barren; of which we have several instances. In this case, Peninnah had her children with her, which probably added to Hannah's vexation.

Ver. 7. When she went.—Heb. "From her going up;" i. e. from the time of her setting out, during all the journey. Perhaps they went up before Elkanah, which gave Peninnah the opportunity to vex her in his absence

Ver. 8. Better than ten (i. e. many) sons.—Compare Ruth iv. 15.

Ver. 9. Eli . . . eat upon a seat by a post of the temple, &c.—The seat here was doubtless the seat of judgment, for Eli was judge in Israel: the post against which he sat, was a door-post. (as the word means, Ex. xii. 7. xxi. 5. &c.) that is, of the tabernacle, to which the word temple is here first applied, and seems to intimate that at this time the building of the temple was contemplated, and forms an objection to Samuel being the writer, though by no means a decided one, as he might anticipate it by the spirit of prophecy; or David might, from his first establishment in the kingdom, intimate such a design to Samuel.

Ver. 11. Give him unto the Lord.—[Samuel, as a descendant of Levi, was the Lord's property, from 25 years of age till 50; but the vow here implies that he should be consecrated to the Lord from his infancy to his death, and that he should not only act as a Levite, but as a Nazarite.]—Bagger.—No razor shall come upon his head.—This is the vow of Naziritism briefly expressed. <sup>16</sup> And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth; then he would answer him, Nay; but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

<sup>19</sup> Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice.

<sup>20</sup> ¶ And Eli blessed Elkanah and his wife, and said, The LORD give thee seed of this woman for the loan which is lent to the LORD. And they went unto their own home.

<sup>21</sup> And the LORD visited Hannah, so that she conceived, and bare three sons and two daughters. And the child Samuel grew before the LORD.

<sup>22</sup> ¶ Now Eli was very old, and heard all that his sons did unto all Israel; and how they lay with the women that assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1-36. Hannah's prophetic hymn. Eli's profane sons.—Hannah is now richly recompensed for all her sufferings. She is endowed with the spirit of prophecy, and delivers one of the finest odes in all the Old Testament, and which is evidently the foundation of that beautiful magnificat of our Lord's mother, (Luke i. 46-55.) in which many of the same images occur, as do others of them in the Song of Simeon. This song requires no commentary to explain it, nor can it be needful to any reader of taste or piety, to point out its beauties. Two things only shall be here remarked.

1. A beautiful poetical delineation of the divine providence, in the government of the world, not only independent of all human aid, but absolutely regardless of it; raising beggars to a throne, and casting monarchs into the dust.

"Here he exalts neglected worms
To sceptres and a crown;
Anon, the following page he turns,
And trends the monarch down."—Watts' Lyrics.

2. A spirited prediction of the coming of Messiah.

"The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken to pieces;
Out of heaven shall he thunder upon them.
The Lord shall judge (to) the ends of the earth."

This passage may be prophetic of, or at least may receive a beautiful illustration from, the victory obtained over the Philistines, not long afterwards, "when the Lord thundered with a great thunder upon the Philistines, and discomfited them;" (chap. vii. 10.) so that their strength was completely broken; and in similar language is the coming of Messiah described, (Psalm ii. 5-9.) "He shall speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Then follow these expressive lines:

"He shall give strength unto his king,
And exalt the horn of his anointed," or Messiah.

Hereby is plainly meant the establishment of Christ's kingdom upon the ruins of all opposing powers. (See Luke i. 69.)

After delivering this fine ode, and leaving a copy probably, in the hands of Eli, Hannah returned to her family; but coming up, year by year, to the sacred feasts, brought her son annually a little coat, as the testimony of her affection; and at the same time received from Eli the most pleasing accounts of his character; but unhappily the conduct of Eli's own sons, Hophni and Phinehas, was directly the reverse. They were "sons of Belial;" they profaned the service of the Lord, and so shamefully treated those who came to offer sacrifices, that they abhorred to bring them. Not only so, but they committed lewdness with the women that attended at the door of the tabernacle, and probably "assembled in troops" to meet

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. My horn is exalted.—Bruce remarks the use of horns, silver or gilt, by the governors of provinces, which he describes as shaped like candle extinguishers. The late ingenious Editor of Calmest considers them as military insignia; and mentions having seen some Scapys from the East Indies, several years ago, with steel horns of the same shape on the front of their helmets; but he seems to doubt the propriety of applying them to the female dress.—Fragments, No. 114. The following testimonies, however, are decisive on this point. Col. Licht describes the female Maronites and Druses as wearing a tin or silver conical tube, about twelve inches long; and the wife of the Emir on Mount Lebanon, as sometimes wearing one of gold, enriched with precious stones. Those seen by Macnichel were of silver, studded with jewels, so placed as to mark their conditions, a married woman wearing the horn on the right side, a widow on the left, and a virgin directly on her crown, the veil being always thrown over each. Buckingham mentions a Christian woman with a silver horn rising from her forehead obliquely, four or five inches in diameter, and tapering to a point.—Orient. Lit. No. 426.—My mouth is enlarged.—That is, I speak with boldness.

Ver. 2. There is none beside thee.—This whole hymn is evidently poetic, and we conceive (as often is the case) a word is to be borrowed from the preceding member of the verse, thus:

"There is none holy as Jehovah:
There is none (holy) besides thee.
There is no rock like our God!"

Ver. 3. Talk no more exceeding proudly.—Heb. "Multiply not your boasting proudly, proudly."—Dr. Jebb's Sac. Lit. p. 393.

Ver. 5. They that were hungry ceased (to hunger).—Dr. Hunt.
Ver. 10. Broken to pieces.—(The LXX. insert, "Let not the wise glory in his wisdom, nor the strong glory in his strength, nor the rich glory in his riches; but let him who glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth the Lord; and executeth judgment and righteousness in the midst of the earth.")—Baxter.

Ver. 20. Eli blessed, &c.—[The natural place for this verse seems to be before the 11th, after which the 21st should probably come in; and after the 21st perhaps the 28th should follow.]—Baxter.

23 And he said unto them, Why do ye such things? for I hear <sup>f</sup> of your evil dealings by all this people.

24 Nay, my sons; for it is no good report that I hear: ye make the LORD's people to transgress.

25 If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him: but if a man sin against <sup>h</sup> the LORD, who <sup>i</sup> shall entreat for him? Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, because <sup>j</sup> the LORD would slay them.

26 And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with <sup>k</sup> the LORD, and also with men.

27 ¶ And there came a man of God unto Eli, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Did I plainly appear <sup>l</sup> unto the house of thy father, when they were in Egypt in Pharaoh's house?

28 And did I choose him <sup>m</sup> out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to offer upon mine altar, to burn incense, to wear an ephod before me? and did I give <sup>n</sup> unto the house of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Israel?

29 Wherefore kick <sup>o</sup> ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my habitation; and honourst thy sons above me, to make yourselves fat with the chiefest of all the offerings of Israel my people?

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Israel saith, I said <sup>p</sup> indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should walk before me for ever: but now <sup>q</sup> the LORD saith, Be it far from me; for them <sup>r</sup> that honour me I will honour, and they that despise <sup>s</sup> me shall be lightly esteemed.

31 Behold, the days <sup>t</sup> come, that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thy house.

32 And thou shalt see <sup>u</sup> an enemy in my habitation, in all the wealth which God shall give Israel: and there shall not be an old man in thy house for ever.

33 And the man of thine, whom I shall not

CHAPTER III.

1 How the word of the LORD was first revealed to Samuel. 11 God telleth Samuel the destruction of Eli's house. 15 Samuel, though loath, telleth Eli the vision. 19 Samuel groweth in credit.

AND the child Samuel ministered unto the LORD before Eli. And the word <sup>a</sup> of the LORD was precious in those days; there was no open vision.

2 And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place, and his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not see;

3 And ere the lamp <sup>b</sup> of God went out in the temple of the LORD, where the ark of God was, and Samuel was laid down to sleep;

4 That the LORD called Samuel: and he answered, Here am I.

5 And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down.

6 And the LORD called yet again, Samuel, And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again.

7 Now <sup>c</sup> Samuel did not yet know the LORD, neither was the word of the LORD yet revealed unto him.

them: not Israelites, we may hope, but the female Canaanites, who were employed to assist in the service of the tabernacle.

Eli, hearing this, remonstrates with his ungodly sons, but not so early, we may fear, as he ought to have done; having winked at their crimes, perhaps, (as is too often done,) as "juvenile indiscretions," and not fully exerted his authority, either as a father, or a judge, to correct them. But Eli now reasoned with his sons with much affection and tenderness, warning them of the consequences, "If a man sin against the law, the judge shall judge him," and may act as mediator with the offended party; "but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him?" Their offence was treason against God, for which the law provided no atonement, and the old covenant no mediator; at least after the death of Moses. "But they hearkened not to the voice of their father, because the LORD would slay them;" which, if rightly translated, means, that they had hardened their hearts against God, like Pharaoh, till God utterly rejected them, and sealed their doom. (See exposition of Exod. chap. vii. and ix.) So when Amaziah, king of Judah, refused to hearken to the prophet whom

God had sent to reprove him, he replied, "I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast refused to hearken unto my counsel." (2 Chron. xxv. 16.) The Lord also sends "a man of God," a prophet, to warn Eli himself of the consequences of his criminal tenderness toward his sons; but whether this was before or after Eli's reprimand to them, is by no means clear.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—21. Samuel called to the prophetic office, in which he is acknowledged by all Israel.—We have seen, in the close of the first chapter of this book, that Samuel was devoted by his mother to the service of God, under the care of Eli, who seems to have taken him to wait upon his person, and to sleep in an anti-chamber. Prefatory to the ensuing narrative, however, we are told, that "the word of the LORD was precious in those days," there being "no open vision;" by which we understand, no angelic appearances, as in the times of the patriarchs and judges. By "the word of the LORD," we understand prophetic communications, for they had no Bible, as we have, to read, or to consult. The books of Moses were probably the only ones yet written, and copies of these were in very few hands besides those of the priests, and Ver. 25. The judge.—Hebrew, Elohim, is here translated "the judge." Under the Theocracy, "God was judge himself," but the presiding priest was always representative; just as in the Court of King's Bench, London, the king is always represented by the chief justice.—Because the LORD would slay them.—Dr. Clarke contends, that the particle Ki should be translated therefore, as in Psal. cxvi. 10. Hos. ix. 15, &c. The text would then read, "They hearkened not, therefore the LORD purposed to destroy them;" but Dr. Boothroyd retains our present version, because; which, as above explained, seems consistent with the divine conduct.

Ver. 27. House of thy father.—That is, Aaron; Ex. xxviii. 1, &c. The priesthood descended from him to Eleazar; then to Phinehas; afterwards to Ithamar, Aaron's youngest son, from whom Eli was descended, and some think was then transferred to Samuel, who was of the family of Kohath, Num. iv. 4, &c. compare ver. 35.; but there are difficulties in his genealogy which we cannot here unravel.

Ver. 29. Wherefore kick ye.—Rather, "apurn ye;" so Boothroyd. It appears from this and the preceding verses, that Eli's sons were epicures, and not content with what the law allowed them, picked all the choice pieces out of the sacrifices for themselves, whether belonging to the LORD in sacrifice, or to the offerer.—Honourst thy sons.—[By permitting his sons to deal thus with the sacrifices, and to be served first, by taking their part before the fat, &c. was burnt to the LORD, Eli thus honoured his sons above God.]—Bagster.

Ver. 31. I will cut off thine arm.—[That is, I will destroy the strength, power, influence, and authority of thee and thy family; of which the arm of man being the instrument is used as the emblem.]—Bagster.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt see an enemy.—See Margin: [which appears to be the right translation: for agreeably to this prediction, he did see the tabernacle deprived of the ark, which was its glory, and lived to hear that it was captured by the Philistines.]—Bagster. Dr. Boothroyd, (following the Vulgate,) reads, "With envy thou shalt see a rival, (emulum), who in every thing shall do good to Israel;" meaning Samuel. Ver. 35.

CHAP. III. Ver. 3. Ere the lamp, &c.—[Before sunrise; for it is probable the lamps were extinguished before the rising of the sun: see the parallel passages.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. And Samuel did not yet know the LORD.—See the Margin. We should rather render the former clause somewhat differently, supplying a word from the context, thus: "Now Samuel did not know (the voice of) the LORD, neither," &c. This refers only to the word of prophecy, for he was evidently truly pious.

8 And the LORD called Samuel again the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the LORD had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, Speak, LORD; for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place.

10 And the LORD came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth.

11 ¶ And the LORD said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle.

12 In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end.

13 For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not.

14 And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 ¶ And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the house of the LORD. And Samuel feared to show Eli the vision.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel, my son. And he answered, Here am I.

17 And he said, What is the thing that the LORD hath said unto thee? I pray thee hide it not from me: God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide any thing from me of all the things that he said unto thee.

18 And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he said, It is the LORD: let him do what seemeth him good.

19 ¶ And Samuel grew, and the LORD was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The Israelites are overcome by the Philistines at Eben-ezer. 3 They fetch the ark unto the terror of the Philistines. 10 They are chastised again, the ark taken, Hophni and Phinehas are slain. 12 Eli at the news, falling backward, breaketh his neck. 19 Phinehas's wife, discouraged in her travail with I-chaiad, dieth.

AND the word of Samuel came to all Israel. Now Israel went out against the Philistines to battle, and pitched beside Eben-ezer: and the Philistines pitched in Aphek.

2 And the Philistines put themselves in array against Israel: and when they joined battle, Israel was smitten before the Philistines: and they slew of the army in the field about four thousand men.

3 ¶ And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Israel said, Wherefore hath the LORD smitten us to-day before the Philistines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people sent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth between the cherubims: and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, they said, What meaneth the noise of this great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And the Philistines were afraid, for they said, God is come into the camp. And they said, Wo unto us! for there hath not been such a thing heretofore.

Levites, and perhaps few of them, as we read of no professed scribes till the time of David. (2 Sam. viii. 17.) This is worthy of being mentioned, not only as accounting for the ignorance of the divine law, which we observe in some instances at this early period, but more especially to stimulate our own gratitude, who live in a land of Bibles, and of gospel privileges, and so encircled by knowledge on every side, that we may well say, This is a day of "open vision."

But to return to Samuel: the first revelation he received was of a painful nature, as it respected the judgments denounced against the house of Eli. Samuel, however, faithfully relates the whole to the afflicted priest, who receives it with that submission to the divine will which marks him as a truly pious character, and an eminent believer under the Old Testament dispensation, though defective in that energy which marked the character of Samuel and many others, and especially culpable in too great indulgence to his ungodly children: "His sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not."

Samuel, however, grew in grace and in knowledge, had repeated visitations of the prophetic Spirit, "and all Israel . . . knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the LORD;" and as such, therefore, resorted to him on all occasions on which his counsel and instruction might be wanted.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—22. The Israelites fight with the Philistines, and are defeated: the ark is taken, and Eli dies, &c.—On what ground, or from what motive, the Israelites at this time ventured to attack their enemies, is unknown, for it does not appear that they had any divine authority, either through Samuel or Eli. The latter, we find, when he heard that the ark was gone into the camp, (ver. 13.) sat watching by the wayside, and his heart trembled for its safety. This circumstance may, perhaps, lead us into the true origin of this unfortunate conflict. The sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, having lost their character with all the wise and good in Israel now seek to ingratiate themselves with the army, and bringing down the ark, evidently without the consent of their father, try to persuade the people that the ark itself would save them, without the divine presence residing in it. And this has ever been the fatal error of vain and presumptuous professors: "The temple of the Lord are we," said some vain-glorious boasters; and the sons of Belial, that had defied the Lord, and almost broken their father's heart, now flatter themselves—"When the ark cometh among us, (say they) it will save us from our enemies." They vainly thought, that by bringing up the Ark they should secure the divine support. When the ark arrived, therefore, they "shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again." The Philistines were now alarmed, for they understood that their God was come: the God that smote the Egyptians; and they anticipated a like destruction. Whether or not any one discovered to them the real fact, that the God of Israel was not with the ark, we know not; they, however, encouraged each other to fight like men, and they soon found they had none but men to fight with; for Israel was a second time defeated, with great slaughter:

Ver. 10. The Lord came and stood.—This is generally understood of a divine appearance; but Dr. Clarke thinks it referred only to the voice appearing stationary. So we read, (Gen. iii. 8.) of "the voice of the Lord walking in the garden," &c.

Ver. 15. Samuel feared, &c.—[Samuel revered Eli as a father, and feared to distress him by showing what God had purposed to do. It does not appear that God commanded Samuel to deliver this message; he, therefore, did not attempt it till adjured by Eli.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. From Dan to Beer-sheba.—These were the northern and southern extremities of Israel.

Ver. 21. The Lord appeared again.—This is explained by the words following: He revealed himself "b, the word of the Lord;" i. e. by the Spirit of prophecy.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. And the word of Samuel came to all Israel.—This clause is joined, by the ancient versions, to the former chapter, nearly thus: "The Lord revealed himself to Samuel by the word of the Lord, and the word of Samuel came to all Israel;" or, as Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "And Samuel spoke it to all Israel." The attaching the clause to this chapter, seems to imply, that it was by his direction that Israel made this attack upon the Philistines, for which there is no authority.—Aphek.—[This Aphek was situated in the tribe of Judah, and is probably the same as Aphek, Josh. xv. 8. It must be carefully distinguished from that near Jezreel, and another in Asher.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. All Israel shouted.—[They vainly supposed that the ark would save them, when the God of it had departed from them because of their wickedness. It was customary with all the nations of the earth to take their gods and sacred ensigns with them to war. The Persians, Indians, Greeks, Romans, Germans, Philistines, &c. did so. Consecrated crosses, blessing and hallowing of colours and standards, are the modern remains of these ancient superstitions.]—Bagster.

8 Wo unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty Gods? these are the Gods that smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness.

9 Be strong, and quit yourselves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not servants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourselves like men, and fight.

10 ¶ And the Philistines fought, and Israel was smitten, and they fled every man into his tent: and there was a very great slaughter; for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen.

11 And the ark of God was taken; and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain.

12 ¶ And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the same day with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli sat upon a seat by the wayside watching: for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city, and told it, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noise of the crying, he said, What meaneth the noise of this tumult? And the man came in hastily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli was ninety and eight years old; and his eyes were dim, that he could not see.

16 And the man said unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, and I fled to-day out of the army. And he said, What is there done, my son?

17 And the messenger answered and said, Israel is fled before the Philistines, and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people, and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead, and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to pass, when he made men-

19 ¶ And his daughter-in-law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, near to be delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she bowed herself and travailed; for her pains came upon her.

20 And about the time of her death the women that stood by her said unto her, Fear not; for thou hast borne a son. But she answered not, neither did she regard it.

21 And she named the child I-chabod, saying, The glory is departed from Israel: because the ark of God was taken, and because of her father-in-law and her husband.

22 And she said, The glory is departed from Israel: for the ark of God is taken.

CHAPTER V.

1 The Philistines having brought the ark into Ashdod set it in the house of Dagon. 3 Dagon is smitten down and cut in pieces, and they of Ashdod smitten, with emerods. 8 So God dealt with them of Gath, when it was brought thither: 10 and so with them of Ekron, when it was brought thither.

AND the Philistines took the ark of God, and brought it from Eben-ezer unto Ashdod.

2 When the Philistines took the ark of God, they brought it into the house of Dagon, and set it by Dagon.

3 ¶ And when they of Ashdod arose early on the morrow, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth before the ark of the Lord. And they took Dagon, and set him in his place again.

4 And when they arose early on the morrow morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of the Lord; and the head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threshold; only the stump of Dagon was left to him.

5 Therefore neither the priests of Dagon, even the ark itself was taken, and the ungodly sons of Eli, who had probably been the authors of this rash attempt, were slain. Eli himself, now full ninety-eight years old, who, we have seen, sat trembling to hear the issue, (for he could neither see nor move,) no sooner heard the fate of the ark, than he fell down, probably in an apoplectic fit, and broke his neck, and died; the wife of Phinehas, also, who was now pregnant, and near her time, hearing of the event, was taken in premature labour, and died; but before she died, she named the child I-chabod, saying, "The glory is departed from Israel, for the ark of God is taken." This language may lead us to hope that there was some good thing in her toward the Lord her God, as well as in her father Eli; and from both instances we may learn, never to infer from temporal judgments on any persons, their desertion of God, and final misery.

Yet we may see, also, what an awful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God. He had said, (chap. iii. 12.) "When I begin I will make an end;" and lo! in one day Eli, his two sons, and one of their wives, are summoned to another world; Israel defeated, the priests slain, the supreme magistrate dead, and the ark of God taken.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1-12. The downfall of Dagon, and the punishment of the Philistines.—It is a striking fact, that the captivity of the ark was a triumph—not to Dagon, but to the God of Israel; for Dagon could not stand even beside it, nor could his worshippers endure its presence. Before the ark was taken, when they heard of its presence in the camp of Israel, they said, "Wo unto us! Who shall deliver us out of the hands of these illustrious Gods?"—or, perhaps, we should rather read it in the singular—"this illustrious God!" When however they had taken the ark, which they ignorantly mistook for the God of Israel, though their alarm was over, their danger was but begun. The ark in the camp without the divine presence, was but a name; and while it afforded no protection to the Israelites, could yield no annoyance to the Philistines; but now the ark is amongst its enemies, the Lord sees it necessary to protect his honour. While in the hands of Eli's sons, it was powerless and useless—the glory was departed. But now the divine presence was returned, Who can stand before it? Dagon is fallen! is fallen! And his worshippers are terrified at the trophies of their own victory; and far more anxious to be rid of the ark than ever they were to gain it. They therefore summons together all the lords of the Philistines, to consult what should be done, as they were visited with a disease which became epidemic wherever the ark went, and of a nature so distressing, that "the cry of the city went up to heaven." How many and diversified are the means by which God can punish sin! When he clothes himself with ma-

Ver. 8. These mighty (Hebrew, illustrious) gods.—Probably they thought the ark and cherubim were gods, as it is certain the heathen did in after times. Ver. 12. With his clothes rent, and earth on his head.—These were customary tokens of mourning with most nations; for the Jews, see Jos. vii. 6, 7; 2 Sam. xiii. 19, &c. The Æneid, furnishes a remarkable instance, in the case of Latinus. Marcus's the Philistines, and a place of great strength and consequence. It was situated near the Mediterranean, between Ashkelon and Jamnia, 34 miles north of Gaza, according to Diodorus Siculus, and the Antonine and Jerusalem Itineraries. It is now called Shalood; and Dr. Richardson says they neither saw nor heard of any ruins there. "The ground," he observes, "around Ashdod is beautifully undulating, but not half stocked with cattle. The site of the town is on the summit of a grassy hill; and, if we are to believe historians, was as strongly as it was beautiful."—Boger.

Ver. 2. The house of Dagon.—Diodorus Siculus describes this idol as having "the head of a woman united to the body of a fish." The text, however, seems to represent the idol as masculine, and it was probably exhibited in both forms, like the mer-man and mer-maid; for it appears also by the text, that Dagon had hands and arms. The Philistines are supposed to have brought the ark into his house, or temple, as a trophy of victory, and as a thank-offering to their god; yet placing the ark by the side of Dagon, seems not like a mark of contempt, or disrespect. If they thought to unite his worship with that of Dagon, as many of the Jews attempted to serve the Lord and Baal, they soon discovered their mistake: for early on the morrow, behold, Dagon was fallen on his face before the ark; but this was probably considered as an accident, and as the image was not broken, they set him up again. But on the next morning he was fallen again, and with a vengeance, for

Ver. 4. The head of Dagon and both the palms of his hands were cut off upon the threshold.—Possibly the image had been cast in separate parts, and therefore broke off where they were joined. The falling upon the threshold was, however, a degrading and fatal circumstance; for the stump only was left; (margin, the fleshy part); this shows that we are pretty correct as to its form.

Ver. 5. Therefore neither the priests of Dagon, nor those who tread on the threshold.—Maurice, in his "Modern History of Hindostan," mentions, that in a certain instance, when the Turks destroyed one of the idols of the Hindoos, they ordered the fragments to be thrown on the threshold of their mosques, to be "trampled on by the devout and zealous Mussulmans."

nor any that come into Dagon's house, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod unto this day.

6 ¶ But the hand of the LORD was heavy upon them of Ashdod, and he destroyed them, and smote them with emerods, even Ashdod and the coasts thereof.

7 And when the men of Ashdod saw that it was so, they said, The ark of the God of Israel shall not abide with us: for his hand is sore upon us, and upon Dagon our god.

8 ¶ They sent therefore and gathered all the lords of the Philistines unto them, and said, What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And they answered, Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about unto Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about thither.

9 And it was so, that, after they had carried it about, the hand of the LORD was against the city with a very great destruction: and he smote the men of the city, both small and great, and they had emerods in their secret parts.

10 ¶ Therefore they sent the ark of God to Ekron. And it came to pass, as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, saying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Israel to us, to slay us and our people.

11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay us not, and our people: for there was a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.

12 And the men that died not were smitten with the emerods: and the cry of the city went up to heaven.

CHAPTER VI.

1 After seven months the Philistines take counsel how to send back the ark. 10 They bring it on a new cart with an offering unto Beth-shemesh. 19 The people are smitten for looking into the ark. 21 They send to them of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it.

AND the ark of the LORD was in the country of the Philistines seven months.

2 And the Philistines called for the priests jesty, he wields the thunderbolt, or showers down great stones from heaven; at other times, a disease, which is not usually epidemic, and not often dangerous, becomes a national scourge; and an army of locusts, or even mice, can create a famine. But what was the sin of these heathens? The first sin lay with the sons of Eli and the army of the Israelites, who by forcing the ark into the camp, attempted to make Jehovah a party to a war, on which he had not been consulted. The ark indeed they took, and trusting to it, betrayed it into the hands of the enemy. But no judgment followed them till they placed it in their idol temple, by the side of Dagon. Whether they did this to insult the God of Israel, or, as we are rather inclined to think, wished to gain his patronage, and to give him a share of the honours which they gave to Dagon, the insult was equally offensive. Jehovah is a jealous God, and can bear no competitor. "To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?" saith the Lord. (Isaiah xli. 5.) The gods of the heathen were not jealous. Those of the Romans were reckoned at thirty thousand, those of the Hindoos at 300 millions. His "name is one," and he is God alone. To unite any other name with his, is to insult him.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—21. The ark returned to Israel, many of whom are slain for their presumption.—Those who have no God to go to, are very apt to seek "to priests and to diviners,"

Ver. 6. He smote them with emerods.—It is generally agreed, that this is the disorder which we call the hamorrhoids, or piles, but to a desperate degree; and those who have experienced any thing of the complaint, need not be told, that it is very painful and distressing; besides which, it was considered as disgraceful. See Ps. lxxviii. 66.

Ver. 8. The lords of the Philistines.—For lords, the LXX. and Vulgate read satraps; and it appears by Josh. xiii. 3, that this country was divided into five of these satrapies; namely, those of Ashdod, Askalon, Ekron, Gath, and Gaza.—Let the ark be carried about.—That is, they each wish to shift it out of their own territories; they send it therefore to Gath, and from Gath to Ekron; and it is still attended with the same fatal consequences.

Ver. 9. They had emerods (in their secret parts).—Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "They had the piles inwardly;" which is probably the correct meaning. As this disorder is, however, seldom fatal with us, it might be attended with some and the diviners, * saying, What shall we do to the ark of the LORD? tell us wherewith we shall send it to his place.

3 And they said, If ye send away the ark of the God of Israel, send it not empty; but in any wise return him a trespass-offering: then ye shall be healed, and it shall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you.

4 Then said they, What shall be the trespass-offering which we shall return to him? They answered, Five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philistines: for one plague was on you all, and on your lords.

5 Wherefore ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your mice that mar the land; and ye shall give glory unto the God of Israel: peradventure he will lighten his hand from off you, and from off your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? when he had wrought wonderfully among them, did they not let the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it upon the cart; and put the jewels of gold which ye return him for a trespass-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof; and send it away, that it may go.

9 And see, if it goeth up by the way of his own coast to Beth-shemesh, then he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we shall know that it is not his hand that smote us; it was a chance that happened to us.

10 ¶ And the men did so; and took two milch kine, and tied them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home:

11 And they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the straight way to as was the case here, who often direct them to superstitious or unappointed means. There is reason, however, in their proposals not to send back the ark without a trespass-offering; and to form images of those objects which had constituted their "plague," was in perfect conformity with the custom of the heathen, and of some persons to the present day.

The impression made by this visitation on the Philistines, seems to have been not wholly in vain. They had learned the danger of hardening their hearts against the Lord, for "who ever hardened their hearts against him, and prospered?" and they are careful to return the ark upon a new cart, and by kine never before yoked; and yet these are directed by an unseen hand to go of their own accord to Beth-shemesh, a circumstance that satisfied these heathen that the visitation was from heaven. The golden emerods were one for each of the five satraps already mentioned; but the golden mice, if not more numerous, were furnished from all their towns and villages; which seems to indicate that if the plague of the mice were less distressing, it had been more extensive.

As we read of no farther judgments on the Philistines, it should seem that the Lord accepted their thank-offering; but the judgment which fell on the men of Beth-shemesh is more mysterious, and apparently more severe. Let us inquire, first, as to the nature of their crime, and, secondly, into the extent of their punishment. 1. We inquire into the nature of their inflammatory disease, arising perhaps from the climate, which made it so dreadfully calamitous.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 4. Five golden emerods.—The heathen used to consecrate to their gods such monuments of their deliverances as represented the evils from which they were rescued. In Popish countries it is common to see the figures of "heads, eyes, hands, feet," &c. exhibited as votive offerings in the churches, indicative of benefits received in the healing of the diseases of the offerers in those parts. As to the mice, it has been thought that the jerboa, or field-mouse, is here referred to, which did vast damage in eating the tops of the young corn on its first sprouting. [Bochart] has collected many curious accounts relative to the terrible devastations made by these mischievous animals. William, Archbishop of Tyre, records, that in the beginning of the twelfth century, a penitential council was held at Naplouse, where five and twenty canons were framed for the correction of the manners of the inhabitants of the way of Beth-shemesh, and went along the highway, lowing as they went, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philistines went after them unto the border of Beth-shemesh.

13 And they of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat-harvest in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joshua, a Beth-shemite, and stood there, where there was a great stone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the Lord.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the Lord, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great stone: and the men of Beth-shemesh offered burnt-offerings and sacrificed sacrifices the same day unto the Lord.

16 And when the five lords of the Philistines had seen it, they returned to Ekron the same day.

17 And these are the golden emerods which the Philistines returned for a trespass-offering unto the Lord; for Ashdod one, for Gaza one, for Askelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one;

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philistines belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the great stone of Abel, whereon they set down the ark of the Lord: which stone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joshua, the Beth-shemite.

19 ¶ And he smote the men of Beth-shemesh, because they had looked into the ark of the Lord, even he smote of the people fifty thousand and threescore and ten men: and the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten many of the people with a great slaughter.

20 And the men of Beth-shemesh said, Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? and to whom shall he go up from us?

21 ¶ And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, The Philistines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

CHAPTER VII.

1 They of Kirjath-jearim bring the ark into the house of Abinadab, and sanctify Eleazar his son to keep it. 2 After twenty years, the Israelites, by Samuel's means, solemnly repent at Mizpeh. 9 While Samuel prayeth and sacrificeth, the Lord doth smite the Philistines by thunder at Eben-ezer. 13 The Philistines are subdued. 15 Samuel peaceably and religiously judgeth Israel.

AND the men of Kirjath-jearim came, and fetched up the ark of the Lord, and brought it into the house of Abinadab in the hill, and sanctified Eleazar his son to keep the ark of the Lord.

2 And it came to pass, while the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years: and all the house of Israel lamented after the Lord.

3 ¶ And Samuel spake unto all the house of Israel, saying, If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines.

4 Then the children of Israel did put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the Lord only.

5 And Samuel said, gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the Lord.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

7 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it, they were afraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines.

9 ¶ And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and definitely couched in those memorable words of Moses: "Secret things belong to the Lord our God," and it is not for us curiously to inquire into them; "but those [things] which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever; that we may do [practise] all the words of this law." (Deut. xxix. 29.)

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1.—17. Israel's reformation and deliverance.

—In the close of the preceding chapter, we find the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh sending to those of Kirjath-jearim to fetch the ark, lest some other evil should befall them; this accordingly they did, and with them it abode a long time, even twenty years, which probably marks the time when this book was written; for, in fact, the ark continued long after, till it was fetched away by David. It is not certain that this Eleazar was of the family of Aaron, though most probably a Levite. Perhaps the priests were at this time so secularized, that they paid no attention to the ark; a Levite was therefore sanctified, or set apart, by some holy ceremony, to the office of its protection and preservation. On this we may remark, that while the idle curiosity of the Beth-shemites (a city of priests) was severely punished, the pious care of the men of this city was acceptable to the God of Israel.

This appearance of returning to a due sense of religion,

Sam's Targum reads, "He smote of the elders of the people seventy men, and of the congregation 50,000 men," which the Vulgate nearly follows. The Syriac and Arabic read, "The Lord smote among the people, (and there died of them) five thousand and seventy."—Dr. Clarke. See exposition.

C. Taylor (in his Calmet) doubts even if any died; and certainly smiting does not always imply death. The original term is, in this very book, applied to the sons of Eli striking a flesh-hook into a pot, ch. ii. 14, and in Ex. vii. 25, to smiting the river Nile. It is applied also frequently to smiting with blindness, Gen. xix. 11.—with pestilence, &c. Num. xiv. 12.—with emerods, 1 Sam. v. 6. Taylor also argues from the lamentations of the people, for 50,000 must include all the population of the city, and for some distance round, with that there was there to lament? To the Editor, the probability seems to be, that there was a great pestilence among the people, of whom seventy of the most daring transgressors died.—With a great slaughter.—Heb. "Smiting," or "plague," the original term is applied to the plagues of Egypt.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 6. Draw water.—[Grotius says, that the pouring out of water means the shedding of tears; and the Targum reads, And they poured out their hearts in penitence, as waters, before the Lord.] Others suppose crime. They were Israelites, and knew, or ought to have known, as this was one of the cities of the priests, that none but the sons of Aaron were suffered to meddle with the ark. (See Num. iv. 15; xvii. 13.) But these Beth-shemites presumed to pry into the holy coffer, with an unholy curiosity, and were therefore slain. But, 2. What was the extent of the punishment; or, in other words, what was the number slain? "The number, as it stands in our version, (says Scott,) is so very large to be found in one small city, and the expression in the original is so uncommon, that it is generally allowed some mistake is [here] made: Josephus mentions only seventy. The passage may be rendered, 'He smote . . . seventy men, even fifty out of a thousand men;' which supposes that 1,400 persons were present, and that a twentieth part was slain; and this appears to be the genuine meaning of the passage." Others render it, "he slew seventy men out of 50,000," which comes nearly to the same. It appears to us that the people were smitten, like the Philistines, with some sore disorder, of which seventy of the chief offenders died, and the whole surrounding population of 50,000 bitterly lamented, and were greatly terrified, saying, "Who is able to stand before the Holy Lord God?" in which they justify his character while they lament his judgment. Our proper improvement of this alarming inci-

the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem, who they apprehended had provoked God to bring upon them the calamities of earthquakes, war, and famine. This last he ascribes to locusts and devouring mice, which had for four years together so destroyed the fruits of the earth, as to cause almost a total failure of their crops.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. According to the number, &c.—Ver. 4. There are said to be five golden mice as well as five emerods, and the former answered to the five lords (or satrapies) of the Philistines; but because the villages suffered as well as the cities, the meaning of the text is supposed to be, that they all contributed to the expense of this atonement; which, perhaps, may be rendered clearer by giving to the Heb. prefix (mem) its usual meaning of FROM, as thus: "FROM the number of all the cities . . . &c. FROM the fenced cities unto the country villages, even unto the great stone of Abel," which was the boundary of their country.—The great stone of Abel.—Instead of Abel (weeping) some MSS. read (Aben) "Stone," which renders that supplement unnecessary, as our translators have noted in the margin.

Ver. 19. He smote of the people, &c.—The ancient versions of this text vary most remarkably; the LXX. is the only one which agrees with ours. Jona-offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and Samuel cried unto the LORD for Israel: and the LORD heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the LORD thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eben-ezer, saying, Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 ¶ So the Philistines were subdued, and they came no more into the coast of Israel: and the hand of the LORD was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel were restored to Israel, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coasts thereof did Israel deliver out of the hands of the Philistines. And there was peace between Israel and the Amorites.

15 ¶ And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life.

16 And he went from year to year in circuit to Beth-el, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Israel in all those places.

17 And his return was to Ramah; for there was his house; and there he judged Israel; and there he built an altar unto the LORD.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By occasion of the ill government of Samuel's sons, the Israelites ask a king. 6 Samuel praying in grief is comforted by God. 10 He telleth the manner of a king. 19 God willetli Samuel to yield unto the importunity of the people.

AND it came to pass, when Samuel was old, that he made his sons judges over Israel.

2 Now the name of his first-born was Joel; and the name of his second, Abiah: they were judges in Beer-sheba.

probably encouraged Samuel to call all the tribes together to Mizpeh, and to exhort them to repentance: to put way their idols, and to "prepare their hearts" to serve the Lord. And, perhaps, what we are here told of their idols, Baal and Ash-taroath (gods and goddesses) may account for the supineness and neglect of the priestly order, who had degenerated into idol priests, to please the corrupted laity, by whom they were liberally bribed.

Samuel now, for the first time, openly and solemnly assumes his prophetic office; and having collected all Israel (that is, a great company) to Mizpeh, and persuaded them to give up their idols, they are directed to pour out water before the Lord, to pray and fast, and to confess their sins. The former of these actions may be considered as a libation to Jehovah: it was, however, a most significant and instructive ceremony; and might be designed as a figurative action, admonishing them to "pour out their hearts before him," as well as that all their religious services should be pure and unadulterated with idolatry. It might have a farther reference also to the influences of the Holy Spirit, as necessary both to all true reformation and spiritual devotion. (See John vii. 38.)

Whether the Philistines judged the reformation of the Israelites fatal to their own usurpation, by engaging the Lord on their behalf; or whether they thought it the best time to attack them, when they were engaged in the duties of religious worship—so it was; they came up against them while thus engaged: but they found that the Lord never fails to protect those who that it was done emblematically, to represent the contrition of their hearts, and their desire to wash away their past offences. But some learned men conceive that it was poured out as a libation, in token of joy, after they had fasted and confessed their sin, as they were wont to do in the feast of tabernacles. (See note on Nu. xxix. 35.) Hence L'Emmenez renders the succeeding clause, "after they had fasted," &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. In circuit.—Hebrew, "Circuited"—went from town to town, to hear, and to judge, and to advise.—[When he was at Bethel, the tribe of Ephraim, and all the northern parts of the country could attend him; when at Gilgal, the tribe of Benjamin, and those beyond Jordan, could have easy access to him; and when at Mizpeh, he was within the reach of Judah, Simeon, and Gad: but at Ramah was the place of his ordinary abode; and there he held his court, for there he judged Israel: and as it is probable Shiloh was de-

3 And his sons walked not in his ways, but turned aside after <sup>b</sup> lucre, and took <sup>c</sup> bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king <sup>d</sup> to judge us like all the nations.

6 ¶ But the thing <sup>e</sup> displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed unto the LORD.

7 And the LORD said unto Samuel, Harken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they <sup>f</sup> have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

8 According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken me, and served other gods, so do they also unto thee.

9 Now therefore <sup>g</sup> hearken unto their voice: <sup>h</sup> howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and show <sup>i</sup> them the manner of the king that shall reign over them.

10 ¶ And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people that asked of him a king.

11 And he said, This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen; and some shall run before his chariots.

12 And he will appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties; and will set them to ear his ground, and to reap his harvest, and to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants.

devote themselves conscientiously to his service. While, therefore, they were worshipping, unarmed, or at least unprepared for battle, the Lord "thundered with a great thunder," probably attended, as in other instances, with tremendous hailstones, (see Josh. x. 11.) whereby the Philistines were discomfited and put into much confusion; on which the Israelites, as soon as their services were over, pursued them with a great destruction, so that we hear no more of their invasions during the government of Samuel.

Samuel was no less careful to record this deliverance, than he had been earnest to implore it; and therefore set up a monumental stone, which he called Eben-ezer, (that is, the stone of help,) saying, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us!" We have all had numerous helps and deliverances, in our spiritual warfare through life; let us not neglect to follow this example, and sing or say,

"Here I raise my Ebenezer,
Hither by thine help I'm come;
And I hope, by thy good pleasure, Safely to arrive at home." R. Robinson.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—22. Samuel, growing old, makes his sons judges; and they behaving ill, the people solicit for a king.—Samuel, we have seen, was an itinerating judge, travelling from place to place, to administer judgment and justice among the tribes; but as he grew in years he became unequal to this labour; he therefore built himself a house in Ramah, (which was northwest of Jebus, or Jerusalem) where also he stroyed, it is said (ver. 12.) that there, i. e. at Ramah, he built an altar to the Lord.]—Bagster.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 2. Beer-sheba.—This was the southern extremity of Canaan; whereas the prophet himself resided at Ramah, far more northerly.

Ver. 6. But the thing displeased.—See Margin. [No doubt Samuel felt with the keenest sensibility their ingratitude to him; but probably the greatest like the other nations amounted to a formal renunciation of the Divine government, under which they had hitherto lived.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. To ear his ground.—That is, to plough it. See note on Gen. xlv. 6.
Ver. 13. Confectioners and cooks.—[What Samuel says of the despotic power assumed by Eastern monarchs, agrees with what Knox says of the king of Ceylon: "He hath many women belonging to his kitchen, choosing to have his meat dressed by them. Several times he hath sent into the countries a command to gather handsome young women of the Chingulayes to recruit his kitchen, with no exception, whether married or unmarried; and those that are chosen for that service never return back again."]—Bagster.

15 And he will take the tenth of your seed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his servants.

16 And he will take your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, and put them to his work.

17 He will take the tenth of your sheep: and ye shall be his servants.

18 And ye shall cry out in that day because of your king which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day.

19 ¶ Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us;

20 That we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearsed them in the ears of the Lord.

22 And the Lord said to Samuel, Harken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said unto the men of Israel, Go ye every man unto his city.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Saul despairing to find his father's asses, 6 by the counsel of his servant, 11 and distribution of young maidens, 16 according to God's revelation, 18 cometh to Samuel. 19 Samuel entertaineth Saul at the feast. 25 Samuel, after secret communication, bringeth Saul on his way.

NOW there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zeror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Aphiah, a Benjamite, a mighty man of power.

2 And he had a son, whose name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.

3 And the asses of Kish, Saul's father, were oult an altar to the Lord; and made his sons a sort of deputy judges at Beer-sheba, in the south.

But neither grace nor moral virtues are hereditary. The sons of the meek and amiable Eli were licentious and profane; and those of the just and upright Samuel covetous in the extreme—they took bribes and perverted judgment. This becoming notorious, the elders of the different tribes came to Samuel to complain. The venerable judge must undoubtedly be grieved, though he might not believe all that was reported, or even all that was really true; for with the instructions which he had given them, and the example he had set before them, he had surely a right to expect from them a very different conduct.

The object of their application is, not for him to remove his sons, or even to restrain them; but they think this a favourable opportunity to effect a change of government. This, of course, displeased Samuel, as it went to set aside the theocracy, and supersede the divine authority. He therefore applied for divine direction, and was ordered to comply with their request; but at the same time to warn them of the consequences. As Moses had described the character and duties of a patriot king, (Deut. xvii. 14–20.) they, perhaps, flattered themselves that they might obtain such a one; and under him not only enjoy a better government, but also a more elevated distinction among the nations. In answer to this, Samuel is directed to warn them of the abuses to which monarchy is liable, and of which, in fact, they had abundant proof in their subsequent history; and to remind them that if they rejected the Lord from being their king, they could have no pretence for applying to him for relief from such abuses, to which all absolute governments are more or less liable.

Of this discourse of Samuel, the celebrated Puffendorf gives the following lucid explanation:—"Hitherto the people of Israel had lived under governors raised up of God, who had CHAP. IX. Ver. 3. Go, seek the asses.—Baron Du Tott represents such searches for stray animals as very common in the East, and often lasting for several days. Each owner, also, has a particular mark imprinted on his animals.

Ver. 5. Land of Zuph (or Suph).—See note on Deut. i. 1.

Ver. 7. There is not a present.—We are not to suppose from this that the prophets took money to predict future events: Saul only refers to an invariable custom, that no man approached a superior without some present or another, however small in value. Dr. Pococke tells us of a present of fifty rashes! Other authors mention a flower, an orange, or similar trifles; and Bruce says, that one who wished to solicit a favour from him, presented him with about a score of dates! "I mention this trifling circumstance," says B. "to show how essential to humane and civil intercourse presents are considered to be in the East; whether it be dates, or whether it be diamonds, they are so much a part of their manners, that, without them, an inferior will never be at peace in his own mind, or think that he has hold of his superior for protection. But superiors give no presents to their inferiors." Presents then lost. And Kish said to Saul his son, Take now one of the servants with thee, and arise, go seek the asses.

4 And he passed through mount Ephraim, and passed through the land of Shalisha, but they found them not: then they passed through the land of Shalim, and there they were not; and he passed through the land of the Benjamites, but they found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul said to his servant that was with him, Come, and let us return; lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us.

6 And he said unto him, Behold now, there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man; all that he saith cometh surely to pass: now let us go thither; peradventure he can show us our way that we should go.

7 Then said Saul to his servant, But, behold, if we go, what shall we bring the man? for the bread is spent in our vessels, and there is not a present to bring to the man of God: what have we?

8 And the servant answered Saul again, and said, Behold, I have here at hand the fourth part of a shekel of silver: that will I give to the man of God, to tell us our way.

9 (Beforetime in Israel, when a man went to inquire of God, thus he spake, Come, and let us go to the seer: for he that is now called a Prophet was beforetime called a Seer.)

10 Then said Saul to his servant, Well said; come, let us go. So they went unto the city where the man of God was.

11 ¶ And as they went up the hill to the city, they found young maidens going out exacted no tribute of them nor put them to any charge; but, little content with this form of government, they desire to have a king like other nations, who should live in magnificence and pomp, keep armies, and be able to resist any invasion. Samuel informs them what it was they desired; that, when they understood it, they might consider whether they would persist in their choice. If they would have a king splendidly attended, he tells them, that he would take their sons for his chariots, &c.: if they would have him keep up constant forces, then he would appoint them colonels and captains; and employ those in his wars who are accustomed to follow their family business; and since, after the manner of other kings, he must keep a stately court, they must be content that their daughters should serve in several offices, which the king would think below the dignity of his wives and daughters, (ver. 13.) Many ministers also, in several departments, both of war and peace, must have salaries to support them, which must be paid out of their fields and vineyards, (ver. 14.) In one word, that to sustain his dignity, their king would exact the tenth of all they possessed, and be maintained in a royal manner out of their estates.

The people are, however, resolute in their determination to have a king, and give for reason, not only that he might judge them, but become their military leader, and fight their battles for them, which shows that they aspired after national distinction and military glory: an ambition which has been the plague of all nations, and will be, till the day shall come when men shall "learn war no more."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1–27. Saul being sent to seek his father's asses, visits Samuel, who intimates to him that he is to be king.

—In the history of this chapter we meet with little that requires explanation; but there are two or three particulars which may afford practical hints, which we are always glad to introduce when circumstances will admit. 1. We remark are tokens of honour; not intended as offers of payment, or enrichment.]—Baxter.

Ver. 8. The fourth part of a shekel.—If the shekel was equal to 66 cents of our money, as we have reckoned, (Exod. xxx. 15. note) this is equal to about 16 1/2 cts.; which shows that it was not the value of the thing that was looked to, but the custom. It does not appear, however, that even this was presented.

Ver. 9. Go to the seer.—Prophet was the word in the time of Moses; but in the barbarous times of the judges, the word Seer had been introduced; now that of Prophet was recovered.—Dr. Wall.—[The word rooth literally signifies one who sees; particularly preternatural sights. A seer and a prophet were the same in most cases; only with this difference, the seer was always a prophet, but the prophet was not always a seer. A seer seems to imply one who frequently met with and saw some symbolical representation of God. All prophets, true or false, profess to see God; (see Nu. xxiv. 4, 16. Je. xiv. 4.) and diviners, in their enthusiastic flights, boasted that they had those things exhibited to their sight which should come to pass. Thus the Sybil in to draw water, and said unto them, Is the seer here?

12 And they answered them, and said, He is; behold, he is before you: make haste now, for he came to-day to the city; for there is a sacrifice of the people to-day in the high place:

13 As soon as ye be come into the city, ye shall straightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, because he doth bless the sacrifice; and afterward they eat that be bidden. Now therefore get you up; for about this time ye shall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out against them, for to go up to the high place.

15 ¶ Now the LORD had told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying, 16 To-morrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have looked upon my people, because their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the LORD said unto him, Behold the man whom I spake to thee of! this same shall reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and said, Tell me, I pray thee, where the seer's house is.

19 And Samuel answered Saul, and said, I am the seer: go up before me unto the high place; for ye shall eat with me to-day, and to-morrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thy heart.

20 And as for thine asses that were lost three days ago, set not thy mind on them; for they are found. And on whom is all the desire of Israel? Is it not on thee, and on all thy father's house?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his servant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them sit in the chiefest place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty persons.

23 And Samuel said unto the cook, Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I said unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up the shoulder, and that which was upon it, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said, Behold that which is left! set it before thee, and eat: for unto this time hath it been kept for thee since I said, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the house.

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, Bid the servant pass on before us; (and he passed on,) but stand thou still a while, that I may show thee the word of God.

CHAPTER X.

1 Samuel anointed Saul. 2 He confirmeth him by prediction of three signs. 3 Saul's heart is changed, and he prophesieth. 14 He concealeth the matter of the kingdom from his uncle. 17 Saul is chosen at Mizpeh by lot. 26 The different affections of his subjects.

THEN Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not because the LORD hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?

2 When thou art departed from me to-day, then thou shalt find two men by Rachel's sepulchre in the border of Benjamin at Zel-the ground of worldly promotion. Saul was the son of "a mighty man" in Israel, and was himself a choice young man and a goodly," which plainly refers, neither to his mental or moral character, but to his stature, which must have been (by ver. 2) nearly seven feet high, and his whole appearance portly and majestic: a circumstance, that, in the first instance, no doubt strongly recommended him to the admiration of the people; but nothing is said either of his religion or good sense. One trait in his character, however, in this early period deserves to be mentioned, as a model for young persons; namely, his tenderness towards the parental feelings of his father, "Let us return," said he, "lest my father leave off caring for the asses, and take thought for us."

2. We have in Samuel the character of a true prophet: he is "a man of God," that is, of true piety; and (which should always blend with it) a man of strict probity—"an honourable man": for it sinks miserably the character of a professed man of God, when he can stoop to evasion and prevarication, even though he should not descend to downright falsehood. It is added, "All that he saith surely cometh to pass," which corresponds exactly with the account of Samuel in a preceding chapter (iii. 20.), "that all Israel, from Dan to Beer-sheba, knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord." And though it may seem a degradation for such a man to be consulted about lost animals, yet, in fact, it was in perfect consistency with his duty—to "instruct the ignorant and them that are out of the way." Ministers should never think any thing degrading that is not foreign to their duty. Henry has here a pithy remark, (as most of his remarks are,) that "prophets must first be seers: they who undertake to speak to others of the things of God, must have an insight into those things themselves."

Virgil professes to be a seer:—"Wars, horrid wars, and Tyber foaming with blood, I otio."—Bassler.

Ver. 19. I will tell thee all that is in thy heart.—By this it should seem, that even at this early period there were some rainings of ambition in Saul's heart, though he could scarcely aspire to the honour that was intended him.

Ver. 24. The shoulder, and that which was on it.—Probably the whole fore quarter.—That which is left.—Margin, "reserved;" i. e. as follows: it had been "kept for him" several days, perhaps to make it the more tender. Dr. Clarke thinks the shoulder was emblematical, and intended to teach him.

3. We must remark the leadings of Providence in the narrative before us. Nothing is so great as to be without the range of Providence; nothing so minute as to be overlooked in his designs. Bishop Hall remarks, "How far God fetches his purposes about! The asses of Kish (Saul's father) are strayed away: What is that to the news of a kingdom? God lays these small accidents for the ground of greater designs. The asses must be lost; none but Saul must go with his father's servant to seek them: Samuel shall meet them in the search; and Saul shall be premonished of his ensuing royalty. Little can we, by the beginning of any action or event, guess at God's intention in the conclusion."

4. God sometimes disappoints us by exceeding our expectations, as well as at others by falling short of them. Saul went to seek his father's asses, but found a kingdom and a crown. Well for him would it have been, had he shown the same solicitude in fulfilling his duties as a king of Israel, as he did in seeking his father's asses; but, alas! this station required a higher class of qualifications than he appears to have possessed. Strength and stature might assist him in the former; but the latter required wisdom and prudence, and the fear of the Lord, so as to yield to him an obedience no less implicit than what he required of his own subjects.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—27. Saul anointed and instructed, joins a company of the prophets, and is chosen by lot king of Israel.—Samuel is supposed to have been the founder of what are called Schools of the Prophets, wherein young persons were trained in the knowledge of the Mosaic law, and the practice of the Hebrew poetry and music, the principal arts in which they appear to have excelled; and it may be proper to remark, that in the earliest times these professions were always united. The praises of God were always sung in verse, that he was to bear the cares of government, as it were, "upon his shoulder." Ver. 25. Upon the top of the house.—The Eastern houses were always flat-roofed, and often used for walking and conversation, and sometimes for sleeping, as appears to have been the case here with Samuel; and therefore, at the spring or dawn of day, he called up Saul, to dismiss him.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. And kissed him.—This is what the Jews called the "kiss of homage," as one of the ceremonies of inauguration. See Psal. ii. 12. Captain.—The early Jewish kings were all military chieftains as were those also of the Greeks.

zah : and they will say unto thee, The asses which thou wentest to seek are found : and, lo, thy father hath left the <sup>s</sup> care of the asses, and sorroweth for you, saying, What shall I do for my son ?

3 Then shalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou shalt come to the plain of Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up to God to <sup>b</sup> Beth-el, one carrying three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine :

4 And they will <sup>i</sup> salute thee, and give thee two <sup>loaves</sup> of bread ; which thou shalt receive of their hands.

5 After that thou shalt come to the hill <sup>i</sup> of God, where <sup>is</sup> the garrison <sup>s</sup> of the Philistines : and it shall come to pass, when thou art come thither to the city, that thou shalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high <sup>i</sup> place with a <sup>m</sup> psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp, before them ; and they shall <sup>a</sup> prophesy :

6 And the Spirit <sup>s</sup> of the LORD will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man.

7 And <sup>p</sup> let it be, when these signs are come unto thee, <sup>q</sup> that thou do as occasion serve thee ; for God <sup>is</sup> with thee.

8 And thou shalt go down before me to Gilgal ; and, behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace-offerings : seven <sup>s</sup> days shalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and show thee what thou shalt do.

9 ¶ And it was so, that when he had turned his <sup>i</sup> back to go from Samuel, God <sup>u</sup> gave him another heart : and all those signs came to pass that day.

10 And when they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him ; and the Spirit of God came <sup>u</sup> upon him, and he prophesied among them.

sied among the prophets, then the people said <sup>w</sup> one to another, What <sup>is</sup> this <sup>that</sup> is come unto the son of Kish ? <sup>Is</sup> <sup>s</sup> Saul also among the prophets ?

12 And one <sup>v</sup> of the same place answered and said, But who <sup>is</sup> their father ? Therefore it became a proverb, <sup>Is</sup> Saul also among the prophets ?

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

14 ¶ And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye ? And he said, To seek the asses : and when we saw that <sup>they were</sup> no where, we came to Samuel.

15 And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you.

16 And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together unto the LORD <sup>s</sup> at Mizpeh ;

18 And said unto the children of Israel, Thus <sup>s</sup> saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you :

19 And <sup>b</sup> ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved <sup>c</sup> you out of all your adversities and your tribulations ; and ye have said unto him, <sup>Nay</sup>, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD <sup>d</sup> by your tribes, and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken : and when they sought him, he could not be found.

22 Therefore they inquired of the LORD farther, if the man should yet come thither.

in a kind of chant, or recitative, accompanied with musical instruments ; with flourishes or symphonies, probably between the stanzas. This formed, no doubt, the employment of the young prophets here assembled, with whom Saul united ; an employment so different from what he had been accustomed to, that it excited great surprise, and led them with astonishment to ask, "What is become to the son of Kish ? Is Saul also among the prophets ?"

Soon after this event, Samuel called the people again to the Lord at Mizpeh, and after gently reproaching them with ingratitude for rejecting the Lord from being their King, and demanding to have a mortal sovereign, he tells them that the Lord had consented to their request, and Saul is drawn by lot to be their king.

Saul now seems to have shrunk from his engagement. Perhaps when he came to hear that the Lord was offended by their requiring to have a king, and especially when he came to reflect on the weight of care and responsibility that would lie upon him, he trembled ; and ambitious as he might be of distinction, he wished, at least for the present, to avoid it, and therefore hid himself among the stuff ; that is, among the wagons and baggage belonging to the multitude now assembled. He was too tall, however, to remain undiscovered : and when brought forward among the people, they directly hailed him, by shouting, "God save the king !" or, as the Hebrew phrase is, "Let the king live !" which phrase is preserved in all the ancient versions.

Before the prophet dismissed the assembly, he thought it necessary to explain the nature of the kingdom now established, and the duties, we may suppose, both of king and people ; and having written them in a book, laid up that book in the ark before the Lord.

When God calls men to any particular work, he gives the necessary abilities to perform it ; thus it was in the building of the tabernacle and temple ; and thus it was in the present instance. The Spirit of prophecy came upon Saul, and he

Ver. 5. A company of prophets.—These were doubtless the sons of the prophets referred to in the exposition, who were now occupied in singing the praises of God, accompanied by instruments of music, as was frequently, if not always the case : as Bishop Lenthic has shown. It appears also, that these instruments were sometimes played by minstrels, employed to accompany the holy prophets. See 2 Kings iii. 15.

Ver. 9. All those signs.—[The following history of Saul is given by the Africans, a people generally supposed to be of Jewish origin : "In a war which waged between the children of Israel, and the Amalekites, the latter being victorious, plundered the Jews, and obtained possession of the Ark of the Covenant. Considering this [as] the God of the Jews, they threw it into the fire, which did not affect it. They afterwards attempted to cleave it with axes, but without success : every individual who treated it with indignity, was punished for his temerity. They then placed it in their temple ; but all their idols bowed to it. At length they fastened it upon a cow, which they turned loose in the wilderness. When the prophet Samuel arose, the Children of Israel said to him, 'We have been totally subdued by the Amalekites, and have no king. Raise to us a king, that we may be enabled to contend for the glory of God.' Samuel said, 'In case you are led out to battle, are you determined to fight?' They answered, 'What has befallen us, that we should not fight against infidels?' That nation has banished us from our country and children." At this time the angel Gabriel descended, and delivering a wand, said, 'It is the command of God, that the person whose stature shall correspond with this wand, shall be king of Israel.' Melec Talut was at that time a man of inferior constitution, and performed the humble employment of feeding the gouts and cows of others. One day, a cow under his charge was accidentally lost. Being dispatched in his search, he was greatly distressed, and applied to Samuel, saying, 'I have lost a cow, and I do not possess the means of satisfying the owner. Pray for me, that I may be extricated from this difficulty.' Samuel perceiving that he was a man of lofty stature, asked his name. He answered Talut. Samuel then said, 'Measure Talut with the wand which the angel Gabriel brought.' His stature was equal to it. Samuel then said, 'God has raised Talut to be your king.' The Children of Israel answered, 'We are greater than our king! We are men of dignity, and he is of inferior condition. How shall he be our king?' Samuel informed them, they should know that God had constituted Talut king, by his restoring the Ark of the Covenant. He accordingly restored it, and they acknowledged him their sovereign." Astoria Researches.—Bogster.

Ver. 12. Who is their father?—If we adhere to the present text, and read "their father," in the plural, it must refer to the sons of the prophets, and means, "What school is this? Who is at the head of it?" which is perfectly agreeable to the Hebrew idiom. The sons of Asaph and Heman, &c. were doubtless the singing boys under their care, 1 Chron. xvi. 1. Some editions of the LXX. read singular "Who is his father? Is it not Kish?" But this is supported by no Hebrew MSS.

Ver. 14. His uncle.—The Hebrew Dod is a term of affection, and may be rendered friend, but is often translated "uncle."

Ver. 21. Saul was taken.—That is, by lot, as is generally understood : and this method is supposed to have been adopted to prevent contention among the tribes. But did not the Lord choose him? Certainly. See Prov. xvi. 33.

And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him whom the LORD hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, God save the king.

25 Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his house.

26 ¶ And Saul also went home to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched.

27 But the children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? And they despised him, and brought him no presents. But he held his peace.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Nahash offereth them of Jabesh-gilead a reproachful condition. 4 They send messengers, and are delivered by Saul. 12 Saul thereby is confirmed, and his kingdom renewed.

THEN Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

4 ¶ Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people lifted up their voices, and wept.

5 And, behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field; and Saul said, What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

prophesied; the Lord also gave him "another heart," and turned him into another man." His thoughts, which hitherto had been confined to agricultural labours, were now turned to the subjects of war and government; and instead of seeking his father's asses, he became captain-in-chief of all Israel. He did not, however, immediately assume the sceptre and throne: but went back to Gibeah, and waited till circumstances called forth his new energies, as we shall see in the next chapter. In the mean time there went with him "a band," (or company,) of men, "whose hearts God had touched" in the same extraordinary way, and who probably became his companions and his counsellors. So we read in the book of Ezra, (chap. i. 2-5,) that the Lord "stirred up the spirit of Cyrus," and of the fathers of Israel, and the priests and Levites, "whose spirit God had raised to go up, and to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem." For it is the pious manner of the sacred writers to attribute to the agency of God "every good gift, and every perfect gift," natural as well as spiritual, as we shall have repeated occasion to observe.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1-15. The king of Ammon threatening the men of Jabesh, they send to Saul for aid; who collects a great army, and defeats them.—The cruel threatening here recorded might seem incredible, were not similar instances on record, and even still practised in barbarous countries, in the punishment of rebels, and as such Nahash affected to treat Israel. Honway saw several instances of it; and such cruel

Ver. 25. The manner of the kingdom.—That is, the nature of the constitution.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. Nahash the Ammonite.—That is, the king of the Ammonites. We read of a king of this name in the time of David, 2 Sam. x. 2.

Ver. 2. Thrust out right eyes.—This cruel condition would serve at once as a notice of their slavery; and a means of incapacitating them from being effective warriors. Theodoret observes, "He who opposes his shield to the enemy with his right hand, thereby hides his left eye, and looks at his enemy with his right eye; he, therefore, who plucks out that right eye, makes men use-

6 And the Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out with one consent.

8 And when he numbered them in Bezek, the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have help. And the messengers came and showed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, To-morrow we will come unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

11 And it was so on the morrow, that Saul put the people in three companies; and they came into the midst of the host in the morning watch, and slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, so that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? being the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to-day the LORD hath wrought salvation in Israel.

14 ¶ Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.

15 And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before the LORD in Gilgal; and there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly.

mutilations were sometimes recorded in the name of the places where they occurred. The Asiatic Researches mention a town called Naskatapur, which means "the town of cut noses," from the inhabitants having been deprived of all their noses; and the late Editor of Calmet suggests, that by such means Nahash meant to lay a reproach on all Israel, by calling Jabesh "the town of men who had lost their right eyes." A similar threat occurs in the history of the Indian war. The Gorchians threatened the inhabitants of Lelith Pattan with the loss of their right hands, unless they surrendered within five days. (Fragments, No. 121. See also Orient. Lit. No. 433.)

The cruelty of this tyrant was, however, well rewarded by a total defeat; and Saul, by the same means, appeared firmly established in his kingdom.

The method taken by Saul to collect this army, reminds us of the conduct of the Levite toward his murdered concubine, (see note on Judges xix. 29.) and refers to a custom of very high antiquity, and but lately extinct. Sir Walter Scott (Lady of the Lake, Canto 3.) refers to a practice very similar among the Highlanders and Scandinavians. The Highlanders slew a goat, and stained with its blood "the fiery cross" that was sent to summon their ancient warriors; and disobedience to the summons was punished with death, or the burning of their houses. (See Orient. Cust. No. 794, and Orient. Lit. No. 437.)

Saul's conduct hitherto seems totally unexceptionable. After being chosen king, he retired to his husbandry till circum-less in war." Josephus assigns the same reason. Such barbarities were very common, and still prevail, in some places in the East.—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Saul came after the herd.—This shows that he had not yet left his father's farm.

Ver. 7. Yoke of oxen.—[The sending the pieces of the oxen was an act similar to that of the Levite, Ju. xix. 29. where see the note.]—Bagster. See exposition.

Ver. 15. They made Saul king.—This was a recognition of his authority and some think that he was now anointed a second time.

CHAPTER XII.

Samuel testifieth his integrity. 6 He reproveth the people of ingratitude. 16 He testifieth them with thunder in harvest time. 20 He comforteth them in God's mercy.

AND Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, I have hearkened unto your voice in all that ye said <sup>a</sup> unto me, and have made <sup>b</sup> a king over you.

2 And now, behold, the king waiteth before you: and I am old and grayheaded; and, behold, my sons are with you: and I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

3 Behold, here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before his anointed: whose <sup>c</sup> ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any <sup>d</sup> bribe <sup>e</sup> to blind <sup>f</sup> mine eyes therewith? and I will restore <sup>g</sup> it you.

4 And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand.

5 And he said unto them, The LORD is witness against you, and his anointed is witness this day, that ye <sup>h</sup> have not found aught in my hand. And they answered, He is witness.

6 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, It is the LORD that <sup>i</sup> advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore stand still, that I may reason with you before the LORD of all the <sup>k</sup> righteous acts of the LORD, which he did <sup>l</sup> to you and to your fathers.

8 When Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers cried unto the LORD, then the LORD sent <sup>m</sup> Moses and Aaron, which brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they forgot the LORD their God, he sold them into the hand of <sup>n</sup> Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand of the Philistines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them.

10 And <sup>o</sup> they cried unto the LORD, and said, We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and <sup>p</sup> have served Baalim and Ashtaroth: but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

stances called him into the field; when he had gained the victory, he gave the glory to the Lord; and when urged to revenge against some men of Belial, which were his enemies, he nobly refused it, saying, "There shall not be a man put to death this day; for to-day the Lord hath wrought salvation for Israel."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—25. Samuel, in years, and anticipating his end to be approaching, exhorts and warns the Israelites.—It was probably at the meeting of Gilgal, mentioned in the close of the preceding chapter, that the venerable prophet delivered the following address, in which he speaks of himself as "old and grayheaded," a phrase that cannot imply less than about threescore years; an age which, if chronology be correct, he would attain a few years after Saul's election to the throne. His address contains, 1. An appeal as to his own integrity. "Whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed?" But few governors, or judges, we fear, after so long an administration, could with safety make an appeal like this; and, perhaps, to still fewer would the popular reply be, "Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us." "There is (says Henry)

CHAP. XII. Ver. 2. Behold, my sons are with you.—Many suppose this to imply, that he had stripped his sons of all public authority, and reduced them to the rank of private individuals.

Ver. 11. Bedan, whose name occurs no where else as a judge of Israel. Ben Patrick and others suppose to be a contraction of Ben Dan, the son of Dan; by which they suppose Samson is meant, as the Targum reads, "the LXX," Syriac, and Arabic, however, instead of Bedan, read Barak; and the two latter versions, instead of Samuel, have Samson. These readings are adopted by Houbigant, and appear to be genuine; for it is not probable that Samuel would enumerate himself.—Bagster.

12 And when ye saw that <sup>v</sup> Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, ye said unto me, Nay; but a king shall reign over us: when the LORD your God was your king.

13 Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have desired! and, behold, the <sup>w</sup> LORD hath set a king over you.

14 If <sup>x</sup> ye will fear the LORD, and serve him and obey his voice, and not rebel against the <sup>y</sup> commandment of the LORD, then shall both ye and also the king that reigneth over you <sup>z</sup> continue following the LORD your God:

15 But if ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then <sup>a</sup> shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it <sup>b</sup> was against your fathers.

16 Now therefore stand and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it not wheat harvest to-day? I will <sup>c</sup> call unto the LORD, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

18 ¶ So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day: and <sup>d</sup> all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray <sup>e</sup> for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

20 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness: yet <sup>f</sup> turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after vain things, which <sup>g</sup> cannot profit nor deliver; for they are <sup>h</sup> vain.

22 For the LORD will not forsake <sup>i</sup> his people for <sup>j</sup> his great name's sake: because it hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover as for me, God forbid that I should sin against the LORD <sup>k</sup> in ceasing to pray <sup>l</sup> for you: but I will teach you the good and the right way:

24 Only fear <sup>m</sup> the LORD, and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how <sup>n</sup> great things he hath done for you.

a just debt which every man owes to his own good name, especially men in public stations, which is to guard against unjust aspersions and suspicions, that we may finish our course with honour as well as joy." Demetrius had "a good report of all men, and of the truth itself." (3 John 12.) 2. He reminds them of the Lord's dealings with them as a nation, and of their ingratitude and rebellion against him, particularly in desiring to have another king over them, when the Lord himself had condescended to be their king. And to demonstrate that he spoke by divine authority, and that the Lord himself was displeased with them on that account, he calls down a storm of rain and thunder in the time of wheat-harvest, which was very unusual at that season in their climate, though common enough with us. 3. Upon this they appear much alarmed, being seriously apprehensive of the consequences. Samuel, on his part, expresses the utmost concern for them, and his readiness to intercede on their behalf; but warns them against relapsing again into idolatry and rebellion. For the past, however, he assures them of the divine forgiveness, cautioning them at the same time not to attribute any merit, either to hash, it is probable, had been long preparing and threatening to attack them, and when they saw him coming, then they became more importunate; and having heard a vague report, perhaps, that Saul had been appointed, they sent express to him at Gibeon, chap. xi. 4.

Ver. 17. Is it not wheat-harvest?—[Among ourselves, thunder and rain are far from being uncommon during harvest. But, according to Jerome, who spent several years in Palestine, during this harvest, which he says commenced about the end of June, or beginning of July, he never saw rain in Judea. This account is abundantly confirmed by modern travellers.]—Bagster.

SSAUL <sup>a</sup>reigned one year; and when he had reigned two years over Israel,

2 Saul chose him three thousand men of Israel; whereof two thousand were with Saul in Michmash and in mount Beth-el, and a thousand were with Jonathan in Gibeah <sup>b</sup> of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent every man to his tent.

3 ¶ And Jonathan smote the garrison <sup>c</sup> of the Philistines that was in <sup>d</sup> Geba, and the Philistines heard of it. And Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land, saying, Let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Israel heard say that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also <sup>e</sup> was had in abomination with the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal.

5 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the sea shore in multitude: and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from <sup>f</sup> Beth-aven.

6 ¶ When the men of Israel saw that they were in a <sup>g</sup> strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves <sup>h</sup> in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead. As for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people <sup>i</sup> followed him trembling.

8 ¶ And he tarried seven days, according to the set time <sup>j</sup> that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him.

9 And Saul said, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And he offered the burnt-offering.

10 And it came to pass, that as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went out to meet him, that he might <sup>a</sup> salute him.

11 ¶ And Samuel said, What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at Michmash;

12 Therefore said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not <sup>b</sup> made supplication unto the LORD: I forced myself therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, <sup>c</sup> Thou hast done foolishly: thou <sup>d</sup> hast not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.

14 But now thy kingdom shall not continue: the LORD hath sought him <sup>e</sup> a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel arose, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were <sup>f</sup> present with him, about <sup>g</sup> six hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, abode in <sup>h</sup> Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philistines encamped in Michmash.

17 ¶ And the spoilers came out of the camp of the Philistines in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to <sup>i</sup> Ophrah, unto the land of Shual:

18 And another company turned the way to <sup>j</sup> Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border that looketh to the valley of <sup>k</sup> Zebaim toward the wilderness.

19 ¶ Now there was no smith <sup>l</sup> found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines their repentance or obedience. "For the Lord will not forsake his people, for his great name's sake; because it has pleased the Lord to make you his people." This applies to us Christians, as well as to the seed of Israel, according to the flesh. Of all whom the Lord is pleased to make his people, which is always an act of grace originating from himself, it is equally true, that he will "never leave them nor forsake them." (Heb. xiii. 5.)

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—23. Jonathan commences war against the Philistines, who threaten a dreadful retaliation, and throw the Israelites into great alarm.—The opening of this chapter in the original is peculiar, and has puzzled the most learned commentators; we are inclined to think, with Scott, it simply means, (according to the Hebrew idiom,) that "during the first year of Saul's reign (reckoning from his anointing) nothing remarkable occurred; but after two years (or after the second had commenced) the events took place" recorded in the preceding chapter. The first year he appears to have continued at home, and tended his father's cattle, (chap. xi. 5.) "but when he had reigned two years" over Israel, and had defeated the Ammonites with an immense army, then he chose him three thousand men, as a sort of body guard for himself and his son Jonathan, who was yet but a lad, and dismissed the rest of the army to their own homes. Jonathan soon distinguished himself by what may be called a gallant action, in smiting a garrison of the enemy, which was a renewal of hostilities with the Philistines: they now made immense preparations for war, collecting an army as the sand on the sea-

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. Michmash.—(Michmash was situated east of Bethaven, or Bethel, and Eusebius says it was in his time a considerable place, about nine miles from Jerusalem towards Rama.)—Bagster.

Ver. 3. Let the Hebrews hear.—The word "Hebrews" literally means, passed over; and is thought to refer particularly to those who were on the other side Jordan.

Ver. 5. Thirty thousand chariots.—The Hebrew for thirty is the plural for three, which is generally considered as the true number, and is adopted by the Arabic and Syriac versions: for thirty thousand is not only out of all due proportion to the cavalry, but a vastly greater number than was ever possessed by any other monarch. Even Pharaoh had but six hundred. Those who retain the larger number, therefore, include all the baggage wagons: but even then the number is incredible. See Stackhouse.

Ver. 15. Samuel arose.—[The LXX. has, "Samuel arose and went away shore for multitude, among which were at least 3,000 chariots of war. The Israelites became now greatly terrified, and forgetting all the great things that God had done for them, some fled to hide themselves in the caves and thickets, others passed the Jordan into the land of Gilead; while the few that kept with Saul, as the Hebrew phrase is, "trembled after him."

In scripture history, which is generally very brief, much is constantly implied. In the present instance, it appears that Saul had applied to Samuel for his assistance, and that he had promised to be with him within seven days. These days, we should recollect, commenced (as they still do among the Jews) each on the preceding evening; and on the evening, that is, the first part of the seventh day, Saul probably expected Samuel; but not then coming, nor so soon on the following morning as he expected, and finding the people being scattered from him (as he says) and still scattering, he rashly undertook himself to offer up the accustomed sacrifices, contrary to the law; by this action he forfeited the kingdom; not to himself personally, but his posterity; for no attempt was made to take the kingdom from him in his lifetime. But two inquiries here call for our attention.

1. What was the crime of Saul? It was disobedience of orders, which, in a military man, is always considered as a capital offence. What specific directions he had received from Samuel, we can only judge from circumstances; but we well know that none but priests and prophets (for the prophetic office always included the priesthood, as the greater does the less) were, under the Mosaic dispensation, allowed to offer from Gilgal, and the remainder of the people went up along with the men of war after Samuel from Gilgal to Gibeah of Benjamin." This is probably the true reading; for it does not appear that Samuel went to Gibeah, which was Saul's usual residence; and the Hebrew copyist, as Dr. Wall observes, seems to have missed a line, and added to the sentence concerning Samuel, that which ended the sentence concerning Saul. One MS. instead of Samuel, in the beginning of the sentence reads Saul.—Bagster.

Ver. 19. No smith found.—(It is probable, that the Philistines, in the former wars, had carried away all the smiths from Israel, as Porsenna did in the peace which he granted to the Romans, not permitting any iron to be forged except for the purposes of agriculture.—Ne ferro, nisi in agricultura uteretur. The same policy was resorted to by the Chaldeans, in the time of Nebuchadnezzar; and Cyrus treated the Lydians in the same manner. (Herodotus, l. 1. c. cxlii.) See several more examples in Calmet.]—Bagster said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coultre, and his axe, and his mattock.
21 Yet they had a file <sup>ⁱ</sup> for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to <sup>²</sup> sharpen the goads.
22 So <sup>³</sup> it came to pass in the day of battle, that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found.
23 And the <sup>⁴</sup> garrison of the Philistines went out to the passage of <sup>⁵</sup> Michmash.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Jonathan, unwitting to his father, the priest, or the people, goeth and miraculously smites the Philistine garrison. 15 A divine terror maketh them beat themselves. 17 Saul, not staying the priest's answer, setteth on them. 21 The captivated Hebrews, and the hidden Israelites, join against them. 24 Saul's unadvised adjuration hindereth the victory. 32 He restraineth the people from eating blood. 35 He smiteth an altar. 36 Jonathan, taken by lot, is saved by the people. 47 Saul's strength and family.

NOW <sup>⁶</sup> it came to pass upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison, that is on the other side. But he told not his father.
2 And Saul tarried in the uttermost part of Gibeah under a pomegranate tree which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were about <sup>⁷</sup> six hundred men;
3 And <sup>⁸</sup> Ahiah, the son of Ahitub, I-chabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, the LORD's priest in Shiloh, wearing an <sup>⁹</sup> ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.
4 And between the passages, by which Jonathan sought to go over unto the Philistines' garrison, there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.
5 The <sup>¹⁰</sup> forefront of the one was situate northward over against Michmash, and the other southward over against Gibeah.
6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised: it may be that the LORD will work for us: for there is no restraint to the LORD to <sup>¹¹</sup> save by many or by few.

7 And his armour-bearer said unto him, Do all that is in thy heart: turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart.
8 Then said Jonathan, Behold, we will pass over <sup>¹²</sup> unto these men, and we will discover ourselves unto them.
9 If they say thus unto us, <sup>¹³</sup> Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them.
10 But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand: and this shall be a sign <sup>¹⁴</sup> unto us.
11 And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the <sup>¹⁵</sup> holes where they had hid themselves.
12 And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and said, Come <sup>¹⁶</sup> up to us, and we will show you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armour-bearer, Come up after me: for <sup>¹⁷</sup> the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Israel.
13 And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armour-bearer after him: and <sup>¹⁸</sup> they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer slew after him.
14 And that first slaughter, which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were <sup>¹⁹</sup> a half acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plough.
15 ¶ And there was trembling <sup>²⁰</sup> in the host, in the field, and among all the people: the garrison, and the <sup>²¹</sup> spoilers, they also trembled, and the earth quaked: so it was a <sup>²²</sup> very great trembling.
16 And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked; and, behold, the multitude melted away, <sup>²³</sup> and they went on beating down one another.
17 ¶ Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and see who is sacrifices; and it is clear, from his own defence, that Saul acted under the trepidations of unbelief, which led him to this precipitancy; whereas we read that they that believe will not <sup>²⁴</sup> make haste; Isa. xxviii. 16. that is, will not leave the path of duty through the influence of fear, as was evidently the case with him.

2. But what is the import of the character here given to David, "a man after God's own heart?" that is, such a one as he cordially approved; a man thoroughly devoted to his service, which was eminently his character, although he, as well as Saul, was in some instances drawn aside, through the remaining power of his corrupt nature.
To return, however, to the history of Saul: he was not given up into the hands of the enemy, as he was led to fear, as we shall see in a subsequent chapter; in the mean time, we cannot but remark the deplorable situation in which the Israelites now were. The mighty army of Saul, and even his three thousand chosen troops, are all melted away to four hundred men; these are armed with bows and arrows, and slings and stones, possibly; but with neither sword nor spear. For though they were allowed files to make their agricultural tools, er. 21. Yet they had a file.—Hebrew, "With mouths;" we should say, with teeth; i. e. a coarse file, for common purposes.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. Pomegranate.—Rimmon, in Arabic, romman, whence the Portuguese romão, denotes a pomegranate, both tree and fruit; called by naturalists malus punica or malu-granatum. It is, according to the Linnean system, a genus of the icosandra monogynia class of plants; and is a low tree, growing very common in Palestine, and other parts of the East. It has several small angular boughs, very thick and bushy, covered with a reddish bark, and some of them armed with sharp thorns. They are garished with small narrow spear shaped leaves, like those of the myrtle, but not so sharp, of a green colour, inclining to red. Its blossoms are large, beautiful, of an elegant red colour, inclining to purple, composed of several stalks resembling a rose, in the hollow of the cup; this cup is oblong, hard, purple, having a figure somewhat like that of a bell. It is chiefly valued for its fruit, which is exceedingly beautiful, of the form and size of a large apple, with a reddish rind, and red within: being full of small kernels, with red grains, replenished with a generous liquor, of which Sir J. Chardin informs us, they still make considerable quantities of wine in the East, particularly in Persia. But as a pomegranate tree, from its low growth, is but little adapted for pitching a tent under, it is they had no smiths among them capable of manufacturing steel, so as to form swords and spears, nor would their Philistine lords allow them.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—23. Jonathan having surprised a garrison of the Philistines, their army is thrown into a panic, and dispersed; on which, Saul and all Israel pursue them.—The attack of Jonathan seems to have been the rash attempt of a young hero, and can only be justified on the supposition that he acted under a divine impulse; for otherwise he certainly ought to have informed the king his father. Rash, however, as the attempt appears, it struck a panic into the Philistine army, which seems to have been aided by divine providence; for not only did the host tremble and the people trembled, but (as it is beautifully expressed) even "the earth trembled,"—with "a trembling of God,"—perhaps a slight shock of earthquake, which, without swallowing up the people, so increased the terror, that the multitude—a mighty mass of undisciplined soldiers—melted away, beating down, or falling over one another.
This affair appeared as mysterious to Saul as to the Philistines: he seems to have heard of the attack, but knew not by probable that Rimmon here is the name of the rock mentioned in Ju. xx. 45.—Bagger.
Ver. 3. Ahiah. . . . the Lord's priest.—The office of high-priest was now restored to the family of Eli.
Ver. 5. The forefront.—Hebrew, "Tooth;" i. e. the one pointed north, and the other southward.
Ver. 6. There is no restraint.—[This is a fine, as well as a just sentiment; and where there is a promise of defence and support, the weakest, in the face of the strongest enemy, may rely upon it with the utmost confidence.]—B.

gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold, Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul said unto Ahiah, "Bring hither the ark of God. For the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel.

19 And it came to pass, while Saul talked <sup>v</sup> unto the priest, that the <sup>w</sup> noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on and increased: and Saul said unto the priest, withdraw thy hand.

20 And Saul and all the people that were with him <sup>x</sup> assembled themselves, and they came to the battle: and, behold, every man's <sup>y</sup> sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.

21 Moreover the Hebrews that were with the Philistines before that time, which went up with them into the camp from the country round about, even they also turned to be with the Israelites that were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 Likewise all the men of Israel which had hid <sup>z</sup> themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also followed hard after them in the battle.

23 So <sup>a</sup> the LORD saved Israel that day: and the battle passed over <sup>b</sup> unto Beth-aven.

24 ¶ And the men of Israel were distressed that day: for Saul had <sup>c</sup> adjured the people, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

25 And all they of the land came to a wood; and there was honey <sup>d</sup> upon the ground.

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped; but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in a honeycomb, and put his hand to his mouth; and <sup>e</sup> his eyes were enlightened.

28 Then answered one of the people, and said, Thy father straightly charged the people with an oath, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were <sup>f</sup> faint.

29 Then said Jonathan, My father hath troubled them, and being extremely faint, dipped his rod, or staff of office, into the honey, and tasted it, by which he was so much refreshed that his eyes, which had become dim with fatigue, were now enlightened, and he much regretted that others had been prevented from the like indulgence, as it might have enabled them to pursue their victory farther, and have prevented the excess which followed; for as soon as the day was over, which with them was about dusk, the people, faint with hunger and fatigue, flew upon the spoil of cattle with such eagerness, that they waited not to drain the blood, as the law enjoined, but began to eat the cattle while their blood was in them. To prevent this, messengers were sent through the army to have the animals properly slain; and Saul erected an altar unto the Lord, which is stated to be the first which he had erected; but it appears (by ver. 36) that he had a priest with him to make the offerings.

The people being somewhat refreshed, Saul is for renewing who had been conducted; however, seeing the enemy panic-struck, Saul collects his forces: those who had deserted returned from their hiding places: the Hebrew slaves that had been carried away captive, by the Philistines, now turning against them, joined their own people. So "the Lord saved the people that day," as he has often done before and since, with a great salvation, and in a way that there could be no room for them to take any of the glory to themselves. It was the Lord's doing, and marvellous in their eyes.

Ver. 24-52. Saul makes a rash vow, which produces painful consequences; but he is victorious over all his enemies.—The folly of Saul, however, marred this splendid victory. Lest the people should stop in their career to devour the spoil—that is, the food which they might meet with in the Philistine camp, he imprecates a curse on any of the people that tasted food that day, though they were faint with the pursuit; Jonathan, who heard nothing of the prohibition, meeting with some

Ver. 18. Bring hither the ark.—[The Septuagint reads, "Bring hither the Ephod; for he bore the Ephod on that day before Israel;" which Houbigant and others think is the true reading.—Finding that his son Jonathan and his armour-bearer were absent, Saul wished to consult the high-priest; but the tumult increasing, he says to him, "Withdraw thy hand;" i. e. desist from consulting the Ephod on the present occasion; and immediately hastened to make the best use he could of this astonishing victory.]—Bagster.

bled the land: see, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey.

30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to-day of the spoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines?

31 ¶ And they smote the Philistines that day from Michmash to Aijalon: and the people were very faint.

32 And the people flew upon the spoil, and took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground: and the people did eat them with the blood.

33 Then they told Saul, saying, Behold, the people sin <sup>a</sup> against the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he said, Ye have <sup>b</sup> transgressed: roll a great stone unto me this day.

34 And Saul said, Disperse yourselves among the people, and say unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his sheep, and slay them here, and eat; and sin not against the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox <sup>c</sup> with him that night, and slew them there.

35 ¶ And Saul <sup>d</sup> built an altar unto the LORD: <sup>e</sup> the same was the first altar that he built unto the LORD.

36 And Saul said, Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And they said, Do whatsoever seemeth good unto thee. Then said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 ¶ And Saul asked counsel of God, Shall I go down after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel? But <sup>f</sup> he answered him not that day.

38 ¶ And Saul said, Draw <sup>g</sup> ye near hither, all the <sup>h</sup> chief of the people: and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day.

39 For, <sup>i</sup> as <sup>j</sup> the LORD liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God were offered, before the people attempted to proceed any farther. Ver. 41. Therefore Saul said.—[Both the Septuagint and Vulgate add much to this verse. "And Saul said [to the Lord God of Israel, Vulgate.] Lord God of Israel [give a sign, Vulgate.] Why is it that thou hast not answered thy servant to day? If the iniquity be in me, or in my son Jonathan [O Lord God of Israel, LXX.] make it manifest; and if thou say thus, give to thy people Israel, give mercy," &c. [but Vulgate. Israel. <sup>p</sup> Give a perfect <sup>q</sup> lot. And Saul of an<sup>d</sup> Jonathan were taken: but the people escaped.

42 And Saul said, Cast <sup>lots</sup> between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, Tell <sup>s</sup> me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, I <sup>t</sup> did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die.

44 And Saul answered, God <sup>u</sup> do so and more also: for <sup>v</sup> thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as the Lord liveth, there shall not one <sup>w</sup> hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God <sup>x</sup> this day. So <sup>y</sup> the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

47 ¶ So Saul took the kingdom over Israel, and fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, and against the children of <sup>z</sup> Ammon, and against Edom, and against the kings of <sup>a</sup> Zobah, and against the Philistines: and whithersoever he turned himself, he vexed <sup>b</sup> them.

48 And he<sup>b</sup> gathered a host, and smote the Amalekites, and delivered Israel out of the hands of them that spoiled them.

49 ¶ Now the sons <sup>d</sup> of Saul were Jonathan, and Ishui, and Melchi-shua: and the names of his two daughters were these; the name of the first-born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal:

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam the daughter of Ahimaaz: and the name of the captain of his host was <sup>e</sup> Abner, the son of Ner, Saul's uncle.

51 And Kish <sup>f</sup> was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the son of Abiel.

52 And there was sore war against the Philistines all the days of Saul: and when Saul saw any strong man, or any valiant man, he <sup>g</sup> took him unto him.

the pursuit, but is persuaded to ask counsel of God, to which no answer was returned. Perhaps the question was at this time impertinent and improper. The event, however, led to results of real importance: to a justification of Jonathan, and to a proof of his father's rashness—to a display of the people's love for Jonathan, and to a most mortifying reproof of Saul's folly, in the evidence which the people gave of their preference to his son Jonathan.

The kingdom of Saul was notwithstanding confirmed over all Israel, and the rest of his days were spent in war, (which had now become his element,) and he fulfilled Samuel's prediction, (chap. viii. 11, &c.) "He will take your sons, and appoint them for himself," &c.; for we are here told, whenever

Ver. 45. There shall not one hair, &c.—[The people judged rightly, that the guilt was contracted by Saul, and not by Jonathan; and therefore they rescued him from the hands of his rash and severe father.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 3. Now go and smite Amalek.—[The Amalekites, a people of Arabia Petraea, who inhabited a tract of country on the frontiers of Egypt and Canaan, had acted with great cruelty towards the Israelites on their coming out of Egypt, and God then purposed that Amalek, as a nation, should be blotted out from under heaven; but it had been spared till it had filled up the measure of its iniquities, and now this purpose is carried into effect by Saul, upwards of 400 years afterwards.] Nothing could justify such an exterminating decree but the absolute authority of God; and this was given: all the reasons of it we do not know; but this we know well, The Judge of all the earth doeth right.]—Bagster.—Ox and sheep.—The reason of his being ordered to destroy the cattle, &c. was evidently, that it might not be supposed the object of the attack was plunder.

Ver. 5. Saul came unto a city of Amalek.—Rather, "To the city Amalek," one capital of the kingdom.

Ver. 6. Saul said unto the Kenites.—While he was lying in wait in the valley, he seems to have sent a message to some of the Kenites, who had repeople, over Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord. 2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I remember that which Amalek did to Israel, how <sup>b</sup> he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt.

3 Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all <sup>d</sup> that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

4 And Saul gathered the people together, and numbered them in Telaim, two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and <sup>e</sup> laid wait in the valley.

6 ¶ And Saul said unto the <sup>f</sup> Kenites, <sup>g</sup> Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ye showed kindness <sup>h</sup> to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites.

7 ¶ And Saul smote the Amalekites from Havilah <sup>i</sup> until thou comest to Shur, that is over against Egypt.

8 And <sup>k</sup> he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly <sup>l</sup> destroyed all the people with the edge of the sword.

9 But Saul and the people spared <sup>m</sup> Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the <sup>n</sup> fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly.

10 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto Samuel, saying,

11 It <sup>o</sup> repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is turned <sup>p</sup> back from following me, and <sup>q</sup> hath not performed my commandments. And it grieved Samuel; and he cried unto the Lord all night.

12 ¶ And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to <sup>r</sup> Carmel, and, behold, he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, Blessed <sup>s</sup> be thou of the Lord: I have <sup>t</sup> performed the commandment of the Lord.

14 And Samuel said, what meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul said, They have brought them he "saw any strong man or any valiant man," he pressed him into the army, and made a soldier of him. So he did, probably, David's elder brethren.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—35. Saul subdues the Amalekites, but spares their king, who is slain by Samuel.—We hear nothing of Samuel in the preceding chapter, but he now comes forward, and by divine authority directs Saul to war with Amalek, and utterly destroy the nation, which had long been threatened. (Exod. xvii. 8—14.) Saul accordingly destroyed the people, men, women, and children; while he spared their king, and the best of their cattle; but all that "was vile and refuse he destroyed." This part of the Jewish history has been strongly objected to, in two respects: 1. The order of maintained among the Amalekites, to warn them of their danger, and they with drew immediately. See Numb. xxiv. 21, 22, and notes.

Ver. 7. Havilah.—[This Havilah was probably situated in Arabia, and the district of Chaulan may mark the spot. It seems different from that encompassed by the river Pison, one of the rivers of Eden.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12 He set him up a place.—That is, probably, a monument of his victory; the Hebrew says, "A hand," which denotes the form of it. So Absalom's pillar is called "the hand of Absalom," 2 Sam. xviii. 18. (Probably because the trophy or monument of victory was in the shape of a large hand, the emblem of power, erected on a pillar. These memorial pillars were anciently much in use; and the figure of a hand, by its emblematical meaning, was well adapted to preserve the remembrance of a victory. Nebahy, speaking of the Mesjed Ali, or Mosque of Ali, says, that, "at the top of the dome, where one generally sees on the Turkish mosques a crescent, or only a pole, there is here a hand stretched out, to represent that of Ali." Another writer, (Annual Register, 1778), informs us, that at the Alhambra, or Red palace of the Moorish kings in Granada, "on the key stone of the outward arch (of the present principal entrance) is sculptured the figure of an arm, the symbol of strength and dominion."]—Bagster.

from the Amalekites: for "the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

16 Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel said, When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until "they be consumed.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

21 But "the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel said, Hath "the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to obey is "better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

23 For rebellion is as the sin of "witchcraft, "and stubbornness is as iniquity and "idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, he "hath also rejected thee from being king.

24 ¶ And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words: because I feared "the people, and obeyed their voice.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my sin, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD.

26 And Samuel said unto Saul, I "will not return with thee: for thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, he "laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel said unto him, The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

29 And also the "Strength of Israel "will not lie: nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent.

30 Then he said, I have sinned: yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD.

32 ¶ Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites. And Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past.

33 And Samuel said, As thy "sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34 ¶ Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to Gibeath of Saul.

35 And Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death: nevertheless Samuel mourned "for Saul; and the LORD repented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

God for their extirpation has been represented as sanguinary and cruel; and, 2. The conduct of Saul has been justified, as proceeding from a principle of humanity.

1. As to the order of God for their extirpation. We have already considered the case of the Canaanites, and the justice of their destruction, in our Introduction to the Book of Deuteronomy; and may remark with Dr. Leland, that "A great deal of what has been offered with regard to the Canaanites, may be applied to the case of the Amalekites, whom Saul was ordered to destroy; with this difference, that it cannot be pretended in this case, as it was in the former, that the Amalekites had done the Israelites no injury. They attacked them without any provocation, when they were naked and unarmed, just delivered from their cruel oppressors; and that in a treacherous and barbarous manner, cutting off the weak, the weary, and the aged; and what aggravated their crime, they attacked them immediately after God had brought them out of Egypt and the Red sea, by a train of astonishing miracles, which showed a manifest contempt of God, and a defiance of his power and justice. (Exodus xvii. 8, &c. Deuteronomy xxv. 17, 18, 19.) And it therefore seemed fit to him for this, added to their other crimes, to pronounce a solemn sentence of extirpation against them."—(Leland's Defence of Christianity.)

It is added by another learned writer, "The Amalekites took care to deserve excision, by continuing to manifest the most hostile disposition to the Hebrew nation, by attacking them whenever they had an opportunity, and joining their enemies on all occasions, to oppress and enslave them. They joined the Canaanites, and destroyed many of the people upon their first attempt to enter into Canaan. They united with the Moabites, went with them and smote Israel, dispossessed them of the city of palm-trees, and helped to reduce them to an eighteen years' servitude. They oppressed them also with the Midianites, and utterly impoverished them by their rapines and plunders; destroying the increase of the earth, leaving no sustenance for Israel, neither for the sheep, the oxen, or asses; and afterwards attacked them in battle, as confederates with the Midianitish army. Under Saul's reign they continued their ravages, and spoiled the people, and when he had repulsed them, he received this command from God, utterly to exterminate them."—(Dr. Chandler's Life of David.)

2. The conduct of Saul has been justified, as proceeding from motives of tenderness and humanity; but for this there is no pretence. The man who, but a little before, would have sacrificed his own son for violating a vow of which he had never heard, could have little to plead on that head, nor does he pretend to do so. His excuse is, that the people took the cattle for sacrifice, which is very likely to be false, either on his part or theirs; but had this been true, Samuel lays down the unquestionable principle, as it respects the Almighty, that "to obey is better than sacrifice;" and therefore "the cattle on a thousand hills" would not atone for one act of wilful disobedience.

But what shall we say as to Agag? Saul, it seems, had slain all the innocent, and spared him whom of all was most guilty; whose "sword had made many women childless;" a character, probably, not unlike Adoni-bezek, (Judges i. 7.) remarkable for cruelty. As to Samuel, it must be remembered, that he acted immediately under the divine command. The hypocrisy of Saul is, however, most evident in his request to Samuel, to "honour him before the people," whose favour he seems to have regarded more than that of God—"the Strength," or "Giver of Victory" to Israel. As the kingdom was to be continued to Saul during his life, Samuel so far complied as to worship with him, though he came no more to see him; and it is added, that the Lord himself repented that he had made Saul king. But how is this reconcilable with a preceding verse, that God cannot repent? The one explains the other. In a strict sense, the Supreme Being can neither change his mind, nor falsify his word; but he can make those changes in the course of his providence, which have that appearance. Saul was deserted both of God and of his prophet, and a successor was appointed; yet his life and his throne were preserved, till such time as providence had prepared his successor for the office. But though Samuel no more visited Saul, he pitied and "mourned" over his folly and rebellion, and did not refuse to see him, when he came to his residence at Naioth. (See chap. xix. 22—24.)

Ver. 32. Agag came delicately.—Rather, "pleasantly;" but the LXX. render it trembling;" both may be true. He might flatter himself the danger was over, and affect to be pleasant, while he trembled in his heart.

Ver. 33. Hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord.—That is, openly, and in the face of day. (See Gen. xiii. 13.) It has been a matter of wonder to many, how Samuel could thus slay a captive prince, even in the presence of Saul, who from motives of clemency had spared him; but it should be remarked, that what Samuel did here, he did in his magisterial capacity; and that Agag had been a cruel tyrant, and therefore was cut off for his merciless cruelties. Farther, it is not likely that he did it by his own sword, but by that of the ex-

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Samuel sent by God, under pretence of a sacrifice, cometh to Beth-lehem. 6 His human judgment is reprov'd. 13 He anointeth David. 15 Saul sendeth for David to quiet his evil spirit.

AND the LORD said unto Samuel, "How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? fill thy horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse the Beth-lehemite: for I have provided me a king among his sons.

2 And Samuel said, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the LORD said, "Take a heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice to the LORD.

3 And call Jesse to the sacrifice, and I will show thee what thou shalt do: and thou shalt anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee.

4 And Samuel did that which the LORD spake, and came to Beth-lehem. And the elders of the town trembled at his coming, and said, Comest thou peaceably?

5 And he said, Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice unto the LORD: I sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were come, that he looked on Eliab, and said, Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

8 Then Jesse called Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

9 Then Jesse made Shammah to pass by. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

10 Again, Jesse made seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The LORD hath not chosen these.

11 ¶ And Samuel said unto Jesse, are here all thy children? And he said, There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse,

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—23. David anointed, Saul afflicted, and David appointed his musician.—Samuel is commissioned to go and anoint David the son of Jesse to be Saul's successor; and now, for the first time, we find him hesitate through fear, and that seemingly with little reason; for knowing him to be a prophet of Jehovah, both the king and the people stood in awe of him: the latter so much so, that when they heard of his coming, the elders trembled at his approach, lest he should come with some message of judgment against them; for they knew that whatever he predicted "surely came to pass." The greatest men have their moments of weakness, and misgivings of heart. Samuel was shown, however, that there was no ground of fear, and directed so to act, that there could be no suspicion. Samuel accordingly goes to Beth-lehem to sacrifice, and calls Jesse and his sons to the feast, without at all appraising them of his errand; having collected them all, probably in Jesse's family tent, he anoints David, the youngest of them, in the midst of his brethren, and after the feast, rose up, and returned to his own house, at Ramah. Should it be asked, What said David's brethren on this occasion? we cannot tell: but it is probable they would not say much before Samuel; and perhaps at the time might not rightly understand whether the anointing was for the regal or the priestly office; but it might be one ground of their future jealousies.

Upon this event we are told, as in the instance of Saul, that "the Spirit of the LORD came upon David," and in the verse following, that the same Spirit "departed from Saul;" i. e. neither of which instances we are to understand those divine influences that form the heart to piety and religion; but that Spirit which first qualified Saul, and now David, for the new scutcheon. What kings, magistrates, and generals do, in an official way, by their subjects, servants, or soldiers, they are said to do themselves:—qui facit per alterum, facit per se.—Bagster.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Fill thy horn.—We know that horns were formerly used to drink out of, and were slung with chains. They were also the usual vessels to carry oil. See 1 Kings i. 39.

Ver. 2. Take a heifer.—For the prudent management of the affair, and to avoid suspicion, Samuel was directed to go to Bethlehem to sacrifice, as he probably did from time to time in many different places; and the answer which he was instructed to return, was strictly true, though he did not tell the principal design of his coming; for though no man in any circumstances, should ever tell a lie, yet in all circumstances, he is not bound to tell the truth, though he must tell nothing but the truth, and so tell that truth that the hearer shall not believe it to be a lie. —Bagster.

Ver. 11. Sit down.—Margin, "Sit round." To sit round a table at meals is still customary in the East, as well as with us.

Ver. 12. He was ruddy.—The ancient versions apply this to David's hair, and we know that "golden locks," as they were called, were much esteemed among the ancients; but our translation seems more natural, and the text says nothing of his hair: but the following clause, which in the text is tautologous, is given more correctly in the margin—"fair of eyes," or with beautiful eyes, which, conjoined to a ruddy (or rosy) complexion, must make the lad (for it is agreed he was now under twenty) goodly to look to.

Ver. 14. Evil spirit.—The evil spirit was either sent immediately from the Lord, or permitted to come; but whether this was a diabolical possession, or a mere mental malady is not agreed: it seems to have partaken of both.

12 And he sent, and brought him in. Now he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the LORD said, Arise, anoint him: for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up and went to Ramah.

14 ¶ But the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the LORD troubled him.

15 And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our Lord now command thy servants, which are before thee, to seek out a man, who is a cunning player on a harp: and it shall come to pass, when the evil spirit from God is upon thee, that he shall play with his hand, and thou shalt be well.

17 And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then answered one of the servants, and said, Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely person, and the LORD is with him.

19 Wherefore Saul sent messengers unto Jesse, and said, send me David thy son, which is with the sheep.

20 And Jesse took an ass laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and sent them by David his son unto Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and stood before him: and he loved him greatly; and he became his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, Let David, I pray thee, stand before me; for he hath found favour in my sight.

23 And it came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took a harp, and played with his hand: so Saul

That Saul had fallen into a deep melancholy, there is little doubt; and that an evil spirit might work more effectually on such a state of mind, there can be little question. His malady appears to have been of a mixed kind, natural and diabolical: there is too much of apparent nature in it to permit us to believe it was all supernatural; and there is too much of apparently supernatural influence, to suffer us to give it was all natural. —Bagster.

Ver. 18. Have seen, &c.—Bishop Warburton thinks this passage, from ver. 14 to 23, is an anticipation. He would place them between ver. 9 and 10 of ch. xvii. which see.

Ver. 23. And so Saul was refreshed.—"Now to me it is plain, (says the celebrated Dr. Mead,) that Saul's disease was a real madness, and of the melancholic or strabilarious kind, as the old physicians called it; the fits whereof returned on him at uncertain times, as is often the case in this sort of disease; nor could the cause of this disorder be secret, since he had been lately deprived of his kingdom, by the express command of God. The remedy also applied, playing on the harp, was extremely proper; for physicians have long ago taught us, that 'soft symphonies of music' are of service in dissipating gloomy, melancholic thoughts."—Mead's Medica Sacra. Many instances of the power of music have been collected, and a few of them may be found in "The Percy Anecdotes" on Music; but the one above alluded to in the exposition, is the most remarkable. Orlando de Lassus, in the Motetts (or hymns) which he composed for that occasion, intermixed a kind of plain song, purposely for the king to take a part. We shall have occasion to remark something like this presently (ch. xvii. 10.) in the case of Saul, who, in one of his fits, "prophesied in the midst of the house," while David accompanied him on the harp.

was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The armies of the Israelites and Philistines being ready to battle, 4 Goliath cometh proudly forth to challenge a combat. 12 David, sent by his father to visit his brethren, taketh the challenge. 28 Eliab chideeth him. 30 He is brought to Saul. 32 He sheweth the reason of his confidence. 38 Without armour, armed by faith, he slayeth the giant. 55 Saul taketh notice of David.

NOW the Philistines gathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at <sup>a</sup> Shochoh, which <sup>b</sup> belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah, in <sup>c</sup> Ephes-dammim.

2 And Saul and the men of Israel were gathered together, and pitched by the valley of Elah, and <sup>d</sup> set the battle in array against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named Goliath, of Gath, whose height was six cubits and a span.

5 And he had a helmet of brass upon his head, and he was <sup>e</sup> armed with a coat of mail; and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? am not I a Philistine, and ye servants <sup>h</sup> to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, I <sup>i</sup> defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man, that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid.

12 ¶ Now David was the son <sup>j</sup> of that Ephraimite of Beth-lehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had eight <sup>k</sup> sons: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle: and the names of his three sons that went to the battle were Eliab the first-born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third Shammah.

14 And David was the youngest: and the three eldest followed Saul.

and important office to which each was successively appointed. But what are we to understand by an evil spirit from the Lord? We conceive it means a spirit of melancholy and of jealousy; exciting (as Scott expresses it) "terrors, alarms, and suspicions," so as to render him "at times distracted," as we shall see in the subsequent history. We are apt to refer these complaints entirely to impressions on the nerves, or on the brain; but the sacred writers of both the Old and New Testaments refer every thing of the kind to a supernatural agency; and we shall, at a future opportunity, attempt to explain the scriptural theory on that subject: at present we can only make this general observation:—

The sudden change in Saul could not be unobserved by his servants: and as the ancients had a high opinion (and we think justly) of the powers of music, they recommend an appeal to it on this occasion; and one of them, probably a particular friend of his, recommended David as a suitable person to be applied to. Saul sends messengers therefore to Jesse his father, and the young man is immediately sent to Saul with a present, according to the Eastern custom. David so far succeeds as to afford him present relief from his distressing malady, and is in consequence promoted to be one of his armour-bearers; an office, at this time, probably, more of honour than of duty.

Two difficulties here occur. 1. If the malady of Saul was of this nature, what could the power of music do for him? This is best answered, perhaps, by an instance somewhat parallel, though comparatively modern. Charles IX. of France, (one of the most cruel tyrants that ever ascended that throne,) after the massacre of Paris, in the guilt of which he was surely implicated, fell into a deep melancholy, and a musician was sent for from Italy, who for a time afforded him some relief, though by no means a cure: such was the case with Saul, whose melancholy, originating in his conscience, was beyond the power either of music or of medicine to effect a permanent cure. 2. The other difficulty is chronological. Some think that the verses, from 14 to 23, are here inserted by anticipation, which is not impossible; but as this supposition in removing one difficulty will create others, we think it the safest way to take the history in the order that we find it, and admit David to have had a double introduction to Saul, first as a harper-boy, and secondly, as the antagonist of Goliath, between which periods we may admit an interium of some few years: and as, during this interval, he returned to his father's house, and to the sheep-folds, we need not wonder at his being forgotten, either by a king partially insane, or by his servants, who perhaps had been repeatedly exchanged during this period.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—31. The Philistines threaten Israel, and Goliath challenges them to single combat.—This is the earliest instance of such a challenge; but combats of this kind were not unusual among the Greeks and Romans. As to the height of this giant, it could not be less than nine feet and a half, and it might be more; for men of that height are on record. But it may naturally be asked, if the army of Israel were able to combat that of the Philistines, why should they be terrified by the sight of one individual, however great? Doubtless it was a point of honour to meet the challenge, and the army was evidently anxiously waiting the issue, though no man dared undertake the task. David witnesses the profane boasting of this uncircumcised Philistine, and, animated at once with patriotism and with piety, accepts the challenge, in the name of the God of Israel; and in dependence on his strength, burns to engage in the unequal conflict.

David's piety and courage, however, excite the envy of his elder brethren, who were already in the army, and, spurning at the idea of their younger brother taking precedence of them, charge him with vanity, and pride, and folly. David justified his conduct from the urgency of the case; "Is there not a cause?" The honour of God, and the salvation of his country were his motives; and let those who censure him, rival him in courage and in principle. It is not uncommon for those who are cold-hearted in a good cause to damp the spirit of others, to save themselves from censure.

As to David, he encouraged himself in the Lord his God; and having received signal deliverances in former instances, pounds, avoirdupois; and his spear head exceeded eighteen pounds. The manner in which the ancient armour was formed, resembled the scales of a fish, and consisted of thin plates, (or laminae), overlapping each other. Plutarch informs us that the usual weight of a soldier's armour was sixty pounds, but mentions one twice that weight.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 6. Target of brass.—Margin, "Gorget;" a kind of shield, or buckler; beside which he had

Ver. 7. One bearing a shield.—Shield-bearers were common among the ancients; Alexander the Great had the shield taken out of the temple of Trojan Pallas carried before him in all his battles.—Orient. Lit. No. 448.

Ver. 9. If ye be able, &c.—In Plautus, Soria thus describes a battle between the Thebans and Teleboans. The troops being drawn up in military array on both sides,

"Both generals then advanced before the ranks,
In the mid space, and there conferred together:
It was agreed, which ever should be vanquished
In the engagement, should surrender ap
Their city, lands, gods, houses, and themselves."

Orient. Lit. No. 447.

Ver. 10. I defy the armies of Israel.—"From the Dhunoor vedu shastra it appears, that among the Hindoos it was common before the commencement of an engagement to challenge the enemy, by throwing out some terms of abuse, very similar to those used by Goliath."—Ward's Hindoos.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 4. A champion.—The English word, in its derivation, means one who fights in the open field; but the Hebrew rather imports, "a man between two," or a middle man, who undertakes, by his own prowess, to settle disputes between contending nations.—Dr. Clarke.—Whose height was six cubits and a half.—[According to Bp. Cumberland's calculation, the height of Goliath was about eleven feet ten inches; but Parkhurst, estimating the ordinary cubit at seventeen inches and a half, calculates that he was nine feet six inches high. Few instances can be produced of men who can be compared with him. Pliny says, "The tallest man that hath been seen in our days was one named Gabara, who in the days of Claudius, the late emperor, was brought out of Arabia: he was nine feet nine inches." Josephus mentions a Jew, named Eleazar, whom Vitellius sent to Rome, who was seven cubits, or ten feet two inches high. Bezanus saw a man near ten feet, and a woman that was full ten feet. And to mention no more, a man of the name of John Middleton, born at Hale, near Warrington, in Lancashire, in the reign of James the first, was more than nine feet high. Dr. Plott, in his History of Staffordshire says, that "his hand, from the carpus to the end of the middle finger, was seventeen inches, his palms eight inches and a half broad, and his whole height was nine feet three inches; wanting but six inches of the height of Goliath of Gath."—Basster.—Goliath of Gath.—When Joshua subdued the Anakims, a few escaped, and took refuge in Gath, from whom, doubtless, this Goliath was descended. See Jos. xi. 22, and note.

Ver. 5. The weight of the coat five thousand shekels of brass.—This, according to Bp. Cumberland's Tables, amounted to one hundred and fifty-six 15 But David went and returned from Saul to feed his father's sheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself forty days.

17 And Jesse said unto David his son, Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren;

18 And carry these ten <sup>m</sup>cheeses unto the captain of <sup>a</sup>their thousand, and <sup>a</sup>look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

20 ¶ And David rose up early in the morning, and left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him; and he came to the <sup>p</sup>trench, as the host was going forth to the <sup>a</sup>fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left <sup>r</sup>his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and <sup>a</sup>saluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name, out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled <sup>a</sup>from him, and were sore afraid.

25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his <sup>a</sup>daughter, and make his father's house free in Israel.

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised <sup>a</sup>Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living <sup>a</sup>God?

27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's anger <sup>a</sup>was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thy heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David <sup>a</sup>said, What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 ¶ And he turned from him toward another, and spake after the same <sup>a</sup>manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul: and he <sup>b</sup>sent for him.

32 ¶ And David said to Saul, Let no man's heart fail <sup>a</sup>because of him; thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him: for thou art <sup>a</sup>but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a <sup>a</sup>lamb out of the flock:

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall cast himself upon the same protecting providence. David is now brought before Saul; though the king was at first astonished at his presumption, when he hears his motives, he cannot but applaud his zeal and bravery, saying, "Go, and the Lord be with thee!"

Ver. 32–38. Saul equips David for the conflict, but he declines his armour, and with a sling and stone encounters and slays Goliath.—Saul wished to send David to the fight—not as a shepherd lad, but in proper military costume, like his own soldiers; thinking, perhaps, that thus arrayed, though little, he might be taken for a hero, and be better able to cope with his antagonist: but David judged perfectly right in declining armour. He was not accustomed to it; and this suit, in particular, he had not fitted on, which was very important in wearing ar-

Ver. 15. David went and returned.—The writer begs here to suggest a slight alteration in the translation of this verse, which might render the narrative more perspicuous and consistent. He would read it, "But David had been and returned." i. e. he had been to play before Saul, and had been appointed an armour-bearer, but being disgusted both with his master and with a military life, he had returned to keep his father's sheep. The want of the perfect tense in Hebrew, is to be regretted. See note on Gen. 1. 2.

Ver. 15. Ten cheeses.—The Vulgate illustrates this passage by translating the Hebrew words, "ten little baskets of cheese," or, ten cheeses made in such baskets. To this day, in Barbary, after turning the milk with flowers of the great headed thistle, or wild artichoke, they put the curd into small baskets made with rushes, or with the dwarf-palm, and bind them up close, and press them.—Shaw's Travels.

Ver. 19. Valley of Elah.—(Dr. Richardson says, that in about 20 minutes, an easterly direction, from the cave of St. John, (which is about two hours, or six miles, in a westerly direction from Jerusalem,) they came to the valley of Elah: which position seems to agree with that of Shochoh and Azekah. He describes it as a small valley, and the place of the encampment is over his bounding antagonist. Saul and his men probably occupied the side of the valley which is nearest to Jerusalem, on which the ground is higher and more rugged than on the other side.")—Bagster.—Fighting with the Philistines.—That is, skirmishing in the valley, between the two hills mentioned ver. 3, as they appeared to have done daily, till the champion of the Philistines came forth, and with gigantic strides and vain boasting, terrified the Israelites.

Ver. 20. Came to the trench.—Margin, "Place of the carriages," where all the baggage-wagons, &c. were deposited. See chap. xxvi. 5.—And shouted for the battle.—The ancients usually did so, to animate their soldiers and mour: but had it fitted him, and had he been accustomed to wear armour, still his sling and stone were more advantageous, for with a sword or spear he never could have reached Goliath; but with his own weapons he was probably as dexterous as those Benjamites who could "sling stones within a hair's breadth, and not miss." (Judg. xx. 16.) The force of a stone thus thrown is said also to be equal to that of a bullet, and if the helmet did not wholly cover his face, as is most probable, then would his sling and stone possess advantages above any weapon then in use. David's confidence, however, was neither in his own strength nor in his weapons; but in that God who had fortified his mind and nerved his arm, and who at the same time guided the stone with unerring truth to the vulnerable spot. So in after times a certain terry the enemy. Alala, the military shout of the Greeks, was originally an invocation of their gods, like that of the Turks, Allah, Allah—Orient. Lit. No. 450.

Ver. 22. Left his carriage.—Heb. "The vessels upon him;" i. e. the baskets of cream-cheese, the loaves, &c. It is probable David might take an ass with him to carry these.

Ver. 26. That taketh away the reproach.—The word rendered defy, both in this and the preceding verses, means literally, to strip of all honour, to reproach, and is the same that is here used: "What shall be done to the man that taketh away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy?" or reproach, rather, "the armies of the living God."

Ver. 31. And when the words were heard, &c.—[The preceding twenty verses, from the 12th to the 31st inclusive, the 41st, and from the 54th to the end of this chapter, with the five first verses and the 9th, 10th, 11th, 17th, 18th, and 19th of ch. xviii. are all wanting in the Vatican copy of the Septuagint; and they are supposed by Dr. Kennicott, Pickington, and others, to be an interpolation. But as Ep. Horsley observes, it appears from many circumstances of the story, that David's combat with Goliath was many years prior to Saul's madness, and David's introduction to him as a musician. In the first place, David was quite a youth when he engaged with Goliath, (ver. 33, 42.) when introduced to Saul, he was of full age, (ch. xvi. 18.) Again, this combat was his first appearance in public life, and his first military exploit; (ver. 56, 38, 39.) when introduced as a musician, he was a man of established character. (ch. xvi. 18.) Now the just conclusion is, that the last ten verses of chap. xvi. have been misplaced; their true place being between the ninth and tenth verses of ch. xviii. Let them be removed there, and the whole apparent disorder and inconsistency will be removed.]—Bagster.

Ver. 34. A lion and a bear.—Not at the same time, for they never go in company; but at different times.

Ver. 35. Caught him by his beard.—This seems to refer particularly to the lion. Homer speaks of "a well-bearded lion." The lions of Judea were not we know, so formidable as those of Africa, nor their bears like those of Russia. To slay a lion, however, and that with no other weapon, probably than a shepherd's staff, was no mean exploit.

be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, The<sup>e</sup> LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, Go, and the LORD<sup>e</sup> be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul<sup>e</sup> armed David with his armour; and he put a helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

40 And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the<sup>e</sup> brook, and put them in a shepherd's bag which he had, even in a scrip; and his sling was in his hand: and he drew near to the Philistine.

41 And the Philistine came on and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about, and saw David, he disdained him: for he was but a youth, and<sup>e</sup> ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods.

44 And the Philistine said<sup>e</sup> to David, Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but<sup>e</sup> I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast<sup>e</sup> defied.

46 This day will the LORD<sup>e</sup> deliver thee into my hand; and I will smite thee, and take<sup>e</sup> thy head from thee; and I will give the carcasses of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls<sup>e</sup> of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know<sup>e</sup> that there is a God in Israel.

man drew a bow at a venture, which smote the king of Israel between the joints of his harness, and proved fatal. (1 Kings xxii. 34.)

David no sooner saw the enemy of God and of Israel fall, than he ran and cut off his head with his own sword, and carried it off as a trophy of his victory. In the mean time the Philistine army was panic struck, as on a former occasion, when Jonathan and his armour-bearer had taken one of their garrisons, (chap. xiv. 1.) Nor was this an uncommon case, when armies were collected indiscriminately, and sent to fight, undisciplined and untrained to war. We have seen something of this in the wars in India, and more recently in Africa, with the Ashantees and Mantatees.

The last five verses of this long chapter relate a conversation between Saul and Abner his uncle and general-in-chief, relative to David, when they saw him go forth to a combat, in which Abner himself seems to have had no idea of engaging. Supposing, however, that three or four years had elapsed between the time of David being engaged in Saul's service as a minstrel, it is easy to conceive that the king, subject, as he was, to fits of temporary derangement, might have lost all recollection of his person; and Abner, perhaps, had never before seen him.

Ver. 38. Saul armed David with his armour.—Heb. "Clothed David with his clothes;" i. e. in the military dress worn by his servants; a helmet, coat of mail, &c.

Ver. 40. Stones out of the brook.—Margin, "Valley." We have before remarked, that many brooks in Judea in the dry season became valleys, and many valleys were, in the rainy season, turned into brooks. Such places were therefore alternately brooks and valleys.—In a shepherd's bag.—These words afford clear evidence that David had not remained all his time in the army, as some suppose; nor is such a circumstance at all reconcilable with ver. 15.

Ver. 44. Flesh to the fowls.—The conspirators against the emperor Maximinus, having slain him, his son, and several of his best friends, threw out their bodies to be devoured by dogs and the fowls of the air. This appears to have been a common threat; and, however shocking to human feelings, was often carried into effect.—Baxter.

Ver. 50. So David prevailed.—[The tradition of the combat between David and Goliath, in which the latter was killed, is preserved among the Arabs;]

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hasted, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling<sup>e</sup> and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took his<sup>e</sup> sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off<sup>e</sup> his head therewith. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they<sup>e</sup> fled.

52 ¶ And the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, until thou come to the<sup>e</sup> valley, and to the gates of Ekron. And the wounded of the Philistines fell down by the way to Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Israel returned from chasing after the Philistines, and they spoiled<sup>e</sup> their tents.

54 ¶ And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem: but he put his armour in his tent.

55 And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner the captain of the host, Abner, whose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

56 And the king said, Inquire thou whose son the stripling is.

57 And as David returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul with the head<sup>e</sup> of the Philistine in his hand.

When David, in answer to Saul's question, told him whose son he was, it is not improbable that this brought him fully into his recollection, for he asks him no more questions.

This chapter is so full of practical instruction, that we must not pass by it without a remark or two, though we are always constrained to be concise.

1. We see in David the true portrait of a Christian hero; with all the courage and fortitude necessary to the latter character, and all the piety and devotion which constitute the former. He fights indeed; but it is to save his country: he triumphs, but gives to God the glory. Nor is the word Christian improperly applied to David, who not only possessed the Christian virtues, but was himself an eminent type of the Messiah.

2. We remark the mysterious course of Providence in this deliverance of Israel. Another giant is not raised up to contend with Goliath: nor is Abner, the experienced general, and the hero of the Israelites, sent to fight with him; but a shepherd lad, at this time perhaps little more than twenty, volunteers to meet the enemy. Thus God often raises up instruments for the deliverance of his church and people, to all appearance the most incompetent; and yet, it afterwards is found that they were endowed with those talents really best adapted for he is mentioned in the Koran, where he is called Gahut, or Jahut. The Arabs also call the dynasty of the Philistines, who reigned in Palestine when the Hebrews came there, Gahutiah, or Jahutiah. Admiral at East, in his book called Ketab al Jamman, says, "those kings were as well known by the name of Jahut, as the ancient kings of Egypt by that of Pharaoh. David killed the Jahut, who reigned in his time, and entirely rooted out the Philistines, the rest of whom fled into Africa, and from thence descended the Brebers or Berbers who inhabit the coast of Barbary. It is remarkable that the Berbers themselves should acknowledge their descent from the Philistines."

"The name Goliath, which they pronounce Sghaliud, is very common among the Brebers, and the history of the champion of the Philistines is very well known to the Moors. When children quarrel, and the bigger one challenges the smaller to fight, the latter answers, 'Who will fight with you?' (Enta men wida Sghaliud). You are of the race of Goliath.' The Jews who dwell among them, on the mountains, all call them Philistines."—Host's Account of Morocco art. Fez.—Baxter

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Jonathan loveth David. 5 Saul envieth his praise, 10 seeketh to kill him in his fury, 12 search him for his good success, 17 offereth him his daughters for a snare. 19 David persuaded to be the king's son-in-law, giveth two hundred foreskins of the Philistines for Michal's dowry. 28 Saul's hatred, and David's glory increaseth.

AND it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul.

2 And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's house.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul.

4 And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 ¶ And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and behaved himself wisely: and Saul set him over the men of war, and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of Saul's servants.

6 ¶ And it came to pass as they came, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, that the women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music.

7 And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

10 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house: and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

12 ¶ And Saul was afraid of David, because the Lord was with him, and was departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the Lord was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Israel and Judah loved David, because he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. For Saul said, Let not my hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.

18 And David said unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law to the king?

to the work. The stone of David's sling reached, where the sword of Abner must have failed. Thus, "the foolishness of God (so considered) is wiser than men: and the weakness of God stronger than men." (1 Cor. i. 25.)

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1-9. Jonathan forms with David a covenant of friendship, but Saul envies him.—We have here the formation of a friendship the most lovely and disinterested on record—that between Jonathan and David. The pious bravery and modest simplicity of David had won the heart of Jonathan, who was probably about the same age, "so that the soul of Jonathan (as it is most beautifully expressed) was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul;" and expressed his affection in the manner of the ancients, by clothing him with his own military costume, regarding him as the instrument of God for the deliverance of his country.

Saul also, at first, seemed not insensible to his merits as a hero, but gave him military command, while the spread of his renown rendered him popular throughout the country. A circumstance, however, happened about this time, which excited Saul's envy, and set him against David. After the return of David, it should seem that a public procession took place in honour of this victory, in which Saul, as king, occupied a prominent situation; and the women, who on these occasions hailed the conqueror in an ode, performed their part with great zeal, and with an evident leaning of partiality towards David, who was the hero of the day; and this was the burden, or chorus of their song, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands;" which was not intended as implying that David had slain a greater number of the enemy than Saul had on former occasions; but he had slain their champion, who was a man of ten thousand; and therefore David's was the more splendid victory. But Saul was displeased at this, and added, "and what can he have more but the kingdom," or, in our English idiom, "the next thing that they ascribe to him will be the kingdom." "And Saul eyed him," that is, watched him with a jealous eye from that day forward; for he had undoubtedly learned by this time that David was to be his successor, and probably feared that he might be set up against him in his lifetime. It is a sad thing when the intimations of the divine displeasure, instead of humbling us "under the mighty hand of God," excite in us murmuring, discontent, and envy against others; when, instead of praying for mercy, we vent our evil tempers in raving against God, or railing against men.

Ver. 10-30. Saul relapses into his former melancholy, and by various means seeks the life of David.—In this place Bishop Warburton, as already hinted, would introduce ten verses (from 14 to 23) from the 16th chapter of this book; and though we are cautious of listening to dislocations of the sacred history, this transposition has been supported with so much ingenuity by another, Dr. Horsley, that we feel it a duty to pay it farther attention. These learned men suppose that David's chore, was not immediately, for it was first presented to the king, but probably when the women met him with their triumphal song, as in the next chapter. In the mean time Saul, having taken him into his military service, no doubt furnished him with a suitable tent, and in that he deposited the giant's armour. But see chap. xxi. 9.

Ver. 58. Whose son art thou?—To account for the apparent inconsistency of Saul not knowing David, see the note ver. 31.—Bagster.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. The last four verses of the preceding chapter, with the first five of this, and also verses 9, 10, and 11, are omitted in the LXX., which has brought into suspicion their authenticity; but we are by no means disposed to give them up, especially the incident which begins this chapter, which is not only very beautiful, but also seems necessary to introduce the friendship between Jonathan and David, which we know continued while they both lived. Their friendship could not be affected by changes and chances; and it exempted all that the ancients have said on the subject: "Friendship is an entire largeness, and one soul: a friend is another self."—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Jonathan stripped himself.—Tavernier relates that of a Nazir, who had vowed himself to God, that he caused himself to be disapparelled, and gave his habit to the Nazir, which is the greatest honour that a king of Persia can bestow on a subject.—Orient. Cust. No. 827. So Mordecai, when promoted, was clothed with royal apparel, Esther vi. 8.; vii. 15. See also Harmer. By the preceding verse it should seem, that this robing of David was mainly intended to confirm a covenant between the parties here mentioned, Jonathan and David. The girl's may be particularly mentioned, because in that was originally contained the purpose.—See Orient. Cust. No. 829.

Ver. 5. Saul set him over the men of war.—That is, made him a general, afterwards, when he became jealous of him, he degraded him to be the captain of only 1000 men. Ver. 13.

Ver. 6. The women came out of all the cities singing, &c.—A custom similar to this continues in the East to this day, with the difference of sex. Baron

Du Tott mentions, that in his travels he received a similar honour from a party of Turcomans.—Harmer.

Ver. 7. The women answered one another as they played, &c.—So the sacred songs of the Hebrews appear to have been generally performed, as that of Moses, Exod. xv. 20, 21, and that of Deborah and Barak, Judges v. 1, &c.—With instruments of music.—Heb. Shalishim; by which our translators and others have understood "three-stringed instruments," as in the margin. Others understand it of the triangle, a Turkish instrument, often used in our own streets. So Gesenius. The Vulgate renders it, with sistrums. The sistrum was an Egyptian instrument, made of brass, with three brass rods across, which made a rattling much like the triangle. Figures of all these instruments may be seen in Dr. Burney.

Ver. 10. On the morrow.—This term often refers indefinitely to time future. See Exod. xiii. 14. Josh. iv. 6, 21, and note.—Prophesied.—[Wysythnabbab, rather, and he pretended to prophesy;] for the verb is in Hithpael, the signification of which conjugation is not only reflex action but also affectation of that action. The meaning seems to be, that Saul, influenced by the evil spirit, feigned to be prophesying, the better to conceal his murderous intentions, and render David unsuspecting.—Javelin.—Wehachanth beyad shaool, rather, "and the javelin was in the hand of Saul;" for the javelin or spear was the emblem of regal authority; and kings had it always in their hand, as may be seen represented on ancient monuments. In ancient times, says Justin, kings used a spear instead of a diadem.—Ver. 17. And fight the Lord's battles.—Saul made a mistake here, which has been often made, and is, we fear, too common. He concluded, that to be valiant for him, must needs be to fight the Lord's battles. Father Calmet remarks, that "the wars of the Hebrews, while conducted by the express orders of God, were truly the wars of the Lord" (Num. xiv. 14.) but when the spirit of worldly ambition and dominion became mingled with them, they were no longer such, but wars of lust and profanity."

19 But it came to pass at the time when Merab, Saul's daughter, should have been given to David, that she was given unto <sup>x</sup> Adriel the Meholathite <sup>y</sup> to wife.

20 ¶ And Michal, Saul's daughter, loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing <sup>z</sup> pleased him.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be a <sup>a</sup> snare to him, and that the hand <sup>b</sup> of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt this day be my son-in-law in the one of the twain.

22 ¶ And Saul commanded his servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold, the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you a light <sup>c</sup> thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am a poor man, and lightly <sup>d</sup> esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, <sup>e</sup> On this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any <sup>f</sup> dowry, but a hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged <sup>g</sup> of the king's enemies. But Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and the days were not <sup>h</sup> expired.

27 Wherefore David arose and went, he and his <sup>i</sup> men, and slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their <sup>j</sup> foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 ¶ And Saul saw and knew that the Lord

29 And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became David's enemy <sup>k</sup> continually.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Jonathan discloseth his father's purpose to kill David. 4 He persuadeth his father to reconciliation. 5 By reason of David's good success in a new war, Saul's malicious rage breaketh out against him. 12 Michal deceiveth her father with an image in David's bed. 13 David cometh to Samuel in Naioth. 30 Saul's women get sent to take David, 22 and Saul himself, prophesy.

AND Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted <sup>a</sup> in David: and Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and what I see, that I will tell thee.

4 ¶ And Jonathan spake good <sup>b</sup> of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king sin <sup>c</sup> against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to thee-ward very <sup>d</sup> good:

5 For he did put <sup>e</sup> his life in his hand, and slew <sup>f</sup> the Philistine, and the <sup>g</sup> Lord wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice: wherefore <sup>h</sup> then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul <sup>i</sup> sware, As the Lord liveth, he shall not be slain.

victory over Goliath was previous to his appointment to be Saul's minstrel; and their principal reason is, that on the former occasion he is spoken of as "a youth," and in the latter as valiant, prudent, comely, and religious. As it is probable, however, that there might not be more than two or three years between the events (our translators indeed place them in the same year), he might be a youth in both instances. As to the character given of David to Saul, it was evidently by some friend who wished to introduce him to court, and probably to promotion in the army; and if he had by any means heard of David's rencontre with the lion and the bear, he was fully justified in speaking of him as valiant, and fit to be a soldier. But had this character been given him after the death of Goliath, would not his friend at once have said, that he was the man who slew the giant? Besides, after this conflict, we have such a rapid succession of events in David's history, that there seems no room to admit the supposition of his returning to his father: (see chap. xviii. 2.) and even if he had done so, is it likely that Saul, after he became jealous of him, would have not only sent for him, but desired that he might remain with him, because he had found favour in his sight? In both hypotheses there are difficulties, arising probably from some circumstance unknown; but we think it better to leave existing difficulties than to create new ones, perhaps more insurmountable.

But to return to our narrative, "It came to pass on the morrow," that is, on a time <sup>o</sup> subsequent to the former; (see note on v. 10.) "that the evil spirit from God" again afflicted Saul. By which is intended a relapse of his mental disorder, while at the same time the expression may allude to its cause and origin, in a manner which our philosophy does not admit. This fit of insanity vented itself in prophesying "in the midst of his house." We have before seen Saul among the prophets, and his distempered imagination probably now presented to his mind the broken images of that ecstatic scene. So we often find persons who have been accustomed to read their Bibles, and to other religious exercises, mingle with their ravings the most important truths, and the most beautiful language of divine revelation, from which those who know no better are induced to conclude that religion has made them mad, whereas their madness may, as in this case, have arisen from the want of religion; or from the indulgence of those criminal passions we find exhibited in this chapter; namely, envy, jealousy, and hatred. These diabolical passions led Saul twice to attempt to kill David with his own hand, and afterwards to plot against his life, by sending him on desperate expeditions against the enemy: for Saul said, "Let the hand of the Philistines be upon him." How far this murderous intention might be excused by his disease, can be known only to him that searcheth hearts, and weigheth human actions; but that it originated in wickedness of heart is most clear from what is said (ver. 12.) "Saul was afraid of David, because the Lord was with him, and was departed from Saul." It is an awful symptom when the goodness of God to others, in the bestowment of either talents or prosperity, excites in us envy against them—"Is thine eye evil, because I am good?" (Matt. xx. 15.)

Saul, however, as his disorder increased, "was yet the more afraid of David, and became his enemy continually," but David, on the other hand, "behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was very precious." "So is it the will of God, that by well-doing, ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." (1 Pet. ii. 15.)

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1.—24. Jonathan reconciles his father to David for a time, but his envy again breaks out, and he seeks his life.—While Saul was cruelly seeking the life of David, number required; but David was perhaps anxious to secure his prize. [The Septuagint has only one hundred men; and as Saul covenanted for a hundred, and as David himself says, (2 Sa. iii. 14.) that he espoused Michal for a hundred, it is very probable that this is the true reading.]—Bagster. But six hundred heads of the Philistines!

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. Should kill David.—[Saul's envy and enmity now burst forth, in the avowed purpose of putting David to death; and nothing less than the especial interposition of Providence could have saved David's life. When every officer about the king's person, and every soldier, had got positive orders to despatch him.]—Bagster.

Ver. 25. A hundred foreskins, &c.—[That is, Thou shalt slay one hundred Philistines, and thou shalt produce their foreskins, as a proof, not only that thou hast killed one hundred men, but that these are of the uncircumcised Philistines.]—Bagster. This was a custom peculiar to the Jews; but it is reported of a people in Carmania, that if any were desirous to marry, it was necessary he should bring the king the head of an enemy.—Bishop Patrick in loc.

Ver. 26. The days were not expired.—Hebrew, "fulfilled." By this last expression, it should seem that Saul had limited the period within which this deed was to be achieved.

Ver. 27. Slew of the Philistines two hundred men.—This was double the 4 Then said Jonathan unto David, <sup>c</sup> Whatsoever thy soul <sup>d</sup> desireth, I will even do it for thee.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 3. Step between me and death.—[A similar figure is made use of by Juvenal, who, satirizing those who risk their lives for the sake of gain, speaks thus: "Go now, and commit thy life to the winds, trusting to a hewn plank, but four or seven fingers distant from death, if the beam (out of which it has been cut) have been large enough."—Bagster.

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go: that I may hide myself in the field <sup>1</sup> unto the third day at even.

6 If thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me that he might run to Beth-lehem his city: for there is a yearly sacrifice there for all the family.

7 If he say thus, It is well; thy servant shall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be sure that evil is determined <sup>a</sup> by him.

8 Therefore thou shalt deal <sup>1</sup> kindly with thy servant; for thou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the Lord with thee: notwithstanding, if <sup>k</sup> there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself; for why shouldest thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan said, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?

10 Then said David to Jonathan, who shall tell me? or what if thy father answer thee roughly?

11 ¶ And Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, O Lord God of Israel, when I have <sup>1</sup> sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and <sup>m</sup> show it thee;

13 The Lord do so and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will show it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace: and the Lord <sup>n</sup> be with thee, as he hath been <sup>o</sup> with my father.

14 And thou shalt not only while yet I live show me the kindness of the Lord, that I die not:

15 But also <sup>p</sup> thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan <sup>q</sup> made a covenant with the house of David, saying, Let the Lord even require it <sup>r</sup> at the hand of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, <sup>s</sup> because he loved him: for he <sup>t</sup> loved him as he loved his own soul.

where they renew and ratify their covenant of friendship, by mutual oaths and vows. After this, Jonathan finding his father still bitter against David, sends him notice of it, by a preconcerted signal. David therefore flies again, and when, at the feast of the new moon, Saul misses him, Jonathan makes the best excuse for him in his power; takes his part at the risk of his own life, and, as it seems, at the expense of truth itself; for David went not to Beth-lehem, but to Nob, as we shall see in the next chapter. In the mean time we may remark, 1. The cruelty of Saul, who, to be revenged on David, (whom, in fact, he ought to have loved and cherished,) would slay his own son:

Ver. 5. To-morrow is the new moon.—[The months of the Hebrews were lunar months, and they reckoned from one new moon to another. And as their feasts, particularly the passover, were reckoned according to this, they were very scrupulous in observing the first appearance of each new moon. On these new moons, they offered sacrifices, and feasted together; but the gathering together of all the families of a tribe on such occasions seems to have taken place only once in the year: ver. 6.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. A yearly sacrifice.—Beside their monthly feast, it should appear that every family had an annual sacrifice and feast. The convivial part of these customs is still retained, but the religious is grown obsolete.

Ver. 12. O Lord God, &c.—[This verse is evidently deficient. The Septuagint has, "The Lord God of Israel dath knoo," the Syriac and Arabic, "The Lord God of Israel is wisdom," either of which makes a good sense. But two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. supply the word chai, "liveth;" and the text reads thus: "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, when I have sounded my father:—if there be good unto David, and I then send not unto thee," &c.; which is a still better sense.]—Bagster.

Ver. 17. Because he loved him.—That is, because Jonathan loved David, therefore he delighted in the reiterated assurances of David's love to him. The marginal reading, "by his love to him," seems improper; they swore only in the name of the Lord, ver. 42.

Ver. 18. Thy seat will be empty.—David being the king's son-in-law, and holding rank in the army, of course a seat would be left for him, which would mark his absence. [Among the forms of salutation and compliment used in 18 ¶ Then Jonathan said to David, <sup>a</sup> To-morrow is the new moon: and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be <sup>b</sup> empty.

19 And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down <sup>c</sup> quickly, and come to the place <sup>d</sup> where thou didst hide thyself when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone <sup>e</sup> Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and <sup>f</sup> no hurt; as <sup>g</sup> the Lord liveth.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the Lord hath sent thee away.

23 And as touching the matter <sup>h</sup> which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the Lord be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

26 Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, something hath befallen him, he is not <sup>i</sup> clean; surely he is not clean.

27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty: and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday, nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan answered Saul, <sup>j</sup> David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem:

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren. Therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then Saul's anger <sup>k</sup> was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, Thou <sup>l</sup> son of the perverse rebellious woman, do not I and to aggravate that son, abused his own wife, as a perverse rebellious woman, than which, nothing could be more insulting. 2. The usual plea of tyrants for their cruelty: they can find no security, but in the death of all their supposed rivals. 3. We notice the constancy of Jonathan, whom neither the menaces of his father, nor his own apparent interest, can induce to violate his vows of friendship. 4. We see by what a variety of intricate circumstances the Almighty accomplishes his own design. When David's life is threatened, the Lord raises up a protector and a friend, in the son of the very man who would gladly have shed his blood. Lastly, how precarious Persian, one was, "according to my mode of notation in italics, Ja i shania khali bud pish yavan, signifying, the place or seat was empty among thy friends." This phrase, or the greater part of it, was frequently addressed to myself when coming into a circle of Persian acquaintances, after an absence of several days or weeks. It reminded me of a passage in the first Book of Samuel, (ch. xx. 18.) And thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty. And again, David's place was empty." Sir W. Ouseley's Travels I.—Bagster.

Ver. 30. Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman.—See Margin. [This reflection on the mother of Jonathan, by the passionate monarch, at the close of his speech, is just as gross as our translation represents it to be at the beginning: and certainly reflects more dishonour on himself than on his brave and noble minded son. It should be remembered that Saul was subject to a disease which weakened his mental powers; of which we need no stronger proof than that before us—his calling names. Mungo Park gives an instance of the prevalence of the same principles in Africa; and if we suppose King Saul, unable to vilify Jonathan to his own satisfaction by personal reproaches, had outstepped the ordinary abuse of his day, and proceeded to that which was designed to produce unusual vexation, we do little injury to his character or his general deportment.—"Maternal affection," says Park, "is every where conspicuous among the Africans, and creates a correspondent return of tenderness in the child. 'Strike me,' said my attendant, 'but do not cure my mother.' I found the same sentiment to prevail universally in all parts of Africa." ]—Bagster.

know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom. Wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he shall surely die.

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, Wherefore shall he be slain? what hath he done?

33 And Saul cast a javelin at him to smite him: whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David.

34 So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he said unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

¶ But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

¶ And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

¶ And as soon as the lad was gone, David rose out of a place toward the south, and fell his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded.

39 And Jonathan said to David, Go in peace, for as much as we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord, saying, The Lord be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever. And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

at the meeting of David, and said unto him, Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

2 And David said unto Ahimelech the priest, The king hath commanded me a business, and hath said unto me, Let no man know any thing of the business whereabout I send thee, and what I have commanded thee: and I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.

3 Now therefore what is under thy hand? give me five loaves of bread in my hand, or what there is present.

4 And the priest answered David, and said, There is no common bread under my hand, but there is hallowed bread; if the young men have kept themselves at least from women.

5 And David answered the priest, and said unto him, of a truth women have been kept from us about these three days, since I came out, and the vessels of the young men are holy, and the bread is in a manner common, yea, though it were sanctified this day in the vessel.

6 So the priest gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there but the shewbread, that was taken from before the Lord, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

7 Now a certain man of the servants of Saul was there that day, detained before the Lord; and his name was Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen that belonged to Saul.

8 ¶ And David said unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thy hand spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword nor my weapons with me, because the king's business required haste.

9 And the priest said, The sword of Goliath the Philistine, whom thou slewest in the valley of Elah, behold, it is here wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other save that here. And David said, There is none like that; give it me.

10 ¶ And David arose, and fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to Achish the king of Gath.

11 And the servants of Achish said unto him, Is not this David the king of the land? did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

us is human life! There is not a day nor an hour of our existence in which each of us might not say with David, (ver. 3.) "There is but a step between me and death." Long was he chased by Saul, "as a partridge on the mountains;" and though we may not have to endure the like cruel persecution, yet there is one enemy which pursues us with a steady, never-failing speed; that enemy is Death, and there is but a step between us. CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1-15. David seeks refuge with Ahimelech the priest, and afterwards with Achish, king of Gath, from whom he escapes, by feigning insanity.—David having had no time to secure provisions for his flight, applies to Ahimelech, at Nob, a city of the priests, where the ark then was, and receives some of the sacred bread for himself and the youths that were with him. When we read of the surprise that Ahimelech expressed at seeing him alone, we may suppose that he at first appeared alone, and that the young men that came up after him, might be designed to pass for Saul's servants, according as he represents him as saying, (ver. 2.) "I have appointed servants to meet thee at such and such a place;" by which David seems to wish it to be understood, that these were Saul's servants. We are sorry to confess, that on the part of David, this was all deception. We are not called upon, however, to justify the faults even of the best of men, but rather to lament them; for "the best of men," as often has been remarked, "are but men at the best;" men of like passions and infirmities with ourselves.

Some have, indeed, pleaded the lawfulness of falsehood in defence of life; and we know that the heathen hesitated not at this. But we have no scriptural authority to defend, in any case, duplicity and falsehood. Christians must not lie, though it were even to support the truth. (Rom. iii. 7.) Of that noble army of martyrs which Christianity doth boast, the far greater

Ver. 49. His artillery.—Hebrew, "Instruments." [Rather, weapons, as the word kelin also denotes; and here means the bow, quiver, and arrows. This is probably the only place in our language in which the word artillery is not applied to cannon or ordnance, but simply to weapons of war.]—B. CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. Nob.—[Nob appears to have been a sacerdotal city of Benjamin or Ephraim. Jerome says, that in his time the ruins of it might be seen not far from Diospolis or Lydda. But the Rabbinists assert that Jerusalem might be seen from this town. The tabernacle resided sometime at Nob; and after it was destroyed, it was removed to Gibeon; "and the days of Nob and Gibeon were 57 years."]—Bagster. Ahimelech.—Called also Ahiah, ch. xiv. 3. and Abiathar, Mark ii. 26. Ver. 2. I have appointed my servants.—Instead of here supplying the pronoun my, we should rather supply, "to meet thee at such and such a place;" intimating that servants were to meet him here

Ver. 7. The chief of the herdsmen.—The LXX. intimate that he was over the mules, which was an office, perhaps, of similar rank to master of the horse; for it is evident, by chap. xxii. 18, that he was in military command. Ver. 10. Gath.—[Jerome says there was a large town called Gath, in the way from Eleutheropolis to Gaza; and Eusebius speaks of another Gath, four miles from Eleutheropolis towards Lydda, (and consequently different from that mentioned by Jerome.) and also of another Gath, between Jamnia and Antipatris. It appears to have been the extreme boundary of the Philistine territory in one direction, as Ekron was on the other. (ch. vii. 14.; xvii. 52.) and lay near Mareshah, (2 Chron. xi. 8. Mi. i. 14.) which agrees pretty well with the position assigned it by Jerome. But Reland and Dr. Weils agree with Eusebius; and the authors of the Universal History (b. i. c. 7.) place it about six miles from Jamnia, fourteen south of Joppa, and thirty-two west of Jerusalem.]—Bagster.

12 And David laid up <sup>p</sup> these words in his heart, and was sore afraid of Achish the king of Gath.

13 And he changed <sup>q</sup> his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad <sup>r</sup> in their hands, and scrabbled on <sup>s</sup> the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.

14 Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo, ye see the man <sup>t</sup> is mad: wherefore then have ye brought him to me?

15 Have I need of mad men, that ye have brought this fellow to play the mad-man in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?

CHAPTER XXII.

* Companies resort unto David at Adullam. 3 At Mizpeh he commendeth his parents unto the king of Moab. 5 Admonished by Gad, he cometh to Hareth. 6 Saul, going to pursue him, complaineth of his servants' unfaithfulness. 9 Doeg accuseth Ahimelech. 11 Saul commandeth to kill the priests. 17 The women refusing, Doeg executeth it. 20 Abiathar escaping, bringeth David the news.

DAVID therefore departed thence, and escaped <sup>a</sup> to the cave <sup>b</sup> Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 And <sup>c</sup> every one that <sup>d</sup> was in distress, and every one that <sup>e</sup> was in debt, and every one that <sup>f</sup> was discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became a captain <sup>g</sup> over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 ¶ And David went thence to <sup>h</sup> Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the <sup>i</sup> hold.

5 ¶ And the prophet Gad <sup>j</sup> said unto David, Abide not in the hold; depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David <sup>k</sup> departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that <sup>l</sup> were with him, part might have saved their lives by prevarication. But "we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth." (2 Cor. xiii. 8.)

David pleading necessity, "the priest gave him hallowed bread;" and our Lord refers to this circumstance, to show that in cases of extremity, not the moral, but the ritual law might be violated, without criminality. (Mark ii. 25, 26.)

David, however, with all his contrivances to deceive the high priest, was discovered, and betrayed to Saul; whereas had David entrusted Ahimelech with the truth, he might possibly have been concealed from Doeg, who was Saul's chief herdsman, and probably envious against David, as having arisen from a like humble situation. This man went and told Saul, which not only occasioned a fresh persecution of David, but a cruel massacre of the priests. (See chap. xxii. 9.) So that we may say of truth as of honesty, it is "the best policy," after all.

But a pleasing incident occurred here, as respects Goliath's sword, which it seems had been laid up in the ark, as a votive offering to the Lord: but which is returned to David for his own defence. Thus by consecrating it to the Lord, he obtained it again, whereas otherwise Saul would probably have seized it for himself. Even this sword, however, seems to have betrayed him in his next retreat. David said, "There is none like that?" which might be true in more senses than one, and perhaps some peculiarity in its size or form was one means of his discovery at Gath, whither he now fled. The servants of Achish the king said, "Is not this David, the king of the land?" that is, he who was looked up to, to become Saul's successor.

Ver. 13. Feigned himself mad.—[Or, playeth the madman, Ec. vii. 7. David is not the only one who has had recourse to such measures. Bashasus, the Arabian, in order to be revenged on those who had killed his brethren, feigned himself mad, till at length he found an opportunity of executing his intended revenge by killing all who had a share in the murder. (Anthol. Vet. Hist., p. 355. edit. Schultens.) Among the Greeks, Ulysses is said to have counterfeited madness, to prevent his going to the Trojan war. Solon, also, the great Athenian lawgiver, practised the same decoit. By appearing in the dress, and with the air of a madman, and singing a song to the Athenians, he carried his point, and got the law repealed that prohibited, under the penalty of death, any application to the people for the recovery of Salamis. (Plutarch, Vit. Solon, p. 82.) The assumed madness of Brutus in the time of the Tarquins is known to every schoolist in history.—But this conduct of David's was degrading to his character, and proceeded from a want of faith in God's promises and providence, and cannot be defended on any principle of religion or morality.]—B.

The learned professor Dumont, however, contends, that there was no feigning in the case; and he translates the passage thus: "And David went struck

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that <sup>b</sup> showeth me that my son hath made a league <sup>c</sup> with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or showeth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 ¶ Then answered Doeg <sup>d</sup> the Edomite, which was set over the servants of Saul, and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to Ahimelech <sup>e</sup> the son of Ahitub.

10 And he inquired <sup>f</sup> of the Lord for him, and gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 ¶ Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that <sup>g</sup> were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, <sup>h</sup> Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast inquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And who <sup>i</sup> is so faithful <sup>j</sup> among all thy servants as David, which is <sup>k</sup> the king's son-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thy house?

15 Did I then begin to inquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute <sup>l</sup> any thing unto his servant, nor to all the

And when David heard this, he was "sore afraid;" and to extricate himself, feigned epilepsy, or insanity, which he might be the better qualified to do from what he had seen in Saul.

Whether David is to be justified in this act of dissimulation, which some consider in the same light as a stratagem in war, it is not necessary to inquire, for we are not called to judge him. But some critics think that he did not feign, but that terror had brought on disease; and as Solomon says that "oppression maketh a wise man mad," that Saul's conduct had made him so: and his flying to Gath, might itself be urged to prove this, as it was certainly the last place where, in his collected moments, he could have expected safety.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—23. David flees to the cave of Adullam, and collects a force around him. Doeg's treachery, and Saul's cruelty.—When David's family heard of his having formed a retreat in this cave, they came to him; and not they only, but all that were distressed, or in debt, or discontented; which last phrase is in the margin explained, "bitter of soul," grieved, or vexed; we need not wonder, therefore, that they soon amounted to "about four hundred men;" all these were "in the hold," as it is called, for some of the caverns in Judea are very large; his aged parents, who are supposed to have now been more than one hundred years old, he placed under protection of the king of Moab. The prophet Gad, however, directed David to leave the cave, and fly to the forest of Hareth. Saul continued to pursue him, and while standing under a grove in a high place, upbraids his servants for taking part with Jonathan, and

And he changed his countenance before them, and fell convulsed into their hands: and he hurt and marked himself against the posts of the gate, and he frothed on his beard. Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo, ye see the man is epileptic: wherefore then have ye brought him to fall into convulsions in my presence?—Saurin's Dissert.

Ver. 10. Inquired of the Lord.—[Though this circumstance is not mentioned in the history, yet as David would most naturally wish to know where to direct his steps at this important crisis, and as Ahimelech did not deny this part of the charge, it may be concluded to be perfectly true.]—Bagster.

17 ¶ And the king said unto the <sup>w</sup>footmen that stood about him, Turn, and slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also <sup>x</sup>is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not show it to me. But the servants of the king would not put <sup>y</sup>forth their hand to fall upon the priests of the LORD.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the priests, and slew <sup>z</sup>on that day fourscore and five persons that did wear a linen ephod.

19 And <sup>a</sup>Nob, the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword, both men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

21 And Abiathar showed David that Saul had slain the LORD's priests.

2 Therefore David inquired <sup>b</sup>of the LORD, saying, Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the LORD said unto David, Go, and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah.

3 And David's men said <sup>c</sup>unto him, Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah against the armies of the Philistines?

4 Then David inquired of the LORD yet <sup>d</sup>again. And the LORD answered him and said, Arise, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philistines into thy hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philistines, and brought away their cattle, and smote them with a great slaughter. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to pass, when Abiathar the son of Ahimelech <sup>e</sup>fled to David to Keilah, that he came down <sup>f</sup>with an ephod in his hand.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, God hath delivered him into my hand; for he <sup>g</sup>is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to besiege David and his men.

9 ¶ And David knew that Saul <sup>h</sup>secretly practised mischief against him; and <sup>i</sup>he said to Abiathar the priest, Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then said David, O LORD God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, to destroy the city for <sup>j</sup>my sake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? Will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O LORD God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. And the LORD said, He will come down.

12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah with the son of Jesse. Upon this, Doeg rises, and informs against Ahimelech the priest, who had fed him with the shewbread. He is accordingly sent for, with the other priests, and nobly justifies himself before the king, at the same time bearing an honourable testimony to the character of David.

This enrages Saul to that degree, that he orders his footmen, or rather footguards, to slay them all. These men, however, would not touch the priests of the Lord; the bloody commission is therefore given to Doeg, the master of the slaves, who feels no compunction in destroying fourscore and five innocent sacred characters. In this, however, he unwittingly fulfilled the divine decree against the house of Eli. On this we may observe, that an event being decreed, by no means excuses the guilt of a willing perpetrator. The crucifixion of our Lord Jesus was no less criminal for its being certainly decreed. (Acts iv. 27, 28.) So the decree against Eli's house in no degree excused Saul's cruelty in their murder, much less the general massacre of the inhabitants of Nob.

Abiathar, one of the sons of Ahimelech, makes his escape to David, who laments that he had been the innocent cause of so much bloodshed, but invites him to stay under his protection, and assures him of safety. "Abide thou with me, fear not: he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life: but with me thou shalt be in safeguard."

While we lament the bloodthirsty temper of Saul, we may justly admire the guardian providence of God. Abiathar, in flying, took with him the sacred ephod, which appears to have been now the usual medium of inquiring the divine will, and of which he made good use, as we shall see in the next chapter.

In the book of Psalms are several whose titles refer to the events in this and the preceding chapter, and which are supposed to have been written, if not at the time, with reference thereto; and it may be profitable, when we come to that sacred book, to remark, how a good man may derive instruction and encouragement from his various trials. "It is good for me (says David) that I have been afflicted, for now I keep thy law."

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—29. David rescues Keilah, and escapes.—David, hearing that the Philistines were harassing the people of Keilah, a town of Judah, near Hebron, inquires of the Lord, by means of Abiathar, whether he should assist them; and being directed so to do, he attacks the enemy, and saves the inhabitants of that town. Saul finding David was within a walled town, now flatters himself that he shall take him: and with the cant of hypocrisy added to his maliciousness, cries, "God hath given him into my hands," though those hands were but newly stained with the blood of his priests, and though God had long rejected him from the kingdom.

David knew that Saul secretly practised mischief against him, and probably discovered that he had secret correspondents in this town. He therefore inquires farther, by means of Abiathar, 1. Whether Saul would come; and, 2. Whether the people of Keilah would be so ungrateful as to deliver him up into his hands. The answer was in the affirmative to both inquiries: he therefore again fled into the wilderness of Ziph, where also the people proved treacherous; but Jonathan, whom his father had brought with him, from the fear of trusting him alone, now contrived to obtain an interview with David, which indeed seems to have been his last, and was no less friendly and affectionate than his former ones. Jonathan went to David in the wood, and strengthened his hand in God, and said unto him, "Fear not, for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee: and that also Saul my father knoweth." Thus this amiable youth was happy to give up his suc-

Ver. 2. Inquired of the Lord.—[In what way David made this inquiry we are not told: but it was probably by means of Abiathar; and, therefore, it are not told: but it was probably by means of Abiathar; and, therefore, it would seem that, with Houbigant, we should read the sixth verse immediately after the first.—This adventure was truly noble and patriotic. Had not David loved his country, and been above all motives of private and personal revenge, he would have rejoiced in this invasion of Judea, as producing a strong diversion in his favour, and embroiling his inveterate enemy. In most cases, a man with David's wrongs, would have joined with the enemies of his country, and avenged himself on the author of his calamities; but he thinks of nothing but succouring Keilah, and using his power and influence in behalf of his brethren.]—Bagster.

deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the Lord said, They will deliver thee up.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, which were about six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbore to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds, and remained in a mountain in the wilderness of Ziph. And Saul sought him every day, but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

16 And Jonathan, Saul's son, arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God.

17 And he said unto him, Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee; and that also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And they two made a covenant before the Lord: and David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

19 ¶ Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the south of Jeshimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down according to all the desire of thy soul to come down; and our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

21 And Saul said, Blessed be ye of the Lord; for ye have compassion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealeth very subtly.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness of Maon, in the plain on the south of Jeshimon.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him. And they told David: wherefore he came down into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 ¶ But there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for the Philistines have invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place Sela-hammahlekoth.

29 ¶ And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at En-gedi.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 David in a cave at En-gedi, having cut off Saul's skirt, spareth his life. 8 He shows thereby his innocency. 16 Saul, acknowledging his fault, taketh an oath of David, and departeth.

AND it came to pass, when Saul was returned from following the Philistines, that it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in the wilderness of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and went to seek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the shepcotes by the way, cession to the kingdom, knowing that David was thereto appointed; and ambitious of no higher honour than to be the friend of David, who was the favourite of the Lord.

The Ziphites were, however, the most treacherous of David's enemies, and went to seek Saul on purpose to betray David into his hands. Saul here again displays his hypocrisy, "Blessed be ye of the Lord, for ye have compassion on me!" language very unbecoming the lips of those who have no mercy on others! Still, however, David is delivered, and Saul being disappointed of his prey, is forced to return home, to defend his throne against those very enemies from whom David, under God, had so often rescued him. "When the Philistines invaded the land, (says Henry,) they were far from intending any kindness to David; yet the overruling providence of God, which orders all events, made it very serviceable." God is never at a loss for ways and means to save his people.

CHAP. XXIV. 1-22. Saul returns to pursue David, and is put to shame by his generosity.—What success Saul met with in warring against the Philistines, we are not told; but it is probable that he succeeded in driving them back to their own territories, because we find him almost immediately again in pursuit of David. How inveterate must be the malice that can never rest while a rival or an enemy remains to be destroyed! Saul now took three thousand chosen men with him—men on whom he thought he could depend, and probably the known enemies of David; and while he seems guided by chance only, Providence directs him, perhaps alone and unprotected, into the very cave in which David and his men lay concealed. This has been thought incredible; but the following paragraph from Dr. Pococke, one of our most respectable eastern travellers, affords a complete answer to the objection. "Beyond the valley" (of Tekoa) says this respectable and authentic writer, "there is a very large grotto, which the Arabs call El Maonah, a hiding-place: the high rocks on each side of the valley are almost perpendicular, and the way into the grotto is by a terrace, formed in the rock, which is very narrow. There are two entrances into it; we went by the farthest, which leads by a very narrow passage into a very large grotto, the rock being supported by great natural pillars; the top of it rises, in several parts, like domes; the grotto is perfectly dry. There is a tradition, that the people of the country, to the number of thirty thousand, retired into this grotto to avoid a bad air. The place is so strong, that one would imagine it to be one of the strong holds of En-gedi, to which David and his men fled from Saul; and possibly it may be that very cave in which he cut off Saul's skirt; for David and his men might with great ease lie hid there, and not be perceived by him."

In this or some similar cave, of which there are many in Judea, Saul probably lay fast asleep, with few or no attendants, wearied with his pursuit of David, whom he had long hunted "like a partridge on the mountains." David's men no sooner saw Saul in this dangerous situation, than they persuaded him God had now delivered Saul into his hand, that he might destroy him. David, indeed, draws his sword; but it is

Ver. 14. Wilderness of Ziph.—[Ziph is mentioned in Joshua with Carmel and Maon, near which it seems to have been situated; and as we have mention of Carmel and Maon in the history of David, as adjoining to Ziph, it cannot be doubted that by the Ziph, in the wilderness of which David now lay, and where was the hill of Hachilah, is to be understood Ziph near Carmel and Maon.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Hachilah.—Calmet states, that Hachilah was a mountain about ten miles south of Jericho, where Jonathan Maccabeus built the castle of Massada, west of the Dead sea, and not far from Engedi.—Jeshimon.—The wilderness. Eusebius places Jeshimon ten miles south of Jericho, near the Dead sea; which agrees extremely well with the position of Hachilah, as stated by Calmet.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22. Prepare yet.—Some of Kennicott's MSS. by the change of a letter, (hardly distinguishable,) read, "Understand farther;" but the present text might be rendered "Contrive;" form a plan to discover, &c.

Ver. 24. Maon.—[From which the adjoining mountainous district derived its name was a city in the most southern parts of the tribe of Judah, and a neighbouring town to Carmel. Hence Nabal (ch. xxv. 2) is described as a man of Maon, whose possessions were in Carmel; and though he might dwell generally in Maon, yet he is styled Nabal the Carmelite from the place where his estate lay. Calmet supposes it to be the city Minoia, which Eusebius places in the vicinity of Gaza; and the Monastri Castrum, which the Theodosian code places near Beersheba.]—Bagster.

Ver. 28. Sela-hammahlekoth.—[Because, says the Targum, "the heart of the king was divided to go hither and thither." Here Saul was obliged to separate himself from David, in order to go and oppose the invading Philistines, which deliverance of David was of such a nature as made the Divine interposition fully visible.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Strong holds.—[The district around Engedi, near the western coast of the Dead sea, is reported by travellers to be a mountainous territory filled with caverns; and, consequently, proper for David in his present circumstances.]—Bagster.

where was a cave; and Saul went in to cover his feet: and David and his men remained on the sides of the cave.

And the men of David said unto him, Behold the day of which the Lord said unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thy hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of Saul's robe privily.

And it came to pass afterward, that David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

And he said unto his men, The Lord forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the Lord's anointed, to stretch forth my hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the Lord.

So David stayed his servants with these words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

David also arose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

And David said to Saul, Wherefore hear thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

Behold, this day thine eyes have seen how that the Lord had delivered thee to-day into my hand in the cave: and some bade me kill thee: but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth my hand against my lord; for he is the Lord's anointed.

Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see that there is neither evil nor transgression in my hand, and I have not sinned against thee; yet thou huntest my soul to take it.

The Lord judge between me and thee, and the Lord avenge me of thee: but my hand shall not be upon thee.

As saith the proverb of the ancients, Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked: but my hand shall not be upon thee.

15 The Lord therefore be judge, and judge between me and thee, and see, and plead my cause, and deliver me out of thy hand.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, when David had made an end of speaking these words unto Saul, that Saul said, Is this thy voice, my son David? And Saul lifted up his voice, and wept.

17 And he said to David, Thou art more righteous than I: for thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

18 And thou hast showed this day how that thou hast dealt well with me: forasmuch as when the Lord had delivered me into thy hand, thou killedst me not.

19 For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? wherefore the Lord reward thee good for that thou hast done unto me this day.

20 And now, behold, I know well that thou shalt surely be king, and that the kingdom of Israel shall be established in thy hand.

21 Swear now therefore unto me by the Lord, that thou wilt not cut off my seed after me, and that thou wilt not destroy my name out of my father's house.

22 And David sware unto Saul. And Saul went home; but David and his men gat them up unto the hold.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 Samuel dieth. 2 David in Paran sendeth to Nabal. 10 Provoked by Nabal's churlishness, he intendeth to destroy him. 14 Abigail understanding thereof, 18 taketh a present, 23 and by her wisdom, 32 pacifieth David. 36 Nabal hearing thereof dieth. 39 David taketh Abigail and Ahimelech to be his wives. 44 Michal is given to Phalti.

AND Samuel died; and all the Israelites were gathered together, and lamented him, and buried him in his house at Ramah. And David arose, and went down to the wilderness of Paran.

2 ¶ And there was a man in Maon, whose possessions were in Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats: and he was shearing his sheep in Carmel.

3 Now the name of the man was Nabal; and the name of his wife Abigail: and she was a woman of good understanding, and of a beautiful countenance: but the man was not to slay the Lord's anointed, but only to cut off the skirt of his robe, as a witness on his behalf. David, with much difficulty, pacified his men; and Saul, not suspecting any of the circumstances, rose and went his way. David now followed him out of the cave, at some distance, and cried after him, "My lord the king!" Saul turning round, sees David bowing almost to the ground before him. David then rises, and remonstrates with him as a father; and, exhibiting the skirt of his robe, apprizes him of the circumstances in which he had just been, and thus appeals to the Almighty, with the skirt in his hand; "The Lord judge between me and thee!"

Saul is now completely shamed and silenced; "Thou art more righteous than I," and acknowledges that he knew David was to be his successor, and only requests from him an oath that he would not cut off his seed after him, nor destroy his name. David freely gives the required pledge, and Saul returns home; but "David and his men" very prudently "gat them up unto the hold;" that is, (according to the Syriac and Arabic,) to Mizpeh; rightly judging, that Saul was too malevolent and capricious to be trusted, as we shall find in a following chapter.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1-44. The death of Samuel, the churlishness of Nabal, and the wisdom of Abigail.—The character of Samuel has been noticed in a preceding chapter, (chap. xii.) For fidelity to the divine commands, and for integrity in his transactions with the people, it was certainly unimpeachable, and if in some instances it may be thought harsh, or severe, the same has been alleged against Aristides, called the Just, Cato of Utica, and others among the heathen, who excelled in the same virtues. The truth is, that it is very difficult for frail man to excel in any excellence, without carrying it to the extreme. Samuel, however, in all the instances that have been objected to, appears to have acted immediately under divine direction, and was thereby justified. He never acted from sordid, cruel, or revengeful motives; we need not wonder, therefore, that all Israel mourned for him at his funeral.

This chapter presents us with a pair of portraits, (if we may so call them,) which form a perfect contrast—Nabal the churl, and Abigail the courteous. It is generally unhappy, when tempers so opposite meet in the matrimonial connexion; in the present instance, the conduct of Nabal was doubtless a source of frequent and severe affliction to his wife, and we are ready to wish that he had been matched with a woman more like himself, rugged and severe; yet had it been so, both would have been destroyed, with all that they possessed; whereas name, in the south of Judah, which seems to have given name to the surrounding territory. Eusebius and Jerome inform us, that there was in their time a town called Carmelita, ten miles east from Hebron, where the Romans kept a garrison, whose position well agrees with this Carmel.—Shearing his sheep.—This was a very ancient custom; and appears to have been always attended with festivity. The ancient Romans, however, used to pluck off the wool from the sheeps' backs; and hence a fleece was called vellus, a vellendo, from plucking it off. Pity says, that in his time sheep were not shorn every where, but in some places the wool was still plucked off.—Eusebius.

Ver. 3. Churlish.—Wehoh callidus, literally, "and he was a Caledite;" but as the word callidus signifies a dog, the Septuagint have understood it as implying a man of a canine disposition, and translated it, "and he was a dog-gish man." It is understood in the same way by the Syriac and Arabic.—E Ver. 3. Cover his feet.—See note on Judges iii. 24.

Ver. 13. The proverb of the ancients.—The Heb. Mashal, means "any sentence or axiom excellently or gravely uttered: concise, and confined to a certain form or manner."—Bishop Lowth. While this proverb intimates that David, not being a wicked man, could not do such a wicked action, it also silently implies, that Saul himself must have been a wicked man, to pursue him with such a course of enmity.

Ver. 14. A dead dog or a flea.—David evidently means, by these degrading comparisons, to show Saul the unprofitableness of his pursuit of him, even if he had succeeded. If he killed him, he would be no better than a dead dog; if he caught him alive, it would give him more trouble than profit.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 2. Carmel.—(Not the famous mount Carmel, in the north of Canaan, and in the tribe of Asher; but a city on a mountain of the same churlish and evil in his doings; and he was of the house of Caleb.

4 ¶ And David heard in the wilderness that Nabal did <sup>g</sup> shear his sheep.

5 And David sent out ten young men, and David said unto the young men, Get you up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and <sup>h</sup> greet him in my name:

6 And thus shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity, Peace <sup>i</sup> be both to thee, and peace <sup>be</sup> to thy house, and peace <sup>be</sup> unto all that thou hast.

7 And now I have heard that thou hast shearers: now thy shepherds which were with us, we <sup>i</sup> hurt them not, neither was there ought missing unto them, all the while they were in Carmel.

8 Ask thy young men, and they will show thee. Wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: for we come in a good <sup>k</sup> day: <sup>i</sup> give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thy <sup>m</sup> hand unto thy servants, and to thy son David.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and <sup>n</sup> ceased.

10 ¶ And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, Who <sup>o</sup> is David? and who <sup>is</sup> the son of Jesse? there be many servants now-a-days that break away every man from his master.

11 Shall <sup>p</sup> I then take my bread, and my water, and my <sup>q</sup> flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give <sup>it</sup> unto men, whom I know not whence they <sup>be</sup>?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man his sword: and David also girded on his sword; and there went up after David about four hundred men; and two hundred abode <sup>r</sup> by the stuff.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he <sup>s</sup> railed on them.

15 But the men <sup>t</sup> were very good unto us, and we <sup>u</sup> were not hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were a wall <sup>v</sup> unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt do: for evil is determined against our master, and against all his household: for he <sup>w</sup> is such a son of Belial, that a man cannot speak to him.

18 ¶ Then Abigail made haste, and <sup>x</sup> took two 19 And she said unto her servants, <sup>s</sup> Go on before me; behold, I come after you. But she told not her husband Nabal.

20 And it was <sup>so</sup>, as she rode on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and behold, David and his men came down against her; and she met them.

21 Now David had said, Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that <sup>t</sup> pertained unto him: and he hath requited me evil <sup>u</sup> for good.

22 So and more also do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that <sup>v</sup> pertain to him by the morning light any that pisseth against the wall.

23 And when Abigail saw David, she hasted, and lighted <sup>w</sup> off the ass, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground.

24 And fell at his feet, and said, Upon me, my lord, <sup>x</sup> upon me let this iniquity <sup>be</sup>: and let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thy audience, and hear the words of thy handmaid.

28 I pray thee, forgive the trespass of thy handmaid: for the <sup>m</sup> Lord will certainly make my lord a sure house; because my lord fighteth <sup>n</sup> the battles of the Lord, and evil hath not <sup>o</sup> been found in thee <sup>all</sup> thy days.

29 Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle <sup>p</sup> of life with the Lord thy God; and the souls of thine enemies, they shall he sling out, <sup>q</sup> as out of the middle of a sling.

30 And it shall come to pass, when the Lord shall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel;

31 That this shall be <sup>r</sup> no grief unto thee, nor the courtesy and prudence of Abigail saved the whole; and her present suffering was recompensed with promotion to be the wife of David.

That Nabal was guilty of ingratitude and folly, as well as churlishness, cannot be doubted; for his own servants bear witness that David's troops had been "a wall" of protection to his property, and especially his sheep; it was ungrateful, Ver. 7. Thy shepherds.—In those times, and at the present day, wandering Arabs, under their several chiefs, think that they have a right to exact contributions of provisions, &c. wherever they come. But David, though he lived in the wilderness like the Arab emirs, had not adopted their manners; one of them, at the head of 600 men, would have commanded, from time to time, some provision or other presents from Nabal's servants, for permitting them to feed at quiet, and would have driven them away from the watering-place upon any dislike. David had done nothing of this kind; but had protected them against those who would. See Harmer. l.—Bagster.

Ver. 8. To thy servants, and to thy son David.—Ward remarks, "This mode of address is not unfrequent among the Hindoos: a poor man will often say to a rich man, Oh father! fill the belly of thy son; he is in distress."

Ver. 18. Two hundred loaves.—The eastern bread is generally both thin and small; and answers to our cakes. l.—Bagster.—Two bottles of wine.—This, to our ears, may sound very disproportionate to the other articles; but the therefore, and, in a time of special festivity, cruel to refuse a supply of food in their necessities; and it was no less foolish to refuse such supply to a troop of six hundred men, who had the means of enforcing as a demand, what they at first solicited only as a favour. Whether David had a moral right to make such a demand, is another question; but he was certainly justified by the custom of the times and of the country, and what bottles here must either have been large skin bottles, or earthen jars.—Cake of figs.—Figs cured and then pressed together. Now all this provision was a matter of little worth; and had it been granted in the first instance, it would perfectly have satisfied David, and secured his good offices. l.—Bagster.

Ver. 25. As is his name, so is he.—That is, his name signifies folly, and he is a fool.
Ver. 29. Bound up in the bundle of life.—The expression is here figurative and may refer to binding corn. Our Lord tells us, that in the last great day the wicked shall be "bound up" in bundles, like tares for the fire; these are the bundles of death; but the righteous shall be like sheaves of wheat, gathered into the garner of the husbandman; these are the bundles of life; and so shall they be for "ever with the Lord." Matt. xiii. 30.—Sling out, &c.—This is another beautiful image; the wicked shall be "cast forth" from the divine presence with "violence," as a stone is cast forth from a sling. See Jer. x. 18.

sentence of heart unto my lord, either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath avenged himself: but when the LORD shall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thy handmaid.

32 ¶ And David said to Abigail, "Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

33 And blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from avenging myself with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Israel liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst hasted and come to meet me, surely there had not been left unto Nabal by the morning light any that pisseth against the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, and said unto her, "Go up in peace to thy house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy person.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, he held a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry with him, for he was very drunken: wherefore she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife had told him these things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, Blessed be the LORD, that hath headed the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his servant from evil: for the LORD hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the servants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they spake unto her, saying, David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, Behold, let thy handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

42 And Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of her's that went after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David also took Ahinoam of Jezreel; and they were also both of them his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given Michal his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti the son of Laish, which was of Gallim.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Saul, by the discovery of the Ziphites, cometh to Hachilah against David. 5 David coming into the trench stayeth Abishai from killing Saul, but taketh his spear and cruse. 13 David reproveth Abner, 18 and exhorteth Saul. 21 Saul acknowledgeth his sin.

AND the Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon?

2 Then Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderness, and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness.

4 David therefore sent out spies, and understood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 ¶ And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay in the trench, and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the Hittite, and to Abishai the son of Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay sleeping within the trench; and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

8 Then said Abishai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy unto thy hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear even to the earth at once and I will not smite him the second time.

is an argument more forcible, impelled by hunger. Still more difficult would it be to justify the threat of putting to the sword all Nabal's family, for a fault personally his alone. But we are called neither to justify the laws of war, nor the morals of an undisciplined army. There is something, however, very much like the Christian in David's expression of thankfulness to Abigail, for having been the means of saving him from shedding blood.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1-25. Saul again persecutes David, who gives him another instance of his fidelity, and puts him to utter shame.—We have before seen that the Ziphites were bitter enemies to David, and offered to deliver him into the hands of Saul, but could not take him. Here again they gave information to be king, who came down, with three thousand chosen men, to take him. David had, however, spies upon the look out; and finding where Saul lay, he and Abishai, his nephew, stole secretly into the camp by night; and the latter, knowing David would not touch the Lord's anointed, entreated him only to permit him to strike his enemy dead with one blow. David, as in a former instance, expresses his abhorrence of such a crime, and leaves it to the Lord to avenge his cause, Ver. 42. And became his wife.—[It is probable that David had heard that Saul, to cut off his pretensions to the throne, had married Michal to Phalti; and this justified him in taking Abigail, and it was not then unlawful for a man to have several wives. This conduct of David's corresponds with the manner in which the Oriental princes generally form their matrimonial alliances. "The king of Abyssinia," says Bruce, "sends an officer to the house where the lady lives, who announces to her, that it is the king's pleasure she should remove instantly to the palace. She then dresses herself in the best manner, and immediately obeys. Thence forward he assigns her an apartment in the palace, and gives her a house elsewhere, in any part she chooses."—Baxter. Dr. Clarke thinks, that by this marriage, David became possessed of all Nabal's property, in Carmel and Maon.

Ver. 44. Gallim.—[This town appears to have been situated in the tribe of Benjamin, as it is mentioned in Is. x. 30, with Michmash, Geba, &c.]—B.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 5. Saul lay in the trench.—See Margin. [The word

by visiting Saul with a natural death, or death in battle. He brings away, however, the royal "spear," and the "cruse of water" at Saul's head; and when he had gained some considerable distance "on a hill afar off," he reproaches Abner for not guarding better the king's person, and then exhibits the spear and cruse. Saul, recognising David's voice, cries out, "Is it thy voice, my son David?" David replies, "It is my voice, my lord, O king!" He then remonstrates with him in the same terms as before; and particularly reproaches him for driving him out among the heathen, and subjecting him to temptations to join in their idolatries, as it were bidding him to "Go and serve other gods." Saul now expresses great contrition; "I have played the fool," says he, "and have erred exceedingly." He blesses his son David, and promises no more to seek his hurt. Still David, distrusting promises so often before broken, delivered not himself into his hands, but "went on his way; and Saul returned to his own place," it is to be feared without any change of heart, or of principle, which, indeed, grace only can effect. "Though thou shouldst pray a fool in a mortar," says king Solomon, "yet will not his foolishness depart from him." (Prov. xxvii. 22.)

maagol never signifies a ditch or rampart, but a chariot or wagon way. Nor does it seem to denote a ring of carriages, as Baxter and others interpret the word; for it is not probable that Saul would encumber his army with baggage in so rapid a pursuit, nor that so mountainous a country was practicable for wagons. It appears simply to mean here, the circular encampment, (from agal, "round,") which these troops formed, in the midst of which, as being the place of honour, Saul reposed. An Arab camp, D'Arvieux informs us, is always circular, when the disposition of the ground will permit the price being in the middle, and the troops at a respectful distance around him. Add to which, their lances are fixed near them in the ground all the day long, ready for action. This appears to have been an ancient custom; for Homer, in his description of Diomedes asleep, says, "They found him without before his tent with his arms, and his followers sleeping around him; their shields were placed under their heads, and their spears were fixed upright in the ground, upon their brazen points."—Baxter.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not: for 'who can stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless?

10 David said furthermore, As the LORD liveth, the LORD shall smite him; or his day shall come to die; or he shall descend into battle, and perish.

11 The LORD forbid, that I should stretch forth my hand against the LORD's anointed: but, I pray thee, take thou now the spear that is at his bolster, and the cruise of water, and let us go.

12 So David took the spear and the cruise of water from Saul's bolster; and they gat them away, and no man saw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all asleep; because a deep sleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

13 ¶ Then David went over to the other side, and stood on the top of a hill afar off; a great space being between them:

14 And David cried to the people, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying, Answerest thou not, Abner? Then Abner answered and said, Who art thou that criest to the king?

15 And David said to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to destroy the king thy lord.

16 The thing is not good that thou hast done. As the LORD liveth, ye are worthy to die, because ye have not kept your master, the LORD's anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and the cruise of water that was at his bolster.

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and said, Is this thy voice, my son David? And David said, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

18 And he said, Wherefore doth my lord thus pursue after his servant? for what have I done? or what evil is in my hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his servant. If the LORD have stirred thee up against me, let him accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, cursed be they before the LORD; for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the LORD, saying, Go, serve other gods.

20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for the king of Israel is come out to seek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.

21 ¶ Then said Saul, I have sinned: return, my son David: for I will no more do thee harm, because my soul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David answered and said, Behold the king's spear! and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD render to every man his righteousness and his faithfulness: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to-day, but I would not stretch forth my hand against the LORD's anointed.

24 And, behold, as thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, Blessed be thou, my son David; thou shalt both do great things and also shalt still prevail. So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Saul hearing David to be in Gath, seeketh no more for him. 5 David beggett Ziklag of Achish. 8 He, invading other countries, persuadeth Achish he fought against Judah.

AND David said in his heart, I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul: there is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape into the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in any coast of Israel: so shall I escape out of his hand.

2 And David arose, and he passed over with the six hundred men that were with him unto Achish, the son of Maach, king of Gath.

3 And David dwelt with Achish at Gath, he and his men, every man with his household, even David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the Carmelitess, Nabal's wife.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and he sought no more again for him.

5 ¶ And David said unto Achish, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in some town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achish gave him Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philistines was a full year and four months.

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—12. David flies to Achish king of Gath.—We now see David driven, as it were, to desperation. He can have no confidence in Saul, and even his confidence in God is shaken. He said in his heart, (i. e. to himself,) "I shall (even) now one day perish by the hand of Saul!" And he sees no way to escape out of his hands but by throwing himself into the hands of the Philistines, and entering with his men into the service of Achish, king of Gath, with whom he had before resided, and from whom he had been dismissed as insane. Achish receives him again kindly, and gives him a town to dwell in, where he left his family, and went out with his men continually on predatory excursions. Here it is well we are not called upon to vindicate David's conduct, for we should find it extremely difficult. 1. It was a very censurable degree of unbelief in God, who had delivered and did deliver him, and in whom he had every reason to trust that he would still deliver him. (2 Cor. i. 10.) 2. He throws himself among the heathen; and as in the former case he was guilty of unbelief, in not relying on the divine protection, after being so repeatedly assured he should obtain the kingdom; so in this he is guilty of presumption in going among idolaters, upon the excuse that Saul had driven him. 3. Neither can we justify his conduct, in living by war and plunder; nor his prevarication, in pretending he had been fighting against his countrymen in the south of Judah, &c. when, in fact, he had been fighting against their enemies: nor his cruelty, in destroying every soul among the Geshurites, &c. not on the ground of a divine proscription, but lest they should fly to Gath, and tell Achish: nor his hypocrisy, in pretending that he was hated by his own people, and revolted from them, when in fact he was still faithful to his country, and an enemy to all its enemies. "It is hard (says Dr. Wall) to reconcile this management with justice, truth, or

Ver. 12. Cruise of water.—Probably an earthen jar.—A deep sleep from the LORD.—That is, a supernatural sleep: see Gen. ii. 21. where the same expression is used.

Ver. 20. A flea.—(In Arabic borghooth, Syriac, poorthano), the well known little contemptible and troublesome insect, the flea, seems to be so called from its agility in leaping and skipping, from para, "free," and raash, "to leap, bound." David, by comparing himself to this insect, seems to import, that while it would cost Saul much pains to catch him, he would obtain but very little advantage from it.—As one doth hunt a partridge. Korad certainly denotes the partridge, which is called in Arabic, kiraa. It seems to be so called from the cry or cur which it utters when calling its young. Dr. Shaw says, "The Arabs have another, though a more laborious method of catching these birds; for observing that they become languid and fatigued after they have been hastily put up twice, or thrice, they immediately run in upon them, and knock them down with their zerwatys, or bludgeons as we should call them." Precisely in this manner Saul hunted David, coming hastily upon him, putting him up incessantly, in hopes that at length his strength and resources would fail, and he would become an easy prey to his pursuer.—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Thou shalt both do great things, &c.—Hebrew, "Also doing thou shalt do; and being able thou shalt be able." The idiom is not unaptly rendered,

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 6. Achish gave him Ziklag.—This town was at first given to Judah, and then ceded to Simeon. It was then taken by the Philistines, and now returned back to Judah. Josh. xv. 31. xiv. 5

8 ¶ And David and his men went up, and invaded the Geshurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites: for those nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, as thou goest to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.
9 And David smote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achish.
10 And Achish said, Whither have ye made a road to-day? And David said, Against the south of Judah, and against the south of the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of the Kenites.
11 And David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David, and so will be his manner all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philistines.
12 And Achish believed David, saying, He hath made his people Israel utterly to abhor him; therefore he shall be my servant for ever.

CHAPTER XXVIII.
Achish putteth confidence in David. 3 Saul, having destroyed the witches, 4 and now his fear forsaken of God, 7 seeketh to a witch. 9 The witch, encouraged by Saul, seeth up Samuel. 15 Saul, hearing his ruin, fainteth. 21 The woman with her sons refresh him with meat.
AND it came to pass in those days, that the Philistines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Israel. And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.
2 And David said to Achish, Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of my head for ever.
3 ¶ Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in Shunem: and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in Gilboa.
5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.
6 And when Saul inquired of the LORD, the LORD answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.
7 ¶ Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor.
8 And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee.
9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?
10 And Saul sware to her by the LORD, saying, As the LORD liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.
11 Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.
12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.
13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid:

statute. Neither are we, I suppose, bound to justify or approve all the actions, even of good men, recorded in Scripture. Those people were, indeed, southward of Judah; but Achish understood it, the southern parts of Judea.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—25. The Philistines invade Judea, and Saul consults a witch, at Endor.—Sir Isaac Newton conjectures that the Philistines had, about this time, obtained a great accession to their armies, by a vast number of men which Amasis had driven out of Egypt. This, with the death of Samuel just before, and the understanding that David was turned against Saul, were considerable inducements to renew the war with Israel. On the latter circumstance, in particular, Achish, who appears to have been a very easy, credulous man, seems to have placed much reliance, though his wiser lords, as we shall see presently, thought very differently. But we must now attend to another circumstance, which forms the chief incident of this chapter.

Saul, probably in consequence of the previous advice of Samuel, had "put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land," as decidedly contrary to the divine law; (Deut. xviii. 10—12.) yet he seems to think that there might be some truth in their pretensions; and being unable to obtain an answer to his inquiries by any lawful means, he resolves to try their skill, and accordingly goes to a woman at Endor, (ver. 7.) who had, or was reputed to have, a familiar spirit, and who practised necromancy.

This mysterious event has been differently viewed by critics and commentators; the opinion of the late Bishop Horne is generally adopted, and cannot be better expressed than in his own language:

or, 10. South of Judah.—[David here meant the Geshurites and Gezrites, and Thummim, which people occupied that part of the country which lies to the south of Judah. But Achish, as was intended, understood him in a different sense, and believed that he had attacked his own countrymen. David's answer, therefore, though not an absolute falsehood, was certainly an equivocation intended to deceive, and therefore incompatible with that sense of truth and honour which became him as a prince, and a professor of true religion. From these, and similar passages, we may observe the strict impartiality of the sacred Scriptures. They present us with the most faithful delineation of human nature; they exhibit the frailties of kings, priests, and prophets, with equal truth; and examples of vice and frailty, as well as of piety and virtue, are held up, that we may guard against the errors to which the best men are exposed.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 6. By Urim.—Or, as elsewhere expressed, "By Urim and Thummim." These words evidently mean, lights and perfections, and are thought by many of the Rabbins to refer to some remarkable lustre exhibited by the letters engraved on the precious stones, in a manner that no person can explain or account for. We have met with the expression several times before "Respecting the transaction at Endor, the case, in few words, stands thus: Convinced, by proper evidence, of the authority of the book in which it is related, we of course believe that the several incidents happened as they are there said to have happened. By what power or agency they were brought about, or how the business was conducted, is another question, which (is) confessedly to us, at this distance, of an obscure and difficult nature.

"That God should permit evil spirits, employed by a wretched woman, to summon at pleasure his departed servants from the other world, is not to be imagined. It remains, therefore, either that the whole affair of Samuel's appearance was a contrivance, or that, by the interposition of God, there was a real appearance, which the enchantress did not expect, nor could have effected. The surprise and alarm occasioned in her, seem to point us this way; and there are two instances recorded in Scripture of a proceeding somewhat similar." (See the case of Balaam, Num. xxiii. and that of Abaziah, 2 Kings i.)

"When Saul hoped for a kind answer from Samuel, and it is likely would have had a very favourable one from some pretended Samuel, God was pleased to disappoint both the sorceress and him, by sending the true Samuel with a true and faithful message, quite contrary to what the woman and Saul had expected; which so confounded and disordered him, that he instantly fell into a swoon, and could no longer bear up against the bitter agonies of his mind."

Charles Taylor, the late ingenious Editor of Calmet takes the other side of the question, and considers the whole as a juggle, wrought by the power of ventriloquism, or even some inferior art. He thinks that Saul saw nothing extraordinary in this Bible, but the author has deferred giving an opinion, in hopes of meeting with some probable explanation; but he is disappointed. Moses having said little concerning them, has left room for innumerable conjectures, where, with many pages, and whole volumes of later writers, have been filled. And after all, nothing is more pertinent than the following sentence of Rabbi Kimchi: "He is on the safest side, who frankly confesses his ignorance; so that we need a priest to stand up with Urim and Thummim to teach us what the Thummim were." (Ezra ii. 63.)—Dr. Jennings's Jewish Antiquities, vol. 7. A woman that hath a familiar spirit.—Hebrew, "A mistress of the Ob," (or Aub.) A pythiness, as the Greeks call them. A ventriloquist, probably, as Josephus calls her, for it is certain that this art was practised among the ancients. See Chamber's Cyclopaedia.—Endor.—[Endor, a city of Manasseh, was situated in the plain of Jezreel; and Eusebius and Jerome inform us, that it was a great town in their days, four miles south from Mount Tabor near Nain, towards Scythopolis. This agrees with Meurdrell, who says, that which is seated Nain and Endor; and Burckhardt says, that in two hours and a half from Nazareth, towards Scythopolis or Bisan, they came to the vil for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw <sup>a</sup> gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said unto her, What <sup>a</sup> form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a <sup>m</sup> mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 ¶ And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore <sup>a</sup> distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed <sup>o</sup> from me, and <sup>p</sup> answereth me no more, neither by <sup>q</sup> prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

16 Then said Samuel, Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing <sup>r</sup> the Lord is departed from thee, and is become thine <sup>e</sup> enemy?

17 And the Lord hath done <sup>t</sup> to him, as he spake <sup>u</sup> by <sup>v</sup> me: for the Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thy hand, and given it to thy neighbour, even to David:

18 Because <sup>w</sup> thou obeyedst not the voice of the Lord, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore <sup>x</sup> hath the Lord done this thing unto thee this day.

19 Moreover the Lord will also <sup>y</sup> deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines: and to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the Lord also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines.

20 Then Saul <sup>z</sup> fell straightway all along on the earth, and was sore <sup>a</sup> afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thy handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have put <sup>b</sup> my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thy handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way.

23 But he refused, and said, I will not eat.

but only judged that what she saw was an appearance of Samuel, from her description: and as to the prediction uttered, he thinks it required no inspiration to foretell, deserted as he was by God, and opposed to an enemy very superior in numbers, that both Saul and his sons were likely to be slain.

It must be confessed, however, that the text speaks of Samuel himself as appearing, and addressing Saul; and such was certainly the opinion of the early Jews, particularly of the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, written about three hundred years before Christ, who, speaking of Samuel, says, "After his death he prophesied, and showed to the king his end," &c. Eccles. xli. 20.

Ver. 15. Why hast thou disquieted me?—The state of the dead is, in the Old Testament, uniformly represented as a state of rest, and more especially that of good men, Job iii. 13—17. Samuel therefore saith, "Why hast thou disquieted (or disturbed) me?" The language is wholly figurative.

Ver. 17. Hath done to him.—Margin, "For himself;" but the LXX., Vulgate, and five MSS., read, "to thee," which is more perspicuous.—Boothroyd. The difference in the Hebrew is but half a letter.

Ver. 19. To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me.—That is, in the state of the dead: but nothing can be hence inferred as to their eternal state; for Saul and Jonathan were of opposite characters. Nor is it said "all thy sons," for it was true only of three of them; chap. xxxi. 2.

But his servants, together with the woman, compelled him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 David marching with the Philistines, is disallowed by their princes. 6 Achish dismisseth him, with commendations of his fidelity.

NOW <sup>a</sup> the Philistines gathered together all their armies to <sup>b</sup> Aphek: and the Israelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel.

2 And the lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds, and by thousands: but David and his men passed on in the rere-ward with Achish.

3 Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David, the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me these <sup>c</sup> days, or these years, and I have found no fault <sup>d</sup> in him since he fell unto me unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and <sup>e</sup> the princes of the Philistines said unto him, Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle <sup>f</sup> he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?

5 Is not this David, of whom they <sup>g</sup> sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 ¶ Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, as the Lord liveth, thou hast been upright, and <sup>h</sup> thy going out and thy coming in with me in the host is good in my sight: for <sup>i</sup> I have not found evil in thee since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheless <sup>j</sup> the lords favour thee not.

7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou <sup>k</sup> displease not the lords of the Philistines.

8 And David said unto Achish, But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant so long as I have been <sup>l</sup> with thee him; but the Philistine lords judged very wisely in sending him back to Ziklag. David, however, affects to be hurt at this suspicion of his integrity, though inwardly he must have rejoiced at being thus providentially rescued from a dilemma into which he had been brought by his own folly. For, had he fought for Israel, he must have been a traitor to the hospitable Achish; and if he had fought for the Philistines, he must have been a traitor to God and to his country. From the language of Achish it should appear that through his connexion with David he had obtained some knowledge of the God of Israel—at least enough to swear by his name! which is unhappily all that too many military men, even among Christians, know of the Almighty.

The tenth verse we are disposed to consider, not as the language of Achish himself, but rather as that of the Philistine lords, who seem therein severely to reproach David as having excited to revolt the servants of his late master, Saul. Yet David is not sent back to Judea, but to Ziklag, where he CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 4. Make this fellow return.—[The princes reasoned wisely, according to the common practice of mankind; and it was well for David that they were such good politicians: it was ordered by a gracious Providence that they refused to let David go with them to this battle, in which he must have been either an enemy to his country, or false to his friends and to his trust. Had he fought for the Philistines, he would have fought against God and his country; and had he in the battle gone over to the Israelites he would have deceived and become a traitor to the hospitable Achish. God therefore delivered him from such disgrace; and by the same kind Providence he was sent back to rescue his wives, and the wives and children of his people, from captivity.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. What have I done?—[Whatever David's intentions might be as to the part he was to take in the approaching battle, it is evident, by the ambiguous language which he employs, that he intended to persuade Achish that he would fight against Israel: such insincerity and disingenuity are <sup>h</sup> wholly indefensible.]—Bagster.

unto this day, that I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?

9 And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou art good in my sight, as an angel of God: notwithstanding the princes of the Philistines have said, "He shall not go up with us to the battle."

10 Wherefore now rise up early in the morning with thy master's servants that are come with thee: and as soon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

11 So David and his men rose up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philistines. And the Philistines went up to Jezreel.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Amalekites spoil Ziklag. 7 David asking counsel is encouraged by God to pursue them. 11 By the means of a revived Egyptian he is brought to the enemies, and recovereth all the spoil. 22 David's law to divide the spoil equally between them that fight, and them that keep the stuff. 26 He sendeth presents to his friends.

AND it came to pass, when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the Amalekites had invaded the south, and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire;

2 And had taken the women captives, that were therein: they slew not any, either great or small, but carried them away, and went on their way.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was burned with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And David's two wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David was greatly distressed; for the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: but David encouraged himself in the Lord his God.

7 And David said to Abiathar the priest, Himelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 And David inquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue: for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 ¶ So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Besor, where those that were left behind stayed.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: for two hundred abode behind, which were so faint that they could not go over the brook Besor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and when he had eaten, his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drank any water, three days and three nights.

13 And David said unto him, To whom belondest thou? and whence art thou? And he said, I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and my master left me, because three days ago I fell sick.

14 We made an invasion upon the south of the Cherephites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of Caleb; and we burned Ziklag with fire.

15 And David said to him, Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 ¶ And when he had brought him down, behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, eating and drinking, and dancing, because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day; and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels, and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives.

had left his family, and where he reaps the fruit of his former folly.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1—31. David, on his return, finds Ziklag burnt, and all his property carried off, with the women and the children.—While the army of the Philistines was pushing forward into Judea, David returns to Ziklag, and finds that the Amalekites, against whom he had just before made a predatory excursion, (chap. xxvii. 8.) had taken the advantage of his absence, to burn and plunder the town which Achish had given him. It is probable, however, that this party had not heard of David's cruelty toward their countrymen, but a few days back, or they would have retaliated in a manner no less cruel. David, when he came to reflect, might now see how one error led on to another. Had he not distrusted the providence of God, and said, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul?" he would not have sought refuge among the enemies of his country and his God. Had he not gone to reside among the Philistines, he might not have been necessitated to make predatory excursions to support his troops; nor have been driven to falsehood and prevarication to satisfy Achish. Had it not been for these tales of pretended valour against his own nation, it is likely Achish would not have thought of incorporating his men with the Philistine army, and if he had not marched with them, the Amalekites would never have attacked Ziklag. These considerations probably forced themselves on his attention, while he and all his people were weeping over their misfortunes; and to increase his troubles, the people laid all the blame on him, and even thought of stoning him. David's soul was now greatly distressed, and he returns to seek to know the mind of the Lord, as he had formerly done, and thus encouraged himself in Jehovah his God, who appears to have been forgotten since he had sojourned among idolaters.

Encouraged by the answers received in some unknown way through the ephod of Abiathar (to wit with was doubtless attached the mysterious breast-plate with Urim and Thummim,) he pursues the Amalekites and overtakes them while drinking, and dancing, and feasting upon the spoil. In this situation they become an easy prey, and David, after retaking his wives and children, with those of his companions, makes a great slaughter among them, and brings back all his flocks and herds.

In the course of this expedition, out of the 600 men with Ver. 11. Jezreel.—Jezreel, or Edreulon, was a city of Issachar, afterwards celebrated as the residence of the kings of Israel, delightfully situated in the extensive and fertile plain of the same name, which extends from Scythopolis or Bethshan on the east to mount Carmel on the west. Eusebius and Jerome inform us, that it was in their time a place of considerable consequence, lying between Scythopolis on the east, and Legio on the west; and the latter informs us, that it was pretty near Maximianopolis. The Jerusalem Itinerary places it ten miles west from Scythopolis; and William of Tyre, says it was called Little Gerysion in his time, and that there was a fine fountain in it, whose waters fell into the Jordan near Scythopolis. See verse 1.—Bagster.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 1. On the third day.—[This was the third day after he had left the Philistine army at Aphek, from which place Calmet supposes Ziklag was distant more than 30 leagues.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Two hundred abode behind.—Those who were too weak to proceed farther, stopped to guard the baggage.—Brook Besor.—[This brook or torrent, it is evident from the circumstances of the history, must be in the south west part of Judea, and must empty itself into the Mediterranean sea. In the more particular situation of it writers are not agreed. Some suppose it to be between Gaza and Rhinocurra; but Jerome places it between Rhinocurra and Egypt. It is supposed by some to be the same as the river of the wilderness, (Am. vi. 14.) and the river of Egypt, Jos. xv. 4.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. My master left me.—because I fell sick.—[This is one of the bitterest ingredients in the cup of slavery. (Though they had booty enough, and this poor sick slave might have been carried on an ass or a camel, yet they inhumanly left him to perish, but, in the righteous providence of God, this cruelty was the occasion of their destruction; whilst David's kindness to a perishing stranger and slave was the means of his success, and proved the truest policy.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Cherephites.—[Calmet and others suppose that these people, who inhabited the same district as the Philistines, were the Aborigines of the island of Crete, from which they derived their name.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER XXXI.

19 And <sup>m</sup> there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor anything that they had taken to them: David recovered <sup>n</sup> all.

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drave before those other cattle, and said, This is David's spoil.

21 And David came to the two hundred <sup>o</sup> men, which were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made also to abide at the brook Besor: and to meet the people that were with him: and when David came near to the people, he <sup>p</sup> saluted them.

22 ¶ Then answered all the wicked men and men of <sup>q</sup> Belial, of <sup>r</sup> those that went with David, and said, Because they went not with us, we will not give them <sup>s</sup> ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, my brethren, with that which the Lord hath given us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but <sup>t</sup> as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff: they shall part alike.

25 And it was so from that day forward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel unto this day.

26 ¶ And when David came to Ziklag, he sent of the spoil unto the elders of Judah, even to his friends, saying, Behold a <sup>u</sup> present for you of the spoil of the enemies of the Lord;

27 To them which were in Beth-el, and to them which were in south <sup>v</sup> Ramoth, and to them which were in <sup>w</sup> Jattir,

28 And to them which were in <sup>x</sup> Aroer, and to them which were in Siphmoth, and to them which were in <sup>y</sup> Eshtemoa,

29 And to them which were in Rachal, and to them which were in the cities of the <sup>z</sup> Jerahmeelites, and to them which were in the cities of the <sup>a</sup> Kenites,

30 And to them which were in <sup>b</sup> Hormah, and to them which were in Chorashan, and to them which were in Athach, 31 And to them which were in <sup>c</sup> Hebron, and to all the places where David himself and his men were wont to haunt.

1 Saul having lost his army, and his sons slain, he and his armour-bearer kill themselves. 7 The Philistines possess the forsaken towns of the Israelites. 8 They triumph over the dead carcasses. 11 They of Jabesh-gilead, recovering the bodies of night, burn them at Jabesh, and mournfully bury their bones.

NOW <sup>a</sup> the Philistines fought against Israel: and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down <sup>b</sup> slain in mount <sup>c</sup> Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines followed hard upon Saul and upon his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Melchishua, Saul's <sup>d</sup> sons.

3 And the battle <sup>e</sup> went sore against Saul, and the <sup>f</sup> archers <sup>g</sup> hit him; and he was sore wounded of the archers.

4 Then <sup>h</sup> said Saul unto his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised <sup>i</sup> come and thrust me through, and abuse <sup>j</sup> me. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. Therefore Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise upon his sword, and died with him.

6 So Saul <sup>k</sup> died, and his three sons, and his armour-bearer, and all his men, that same day together.

7 ¶ And when the men of Israel that were on the other side of the valley, and they that were on the other side Jordan, saw that the men of Israel fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, they forsook the cities, and fled; and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his three sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And they cut off his head, and stripped off his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to publish <sup>l</sup> it in the house of their idols, and among the people.

10 And <sup>m</sup> they put his armour in the house of <sup>n</sup> Ashtaroth: and they fastened his body <sup>o</sup> to the wall of Beth-shan.

11 ¶ And when the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead <sup>p</sup> heard <sup>q</sup> of that which the Philistines had done to Saul;

12 All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul and the bodies of his sons from the wall of Beth-shan, and came to Jabesh, and burnt <sup>r</sup> them there.

13 And they took their bones, and buried <sup>s</sup> them under a tree at Jabesh, and fasted <sup>t</sup> seven days.

David, 200 stopped short at the river Besor, being so fatigued that they could proceed no farther; their brethren, therefore, refused them any share of the spoil; but David, considering doubtless that as these men stopped not behind for cowardice, but from fatigue, issued an order which does him much honour, that all should share alike, and it became a law from that day forward. Besides, being now about to return to his own country, he sent presents from the spoil of the enemy to his friends in Judea, and in "all the places which David and his men were wont to haunt."

This chapter is evidently a parenthesis, and the events are thought by some to have occurred even prior to Saul's going to the witch of Endor.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1—13. The battle of mount Gilboa; Israel defeated; Saul and his sons slain, and their corpses shamefully treated.—We are naturally enough prepared to hear of this defeat, by the account of Saul's distressed and forsaken situation, and particularly by Samuel's prediction of his defeat and death. Saul, however, did not fly, as many would have done, but died in the field of battle. Being sorely wounded by the archers, to prevent his falling into the hands of the enemy, he fell upon his own sword, and died a suicide; a crime generally originating in desperation, and the want of fortitude to support calamity.

After the battle, when the enemy came to strip the slain, the Philistines found the bodies of the king and his three sons. The king's head they cut off, (perhaps in revenge of Goliath's), and fastened his body to the wall of Beth-shan, and then spreading the news with great joy throughout the country, sent the armour of Saul and of his sons as trophies and thank-offerings to the temples of their gods.

Thus miserably ends the history of Saul, whose character contains little to be commended, and much to be condemned. His temper appears to be hasty, capricious, violent, and unfor-

Ver. 27. Bethel.—[Probably not the celebrated city of this name, but Bethul, a city of Simeon, (Jos. xix. 4.) supposed to be the same as Bethel, mentioned by Siozomen as belonging to Gaza, well peopled, and having several temples remarkable for their structure and antiquity; and which Jerome says, in his life of Hilarion, was five short days' journey from Pelusium.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXXI. Ver. 1. Gilboa.—[Eusebius and Jerome place this mountain six miles west from Bethshan, where was a large place called Gelbus. The natives still call it Djebel Gilbo.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Took a sword.—[Eth hacherev, rather, "the sword," i. e. his armour-bearer's, who, according to the Jews, was Doeg; and if so, then Saul and his executioner fell by the same sword with which they massacred the priests of God.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. They put his armour in the house of Ashtaroth.—[The Philistines placed the armour of Saul in the temple of Ashtaroth as a trophy of victory, and a testimony of their gratitude, in the same manner as David placed the sword of Goliath in the tabernacle. So Hector promises, "But if I prove victorious, and Apollo vouchsafe me the glory to strip off his armour, and carry it to sacred Troy, then will I suspend it in the temple of the far-darting Apollo." So Virgil describes the temple where Latinus gave audience to the ambassadors of Aeneas, as being adorned with many arms, captive chariots, &c.]—B.

Ver. 12. And burnt them there.—Having no other means of doing honour to the dead, the bodies probably having so far purified that they could not be embalmed. Many, however, deny that the Hebrews ever burned the bodies of the dead. The Chaldee and other versions therefore render the words, "And they burned a light over them there; as they were accustomed to burn over kings."

giving; and his conduct corresponded with it, for he had never learned to govern it, or to restrain his passions. As to religion, the only instance in which he regarded its sacred rites, was one in which he violated a known law, by assuming the priest's office, because Samuel was, as he alleged, somewhat beyond his time; and so little regard had he for the sacred order, that he slew fourscore and five priests (with all the other inhabitants of the town) because one of them had relieved David, his son-in-law, when distressed for food! Yet even Saul could profess a delight in religious exercises. He seems to have been particularly fond of music, and was so charmed with the "Hebrew Melodies," that he could continue in them night and day; and yet some of these very young men with whom he was so pleasantly engaged, were probably among the priests slain in the massacre at Nob. His harp was tuned to sacred harmony, but his heart was not tuned to truth and piety. People may be deeply affected with the outward forms of true religion, who are strangers to its spirit and its influence on the heart.

There is one thing in the case of Saul, which disqualifies us from judging of many circumstances in his conduct; and the like remark may be extended to many other persons whose conduct is alike eccentric and mysterious; in whom bodily disorder, and unrestrained temper, often betray them into actions which their reason and principles must disapprove: such persons, however, would do well to consider that those disorders which are brought on by criminal indulgences, can never be excused thereby. It is an old and trite saying, that "those who murder when drunk, must hang when sober." Those who throw the reins on their guilty passions, must be answerable to God for all the consequences to which those passions lead them. One fault cannot excuse another.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL.

[In this book the sacred writer illustrates the characters and describes the events of his history in the most engaging manner. The weak indulgence of Eli is well contrasted with the firm piety of Samuel. The rising virtues of David, and the sad depravity of Saul, are strikingly opposed. The sentiments and instructions scattered throughout are excellent; and the inspired hymn of Hannah, which much resembles that of Mary, discloses a grand prophecy of the Messiah, or the Anointed of the Lord, whose attributes are proclaimed as those of the exalted Sovereign and appointed Judge of the earth. Besides the internal proofs of the truth of this Sacred history, it may be remarked, that heathen authors have borrowed, or collected from other sources, many particulars of these accounts which the writer gives. We have already given the history of Samuel and Saul, as preserved among the Afghans; similar accounts of which are current among the Orientals. They relate, that Samuel having made his report to God that the Hebrews were resolved to have a king, God gave him a vessel or horn full of oil, and a staff, revealing to him, that the man in whose presence the oil should boil in the vessel, and whose stature should be equal to that staff, was appointed for their king. No sooner was this determination published among the people, than all the chiefs of the tribes came with great eagerness to measure themselves by the staff, and to try if the oil would boil in their presence; but in vain. Saul, otherwise called Sharek, and surnamed Talut, i. e. the Tall, who was no more than a carrier of water, or dresser of leather, came to the prophet among the rest, and immediately the oil began to boil in the vessel, and he was found to be just the height of the miraculous staff. On these tokens, Samuel declared him king; but the heads of the tribes, especially that of Judah, to whom the royal dignity had been promised, expostulated, saying, How can this man be our king, who has no estate? How can he support the expense and dignity of the royal state? Samuel replied, The Lord has chosen him, who disposes of kingdoms without control, to whomsoever he pleases. The Israelites would not yet submit, but insisted on having a sign from Samuel, that they might be assured from God, that this was his will. Samuel answered them, This is the miracle that God gives you to confirm his choice; the ark of the Lord which was taken away by the Philistines, shall be brought back to you by angels. When, therefore, the election of Saul was proclaimed, the Philistines being resolved to conceal the ark of the Lord, which had caused them so many misfortunes by its presence, they hid it in a dunhill, but they were smitten with a shameful disease, which determined them to send it back to the confines of the land of Israel. It was no sooner arrived at this place, than the angels of the Lord took it up, and carried it to the tabernacle of Shiloh; and this miracle secured Saul in his kingdom. (See D'Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. p. 735, 1021.) These traditions may justly be regarded as a confirmation, if such were really wanting, of the Scripture history, and as genuine instances of the variations of tradition from that precision which belongs to truth, even while it approaches near to truth. In reading this and similar tales, it is impossible the observation should escape our notice, how much SUPERIOR the simple narrations of Scripture are to whatever is current elsewhere; what additional authority they derive from their simplicity, and their unlaboured, unassuming manner; what nature there is in them, what ease and verisimilitude. No person whose taste and judgment are undepraved, can hesitate which system to prefer, even supposing the non-existence of other criteria.]—Bagster.

THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED,

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS Book derives its name from the prophet Samuel; but it is evident that he could not have written beyond the twenty-fourth chapter of the preceding Book; and it is probable that this Book, with the latter part of the former, was written by the prophets Gad and Nathan. It bears an exact resemblance to the preceding history, and is likewise connected with that which succeeds. It comprises a period of nearly forty years, from A. M. 2849 to 2889; containing an account of David's receiving intelligence of the death of Saul and Jonathan, with his lamentation over them; his triumph over the house of Saul, and confirmation in the kingdom; his victories over the Jebusites and Philistines; the bringing up of the ark to Jerusalem; the rejection of David's purpose for building a temple, with his prayer on the occasion; his victories over the Philistines, Ammonites, Syrians, &c.; his sin in the matter of Uriah; the divine judgment pronounced against him; his repentance and pardon; with the birth of Solomon; his domestic troubles in consequence; the sin and fratricide of Amnon; the rebellion and death of Absalom, and David's mourning on the occasion; the return of David, with the quelling of Sheba's insurrection; his punishment of the sons of Saul, and last war with the Philistines; his psalm of thanksgiving, his last words, and his mighty men; his offence in numbering the people; its punishment; with his penitence and sacrifice.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

1 The Amalekite, who brought tidings of the overthrow, and accused himself of Saul's death, is slain. 17 David lamenteth Saul and Jonathan with a song.

NOW it came to pass after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the slaughter * of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in Ziklag;

2 It came even to pass on the third day, that, behold, a man <sup>b</sup> came out of the camp from Saul with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head: and so it was, when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

3 And David said unto him, From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel am I escaped.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—27. David receives tidings of the death of Saul and Jonathan, and laments over them.—“David, when dismissed by Achish, came to Ziklag on the third day. (1 Sam. xxx. 1.) Then, in following the Amalekites and fighting one day and part of another, and returning to Ziklag, must be spent, suppose four days; and now two days at Ziklag: so this was the ninth day of David's dismission. The Israelites and Philistines had probably lain encamped some time before they had fought. Saul, after he had viewed the Philistines, went to Endor, and came back before the fight.”—(Dr. Wall's Crit. Notes.)

The first intelligence which David received of the event of CHAP. I. Ver. 6. As I happened, &c.—[The story of this young man appears to be wholly a fiction, formed for the purpose of ingratiating himself with David, as the next probable successor to the crown. There is no fact in the case, except the bringing of the crown and bracelets of Saul, as a sufficient evidence of his death, which, as he appears to have been a plunderer of the slain, he the battle, was by this Amalekite, who came hypocritically arrayed with all the usual signs of mourning, (see Josh. vii. 6.) while his object was, in fact, to claim a reward, for contributing his part to the fatal catastrophe. As his narrative was framed for this purpose, no regard must be paid to it, any farther than it harmonizes with the preceding history; and by that account it appears that this foreigner charged himself with the death of Saul, in which he perhaps had no hand, and thereby brought upon himself that death, from which the truth would possibly have saved him. Thus it often happens, that the very method which liars take to screen their guilt, brings on them condemnation and punishment. This man, however, seems to have stripped from the dead body of the unfortunate monarch. It is remarkable, that Saul, who had forfeited his crown by his disobedience and ill-timed clemency with respect to the Amalekites, should now have the insignia of royalty stripped from his person by one of those very people!—Bagster.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me. And I answered, * Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me: for anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 ¶ Then David took hold on his clothes, and rent * them; and likewise all the men that were with him:

12 And they mourned, and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the Lord, and for the house of Israel; because they were fallen by the sword.

13 ¶ And David said unto the young man that told him, Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

14 And David said unto him, <sup>b</sup> How wast thou not afraid to stretch forth thy hand to destroy the Lord's anointed?

15 And David called one of the young men, and said, Go near, and fall upon him. And he smote him that he died.

16 And David said unto him, Thy blood be upon thy head; for thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, I have slain the Lord's anointed.

17 ¶ And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son:

18 (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow: behold, it is written in the book * of Jasher.)

19 The beauty <sup>m</sup> of Israel is slain upon thy high places: how are the * mighty fallen!

CHAPTER II.

1 David, by God's direction, with his company, goeth up to Hebron, where he is made king of Judah. 5 He commendeth them of Jabesh-gilead for their kindness to Saul. 8 Abner maketh Ish-bosheth king of Israel. 12 A mortal skirmish between twelve of Abner's and twelve of Joab's men. 18 Asahel is slain. 25 At Abner's motion Joab soundeth a retreat. 32 Asahel's burial.

AND it came to pass after this, that David inquired <sup>a</sup> of the Lord, saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And the Lord said unto him, Go up. And David said, Whither shall I go up? And he said, Unto <sup>b</sup> Hebron.

2 So David went up thither, and his two <sup>c</sup> wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail Nabab's wife the Carmelite.

3 And his men <sup>d</sup> that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.

had the misfortune to be believed, and was executed on his own confession, for a crime of which he was not accused, and perhaps not guilty. Having, probably, been one of the plunderers who stripped the slain, he happened to find the crown and diadem of Saul, and brought them to David, in the hopes of obtaining some great reward: and accompanied them with a story, manufactured, as he supposed, to secure that object.

This account, however, confirms the fact of Saul's suicide, for he says, he "leaned upon his lance," or spear; that is, on the point of it; though the more authentic narrative makes it to be his sword. (See 1 Sam. xxxi. 4.) Both accounts agree that he died by suicide; for even admitting that of the Amalekite, he did not slay him till he had fallen on his own weapon.

Though it cannot be matter of surprise that David should lament the fate of his brother Jonathan, it may seem strange to little minds that he should thus mourn for Saul, his chief enemy, and who had been for several years seeking his destruction. Great minds, however, are very differently affected. Alexander wept over Darius, Cæsar over Pompey, and Augustus at the death of Mark Antony.—Death does, or ought to, close all animosities; and heroes cannot view the death of their rivals without recollecting that they also are born to die. The elegy before us is remarkable for poetical beauties, heroic sentiments, and, above all, for intensity of feeling. The encomium on Jonathan's friendship is peculiarly affecting: "Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." In him was united the bravery of the hero, and the tenderness of the softer sex. This history might lead us to expatiate on the blessings of true friendship, and lead our minds to that "friend who sticketh closer than a brother;" but we can barely suggest these ideas to the meditation of our readers.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—32. David is raised to be king over Judah; but Abner adheres to Ish-bosheth, and a civil war takes place.—David had been long since anointed to be Saul's successor; but Abner, Saul's general-in-chief, being jealous of his rising fame, and accustomed to act against him under Saul, sets up Ish-bosheth to oppose him. No serious dispute, however, seems to have arisen between the rival kings, (for David had no animosity against the sons of Saul,) until Abner challenged Joab (David's general) to a combat, between twelve young men on each side, which proved fatal to all that engaged in it, and brought on a sanguinary conflict between the armies, in which there fell on the side of Ish-bosheth, or rather Abner, Ver. 9. Anguish is come upon me.—The sense of the original is very doubtful, as it may be referred either to the mind, as in the text, or to the external dress, as in the margin. The former is the sense adopted by the Targums; but some able critics prefer the latter, and suppose it to refer to a coat of mail (not embroidered, but) formed of iron rings, called chain armour, of which there are still remaining specimens, as well as graphic representations. See Fraser's Gazetteer, No. 219. Some Rabbins render it, "I am seized with the cramp," which has been thought very singular; possibly Saul's meaning was, "I am cramped," confined, restrained: owing to the nature of his armour, now stuck full of the arrows of the enemy, he could no more use his hands.

Ver. 10. The crown . . . and the bracelets.—The former, probably, a fillet of riband only, a diadem set with precious stones, and covered by the helmet. (This was probably worn as an emblem of royalty, as is frequently the case in the East. When the Khalif Cayem Bennislah granted the investiture of certain dominions to an eastern prince, the ceremony was performed by sending him letters patent, a crown, chain, and bracelets. (D'Herbelot.) The bracelets, says Morier, are ornaments fastened above the elbows, composed of precious stones of great value, and are only worn by the king and his sons.)—B.

Ver. 18. The use of the bow.—If this translation be retained, the obvious meaning is, that, seeing Saul and his sons had fallen by the arrows of the enemy, David conceived that the Israelites, during his absence from the army, had neglected this weapon, and therefore ordered them to be immediately instructed in its use. Others render the elegy here mentioned to be called by this name, because it celebrated the bow of Jonathan. Such render it, "He ordered them to be taught (to sing) the bow;" i. e. the funeral ode here recited. So Ep. Louth.—The book of Jasher.—(Or, the upright. So LXX; Targum, siphra deoritha, "the book of the Law;" the Arabic, "the book of Ashee" is the book of Samuel.) This book was probably a collection of divine oracles, written to commemorate remarkable events. [Bagster. But we adhere to the sense given in our note on Josh. x. 13.]

Ver. 21. The shield of Saul.—The long supplementary explanation in italics, "as though he had not been anointed with oil," seems unmeaning and unwarranted; and since the Hebrew negative particle here used is sometimes rendered without, (as in Job viii. 11.) we should rather read, "the passage thence." For there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away;—the shield of Saul without (being) anointed with oil." That is, the shields of the chiefs, which were carefully oiled before going into action, (Isa. xxi. 5.) and probably on their return also, are here dropped from the hands of their wounded masters, which are able no more to wield them.

Ver. 25. Thou wast slain in thy high places.—The meaning probably is, that Jonathan scorned to retreat, or to fight in the rear; but chose the post of honour, and bore the brunt of the engagement.

4 And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah. And they told David, saying, That be men of Jabesh-gilead ⁱ were they that buried Saul.

5 ¶ And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said unto them, Blessed ⁱ be ye of the Lord, that ye have showed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now ⁱ the Lord show kindness and truth unto you: and I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing.

7 Therefore now let your hands be strengthened, and be ye ⁱ valiant: for your master Saul is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them.

8 ¶ But Abner ⁱ the son of Ner, captain of Saul's host, took ⁱ Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim;

9 And made him king over Gilead, and over the Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years. But the house of Judah followed David.

11 And the ⁱ time that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah was seven years and six months.

12 ¶ And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim ⁱ to ⁱ Gibeon.

13 And Joab the son of Zeruiah, and the servants of David, went out, and met ⁱ together by the pool ⁱ of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool.

14 And Abner said to Joab, Let the young men now arise, and play ⁱ before us. And Joab said, Let them arise.

15 Then there arose and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together: wherefore that place was called ⁱ Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day; and Abner was ⁱ beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 ¶ And there were three ⁱ sons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel was as light ⁱ of foot ⁱ as a wild ⁱ roe.

19 And Asahel pursued after Abner; and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left from ⁱ following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and said, Art thou Asahel? And he answered, I am.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of a hill.

(for the former appears to have been but a cipher either in war or government,) three hundred and sixty men, while on the part of David there were slain only nineteen men, beside Asahel, who fell a sacrifice to his own temerity. This seems to have been two years after Ish-bosheth had begun to reign.

Abner having been worsted in the conflict, is of course the first to sue for peace; and Joab gives him to understand it would not have been interrupted, but for the foolish challenge which he had given. It is in war as in law—both parties are sure to lose, though in different degrees. The parallel may hold good also in many instances in another respect; both parties returned to the place they set out from, though neither could recover the lives which had been so rashly sacrificed. Most certainly the peaceable principles of the gospel are not less conducive to human happiness than they are conformable to the divine will.

The vanquished are, we observe, the first to sue for peace; the language of Abner, however, would much better have be-

CHAP. II. Ver. 5. David sent messengers.—[This was a generous and noble act, highly indicative of the grandeur of David's mind. He respected Saul, though he had been grievously injured by him, as the anointed king of Israel, and once his legitimate sovereign; and he loved Jonathan as his most intimate friend.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Be ye valiant.—David doubtless means, on his behalf; for his object evidently was, to attach them to his interest, as well as to compliment them for their conduct towards Saul.

Ver. 10. Ish-bosheth . . . reigned two years.—He evidently reigned above six years; but the sense probably is, that he reigned two years before the challenge took place which follows.

Ver. 14. Let the young men . . . play before us.—The true meaning of the Hebrew word rendered play, is wrestling, or skirmishing, which is common among the Arabs to this day. See Dr. Shato's Travels. Such were the cruel sports of the Roman gladiators, who killed each other for the amusement of the people; and but little better are the prize-fighters of the present day.

Ver. 16. Caught his fellow by the head.—[Probably by the beard or hair of the head. Pistarch, in his Apophthegms, informs us, that all things being ready for a battle, Alexander's captains asked him whether he had any thing else to command them. "Nothing," said he, "but that the Macedonians shave their beards." Parmenio wondering what he meant, "Dost thou not know," said he, "that in fight there is no better hold than the beard?"]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. As a wild roe.—[The word zervet, rather denotes the gazelle or antelope; to be swift in foot was reckoned a great accomplishment in the heroes of antiquity: the swift footed Achilles, is an epithet which Homer gives to that hero no less than thirty times in the course of the Iliad.]—B. Ver. 21. Take his armour.—[It seems that Asahel wished to get the armour of Abner as a trophy; which was also greatly coveted by ancient warriors. Homer's heroes no sooner gain a victory, than without delay they seize the armour of the vanquished foe. But this was rather the privilege of the principal commanders, than of the inferior soldiers. "My friends," cried the prudent Nestor, "Grecians, heroes, children of Mars, let no soldier, greedy of spoil, linger behind to carry his collected wealth to the ships; but let us put our enemies to the sword, and afterwards, at your leisure, you shall strip the dead over all the field."]—Bagster.

Ver. 23. Under the fifth rib.—How the Jews numbered the ribs we know not, nor is the word rib in the original text. Professor Gesenius explains the word to mean the abdomen, others, the groin: the probability seems, that with a sharp pointed spear he smote him below his ribs, so as that it went through his body, and killed him on the spot.

Ver. 27. Joab said.—[This was spoken in allusion to the proposal of Abner, (ver. 14,) which led to the slaughter of twelve young men of each party, and thus provoked the battle. It is probable, that Joab had orders simply to act on the defensive; and would not have attacked the Israelites that day unless compelled; therefore the blame lay upon Abner and Israel.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Bithron.—[Bithron or Bether is probably the same as Bethrus, which is placed in the Antonine Itinerary between Caesarea of Palestine and Diospolis or Lydda, 18 miles from the former, and 22 from the latter. The Jerusalem Itinerary mentions a place called Bethar, 16 miles from Caesarea, and 20 from Diospolis, which is probably the same. The Talmudists say that it was four miles distant from the sea.]—Bagster.

ner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

CHAPTER III.

1 During the war David still waxeth stronger. 2 Six sons were born to him in Hebron. 6 Abner displeased with Ish-bosheth, 12 revolteth to David. 13 David requirith a condition to bring him his wife Michal. 17 Abner, having communed with the Israelites, is feasted by David, and dismissed. 22 Joab, returning from battle, is displeased with the king, and kills Abner. 28 David curseth Joab, 31 and mourneth for Abner.

NOW there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David: but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

2 ¶ And unto David were sons born in Hebron: and his first-born was Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreelitess;

3 And his second, Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; and the third, Absalom the son of Maacah the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur;

4 And the fourth, Adonijah the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah the son of Abital;

5 And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou gone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am I a dog's head, which against Judah do show kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargedst me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

9 So I do God to Abner, and more also, except, as the Lord hath sworn to David, even so I do to him;

10 To translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah, from Dan even to Beer-sheba.

11 And he could not answer Abner a word again, because he feared him.

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his behalf, saying, Whose is the land? saying also, Make thy league with me, and, behold, my hand shall be with thee, to bring about all Israel unto thee.

13 ¶ And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, that is, Thou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring Michal, Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me for a hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, even from Phaltiel the son of Laish.

16 And her husband went with her along weeping behind her to Bahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

17 ¶ And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, Ye sought for David in times past to be king over you:

18 Now then do it: for the Lord hath spoken of David, saying, By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

come him if he had not been the aggressor, by challenging the men of David. True it is, that war is always "bitterness in the latter end." It is bitterness to kings and governments, who lose their most faithful subjects, and most valuable members. It is bitterness to society, cutting all the ties of relationship between parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, and bosom friends. It is bitterness also to the people generally; and so they find it, when the expenses are summed up, and visit them in the form of taxes. Then, indeed, there is but one opinion—"War is bitterness in the latter end!"

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—39. Abner quarrels with Ish-bosheth, and goes over to David, but is slain by Joab.—After an enumeration of David's wives and children, in which we do not feel deeply interested, as it contains not the sacred line of the Messiah, we are introduced to the affairs of Ish-bosheth, son of Saul, and king of Israel. We have already mentioned, that he was supported by Abner, his father's general-in-chief, who really possessed the kingly power, while his new master enjoyed the name only. This is evident from an incident now before us. Abner, it seems, had formed an improper intimacy with one of his late master's concubines, and Ish-bosheth, being king, ventured to call him to account for it. Abner immediately falls into a rage with him, and threatens to transfer the whole kingdom into the hands of David.

David considering himself the rightful heir by divine appointment, makes no scruple to treat with him; but with this previous condition, that he should restore to him Michal, his favourite wife, and Saul's daughter, through his alliance with whom he had become the king's son-in-law. Not trusting, however, to Abner, who was evidently a rough soldier, lest he should employ violent measures with the princess, he sends also to Ish-bosheth to the same effect. There seems something hard in the case of Michal's second husband, who appears strongly attached to her. David, however, had not only a prior claim, but had purchased her by a dowry, which implied the risk of his own life. He had never repudiated her, and had only been separated from her by the violence of her father.

Abner now communicated with the elders of Israel, advising them to take David for their king, and then came and reconciled himself to David. Joab, however, happened to be absent, and was much offended that this business was conducted in his absence. There is no doubt but he was also jealous lest Abner, being an elder general, and a relation of the late king, should supplant him in his influence with David. Joab therefore affected to treat him as a spy, and remonstrated with David for being reconciled to him. Being determined to get rid of such a rival, he sent after him, probably in the king's name, though wholly unknown to him; and having obtained a meeting, treacherously stabbed him, under pretence of avenging the blood of Asahel, his brother. There was, however, this marked difference in the cases; Abner smote Asahel in a time of war, and in his own defence; Joab smote Abner after he had made peace with his master, and when he apprehended no danger. Abner gave Asahel repeated warning that he would strike him, if he continued the pursuit; Joab, on the contrary, took Abner on one side, to speak with him quietly or peaceably. Joab probably considered himself warranted to act thus, in consequence of being the natural avenger of his brother's blood. This law, however, did not apply to persons slain in war; for that would be a system of eternal vengeance. But it did apply to the conduct of Joab himself, who slew Abner treacherously, and was thereby guilty of murder. It is evidently on that principle that David imprecated vengeance on the head of Joab, though he could not execute it, because the sons of Zeruiah, (Joab and his brother,) were too strong for him. Yet it must have been a mortifying thing to Joab to be ordered to take a chief part in the funeral of the man whom he had murdered; much more to CHAP. III. Ver. 1. There was long war.—That is, frequent skirmishes during the rest of Ish-bosheth's reign, which lasted about five years.

Ver. 6. Abner made himself strong.—Hebrew, "Strengthened himself for (or rather in, Heb. bosheth) the house of Saul;" one instance of which was the connexion he formed with one of the late king's concubines, and which gave great offence to Ish-bosheth, as in the next verse.

Ver. 7. Wherefore hast thou gone.—[This action of Abner seems a most evident proof that he intended to seize on the government; and it was so understood by Ish-bosheth.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Am I a dog's head?—[This was a proverbial expression among the Hebrews to denote whatever was deemed worthless and contemptible. Something similar to this was the answer of the Turkish commander at Beer, on the Euphrates, to a request made to see the castle. "Do they," said he, "take me for a child or an ass's head, that they would feed me with sweetmeats, and dupe me with a bit of cloth? No, they shall not see the castle." Drummond's Travels.—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Then said Abner. . . . Go.—By this it appears that Abner was employed to conduct Michal home, and therefore gave the peremptory order to Phaltiel to return.—and he returned.

Ver. 18. The Lord hath spoken of David.—See 1 Sam. xiii. 14.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of Benjamin: and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And David made Abner and the men that were with him a feast.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and will gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest reign over all that thy heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

22 ¶ And, behold, the servants of David and Joab came from pursuing a troop, and brought in a great spoil with them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

23 When Joab and all the host that was with him were come, they told Joab, saying, Abner the son of Ner came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, What hast thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee; why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, that came to deceive thee, and to know thy going out and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, he sent messengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah: but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab took him aside in the gate to speak with him quietly, and smote him there under the fifth rib, that he died, for the blood of Asahel his brother.

28 ¶ And afterward when David heard it, he said, I and my kingdom are guiltless before the Lord for ever from the blood of Abner the son of Ner:

29 Let it rest on the head of Joab, and on all his father's house; and let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abishai his brother slew Abner, because he had slain their brother Asahel at Gibeon in the battle.

31 ¶ And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, Rend your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himself followed the bier.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

33 And the king lamented over Abner, and said, Died Abner as a fool dieth?

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before wicked men, so fellest thou. And all the people wept again over him.

35 And when all the people came to cause David to eat meat while it was yet day, David swore, saying, So do God to me, and more also, if I taste bread, or ought else, till the sun be down.

36 And all the people took notice of it, and it pleased them: as whatsoever the king did pleased all the people.

37 For all the people and all Israel understood that day that it was not of the king to slay Abner the son of Ner.

38 And the king said unto his servants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?

39 And I am this day weak, though anointed king; and these men the sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the Lord shall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedness.

have seen the king and all the people weeping and lamenting over him.

The concluding verse of this chapter would lead us to pity the fate of kings. David, after a thousand dangers and escapes, is quietly seated in the throne of Judah, and the other tribes are about to tender their submission: but, alas! (and such *but*s in every case occur,) though both anointed and enthroned, still he feels his authority is weak, and his own military servants are "too hard" for him. At the moment he is wishing to establish his throne in peace and righteousness, it is stained with blood. "A prince and a great man," both as a general and a statesman, is fallen by the hand of treachery; and David's accession is attended with the pomp—not of a coronation, but a public funeral. In all circumstances, however, David seeks and finds his consolation in the doctrine of a divine providence: "The Lord shall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedness."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—12. Two of Ish-bosheth's Captains murder him, and bring his head to David, who orders them to be executed as traitors.—Though Ish-bosheth could not but feel great uneasiness at the insolence and ambition of Abner, yet he must have felt more when deserted by him, as the king himself appears to have been a man neither of energy, nor talents. If David, who possessed both, complained of the sons of Zeruiah being too strong for him, much more must Ish-bosheth feel his weakness to oppose Abner, who had engrossed all the authority in his own hands. In such circumstances it must be easy to foresee that the tottering throne of Israel would soon fall into other hands. When such an event is anticipated, there are always vermin about a court, who are anxious to provide for their own interests; and it is one of the most painful effects of war, that it trains up many blood-thirsty villains who are always ready to commit either treason or murder, when temptation and opportunity present themselves. This is not meant as an indiscriminate reflection on the military profession, in which there are doubtless many persons, not only of honour, but of piety; but they would have been the same in any other situation of life.

Two traitors of the character just reprobated were found in the establishment of Ish-bosheth. Some of the ancient versions call them "captains of banditti;" and it seems to have been the general practice, in those early and barbarous times, would feel but little objection to the ceremony.)—Bagster.—Followed the bier.—Hebrew, "The bed." Josephus mentions that Herod was carried to the grave on his state bed, gilt and ornamented with precious stones.—Bishop Patrick.

Ver. 33. Died Abner as a fool dieth?—The term fool is here (as elsewhere) used for a criminal. Did Abner die as a condemned criminal? No: he was neither in prison nor in fetters; he was innocent in the matter of Asahel, and suffered as a man falling among thieves.—Hebrew, "the children of iniquity." This was a severe reproof to Joab, and intended to show that David utterly disapproved his conduct: and this, it appears by ver. 36, "pleased all the people."

Ver. 34. Thy hands were not bound.—[The hands of malefactors were usually secured with cords, and their feet with fetters; a custom to which David affectingly alludes in his lamentation over the dust of Abner. Thy hands, O Abner, were not bound, as found to be a malefactor, nor thy feet put in fetters; thou wast treated with honour by him whose business it was to judge thee, and thy attachment to the house of Saul was esteemed rather generous than culpable: as the best of men may fall, so thou fellest by the sword of treachery not of justice.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. What hast thou done.—[Joab and his brother Abishai, David's nephews, had been very faithful and highly useful to him in his distresses; and from gratitude and natural affection, he had inadvertently permitted them to become almost as much ascendancy over him as Abner had over the pusillanimous Ish-bosheth: he trusted and feared them too much, and allowed them all the importance they claimed; which had emboldened them, especially Joab, to a high degree of presumption.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Let there not fail.—The sense is, let there always be in the house of Joab, the unclean, the feeble, the wounded, and the poor. "All these verbs (says Dr. Clarke,) may be rendered in the future, 'It shall rest,' &c. but this question shall be maturely considered, when we come to the imprecatory Psalms v. xxv, &c."

Ver. 30. In the battle.—That the ancient law of the Guel, or avenger of blood, did not apply to the case of persons slain in battle, see 1 Kings ii. 5, 6.—Micheletti on the Laws of Moses.

Ver. 31. David said to Joab.—[David, intending no doubt to punish Joab, and to lessen his authority with the people, commanded him to take upon him the office of chief mourner; but, as his revenge was gratified, his rival moved, and no heavier punishment inflicted, it is probable his hardened mind captains of bands: the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the other Rechab, the sons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin: (for Beeroth <sup>d</sup> also was reckoned to Benjamin:

3 And the Beerothites fled to <sup>e</sup> Gittaim, and were sojourners there until this day.)

4 And Jonathan, Saul's son, had a <sup>f</sup> son that was lame of his feet. He was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of <sup>g</sup> Jezreel, and his nurse took him up, and fled: and it came to pass, as she made haste to flee, that he fell, and became lame. And his name was <sup>h</sup> Mephibosheth.

5 And the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who lay on a bed at noon.

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they smote him under the <sup>i</sup> fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

7 For when they came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bedchamber, and they smote him, and slew him, and beheaded him, and took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Ish-bosheth unto David to Hebron, and said to the king, Behold the head of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul thine enemy, which <sup>j</sup> sought thy life; and the Lord hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

9 ¶ And David answered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said unto them, As the Lord liveth, who <sup>k</sup> hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity,

10 When <sup>l</sup> one told me, saying, Behold, Saul is dead, <sup>m</sup> thinking to have brought good tidings, I took hold of him, and slew him in <sup>n</sup> Ziklag, who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

to make predatory excursions to collect provisions and other booty. In the preceding chapter (ver. 22.) we find Joab had just "returned from pursuing a troop" of this kind, and had brought home much spoil. These Captains were, perhaps, obliged by Abner to lodge their spoil in the king's storehouses, which appear to have joined the palace; and this circumstance gave them an easy access to the king's apartment, where, as is customary in the East during the hot season, he had lain down upon a bed to rest, and probably had fallen asleep. This gave these wretches an opportunity to assassinate their master, in a manner even more base and treacherous than the conduct of Joab to Abner. They doubtless saw that David was rising to power and greatness, and not knowing his principles, supposed that they should recommend themselves to promotion in his court also. David entertained them with the story of the Amalekite, who, on the death of Saul, had brought him his diadem and bracelet; and after upbraiding them with the enormity of their offence, decreed them a like, but more liberal reward; they were not only slain, but gibbeted, as a warning to other traitors, while the head of their master was honourably buried in the tomb of Abner. Thus is villany, in one respect like virtue, "its own reward."

The short paragraph respecting Mephibosheth seems thrown into this chapter by way of parenthesis; perhaps to show

CHAP. IV. Ver. 4. Lame of his feet.—Even "both his feet," chap. ix. 13. The fact appears to be, that by the fall here mentioned, both his ankles were dislocated; and having no one at hand to set them, he never recovered the use of them.

Ver. 6. As though they would have fetched wheat.—[It is still the custom of the East, according to Dr. Perry, to allow the soldiers a certain quantity of corn, with other articles of provision, together with some pay; and as it was the custom also to grind the corn, as needed, at the break of day, these two captains very naturally went the day before to the palace, where the king's stores appear to have been kept, to fetch wheat in order to distribute it to the soldiers under them, to be ground at the accustomed hour in the morning. The princes of the East, in those days, as appears from the history of David, reposed on their couches till the cool of the evening; they therefore came in the heat of the day, when they knew their master would be resting on his bed; and as it was necessary to have the corn before it was needed, their coming at that time, though it might be earlier than usual, excited no suspicion.]—Bagster.—Under the fifth rib.—See note on ch. ii. 23.

12 And <sup>p</sup> David commanded his young men, and they slew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged <sup>q</sup> them up over the pool in Hebron. But they took the head of Ish-bosheth, and buried <sup>r</sup> it in the sepulchre <sup>s</sup> of Abner in Hebron.

CHAPTER V.

<sup>i</sup> The tribes came to Hebron to anoint David over Israel. 4 David's age. 6 He taking Zion from the Jebusites, dwelleth in it. 11 Hiram sendeth to David. 13 Eleven sons are born to him in Jerusalem. 17 David, directed by God, smiteth the Philistines at Baal-perazim, 22 and again at the mulberry-trees.

THEN <sup>a</sup> came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, we <sup>b</sup> are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 Also in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou <sup>c</sup> wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the Lord said to thee, Thou shalt feed <sup>d</sup> my people Israel, and thou shalt be a captain <sup>e</sup> over Israel.

3 So all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league <sup>f</sup> with them in Hebron before the Lord: and they anointed David king over Israel.

4 ¶ David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned <sup>g</sup> forty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah.

6 ¶ And the king and his men went to Jerusalem <sup>h</sup> unto the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: <sup>i</sup> thinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion: the same <sup>j</sup> is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. <sup>k</sup> Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

that the traitors could have nothing to fear from him, who was the next heir to Saul, but was a cripple, equally unable to defend either the country or himself; yet the guardian providence of God preserved him to experience the kindness of David, his father's covenant friend. (See chap. ix.)

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—25. David, being made king over all Israel, takes the strong hold of Zion, and triumphs over all his enemies.—The respect paid by David to Abner, conciliated to him all the tribes of Israel, who made a league with him. Upon this he immediately prepares to retake Jerusalem, which had now fallen back into the hands of the Jebusites, probably during the short reign of Ish-bosheth. The fort had, however, never before been taken, and was judged by the natives to be impregnable: they, therefore, manned it with invalids, the blind and the lame, who hated David's soul; probably veterans in the army who had often fought against David, though now invalids through wounds or age. This appears to have been a desperate undertaking, and therefore it was promised, that he who succeeded should have the chief command. Joab performed this deed of valour, and therefore, as before he was commander-in-chief in Judah, he now became commander-in-chief of all the tribes.

David perceiving that the Lord had established him king over Israel, first built a house, and then furnished it with follows: "Who spake unto David, saying, Thou shalt not come in hither: for the blind and the lame shall drive thee away, by saying, David shall not come in hither." Ver. 8. "And David said, Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites, and through the subterraneous passage reacheth the lame and the blind, who hate the life of David, (because the blind and the lame said, he shall not come into the house,) shall be chief and captain. So Joab, the son of Zeruiah, went up first, and was chief."—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Whosoever getteth up to the gutter.—This was either an aqueduct, or some subterraneous passage, by which they did not apprehend an attack. But such attacks have not been unfrequent in more modern times. Thus Belisarius took Naples, and Edward III. entered Nottingham Castle by a subterraneous passage.—Orient. Lit. No. 434. The words in Italic, "He shall be chief and captain," are inserted from the parallel passage, 1 Chron. xi. 6, which we learn that Joab performed this desperate service.—"That are hated of David's soul."—Rather. "That hate David's soul."—Wherefore they said, &c.—See Margin. "He shall not come into the house," or fort. "By the blind and the lame," we understand invalid troops, which are often placed on garrison duty, and are perhaps the best to defend a fort, though not able to endure the fatigue of marching.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it the city of David. And David built round about from Millo and inward.

10 And David went on, and grew great, and the LORD God of hosts was with him.

11 ¶ And Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and cedar trees, and carpenters, and masons: and they built David a house.

12 And David perceived that the LORD had established him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake.

13 ¶ And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were yet sons and daughters born to David.

14 And these be the names of those that were born unto him in Jerusalem; Shammuah, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon,

15 Ithar also, and Elishua, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

16 And Elishama, and Eliada, and Eliphalet.

17 ¶ But when the Philistines heard that they had anointed David king over Israel, all the Philistines came up to seek David; and David heard of it, and went down to the hold.

18 The Philistines also came and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

19 And David inquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up to the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into my hand? And the LORD said unto David, Go up: for I will doubtless deliver the Philistines into thy hand.

20 And David came to Baal-perazim, and David smote them there, and said, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

21 And there they left their images, and David and his men burned them.

23 And when David inquired of the LORD, he said, Thou shalt not go up; but fetch a compass behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

24 And let it be, when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself: for then shall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

25 And David did so, as the LORD had commanded him; and smote the Philistines from Geba until thou come to Gazer.

CHAPTER VI.

1 David fetcheth the ark from Kirjath-jearim on a new cart. 6 Uzzah is smitten at Perez-uzzah. 11 God bleaseth Obed-edom for the ark. 12 David bringeth the ark into Zion with sacrifices, danceh before it, for which Michal despiseth him. 17 He placeth it in a tabernacle with great joy and feasting. 20 Michal reproving David for his religious joy is childless to her death.

AGAIN, David gathered together all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.

2 And David arose, and went with all the people that were with him from Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God, whose name is called by the name of the LORD of hosts that dwelleth between the cherubims.

3 And they set the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab, that was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of the house of Abinadab which was at Gibeah, accompanying the ark of God: and Ahio went before the ark.

5 And David and all the house of Israel played before the LORD on all manner of instruments made of fir-wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

6 ¶ And when they came to Nachon's more wives and concubines out of Jerusalem, which we should be ready to pronounce quite unnecessary; but the expression seems to intimate that his views were partly political, perhaps with a view of strengthening his connexion with the most powerful families of his tribe; for it does not appear that polygamy much promotes population; for even with us, many a poor working man has often more children than either David or Solomon.

His prosperity, however, only excited the envy of his old enemies the Philistines, who, within a short time made two unsuccessful attacks upon him, in both which the God of Israel manifestly appeared on his behalf; in the former, probably by means of a flood; and in the latter, more evidently by a storm, the circumstances of which are peculiar. David is directed, to fetch a compass behind the enemy, opposite to a certain grove of mulberry trees; but he was to wait and listen till he should hear "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees;" that is, a rising storm of wind and thunder, which would effectually terrify the enemy on the one side, while it was the signal for David's attack on the other. Thus the Lord first smote the host of the Philistines with a tremendous storm, that drove them full against the army of Israel, which, unknown to them, was planted in their rear; then David attacked them on the other side, and smote them "from Geba unto Gazer," two principal cities of the Philistines. Now the reason of this success is laid in David's implicit obedience to the divine precepts—"David did so as the LORD commanded him;" and it is principally on this account, that he is called a man after his own heart. (See on 1 Sam. xiii.)

Ver. 14. Born in Jerusalem.—Comp. 1 Chron. iii. 5, &c.

Ver. 20. Baal-perazim.—See Margin; because there the Lord broke in upon them as "the breach of waters," when they break down their banks.

Ver. 21. There they left their images.—That is, their idols, and David burned them; comp. 1 Chron. xiv. 12. The word used in this chapter, however, is more accurately rendered in the margin. On comparing the two passages, we infer, that David burned part, and carried part away as trophies of his victory.

Ver. 23. Mulberry trees.—The word bachaim, rendered mulberry trees, is rendered by Aquila, pear trees, as the LXX. also render in 1 Chron. xiv. 14, 15, and so the Vulgate in both places has pyrorum. The Rabbins, however, have bacha signifies the mulberry tree; with whom Ursinus agrees. It more probably denotes a large shrub which the Arabs still call baca, from its distilling an odoriferous gum, from bachah, to distil, as tears. Of this opinion

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—23. David brings home the ark, rejoicing before it, but is despised by Michal, Saul's daughter.—David being thus settled in his kingdom, and having made Jerusalem his capital, next concerns measures for bringing up the ark thereto. The ark was brought, as it had been some years before, by the Philistines, upon "a new cart," and accompanied with instruments of music; but, as in the former case, many of the Bethshemites were slain for their presumptuous curiosity, (1 Sam. vi. 19.) so in this case Uzzah, the son of Amiadab, was struck dead for his rashness in touching the ark with his hand, contrary to an express law, (Num. iv. 15.) as if he considered the God of Israel unable to protect his own ark. There is in this, as in many other circumstances under the Old Testament, an exactness required for which we see no reason, and a rigour of punishment which we cannot justify. But the case between parents and children is very similar; the latter cannot always understand the reason of the precept, nor the necessity of the punishment; but if they are satisfied that the parent is both wise and kind-hearted, they will feel it their duty to submit in silence. A man of the world once said to a clergyman of the 17th century, "Sir, I should like your company, but you are so precise." The other instantly replied, "Sir, I serve a precise God." There is in the divine law a precision which cannot be satisfied with any thing short of the command: and, under the Old Testament, that precision extended to all the minutiae of the ritual law.

This "breach upon Uzzah displeased David." That there is much reason for the Lord to be displeased with us cannot be denied; but that man should be displeased and angry with his Maker, is surely out of character: yet, which of us can is Celtis, who quotes a passage from Abulfadl, who describes it as a balsam shrub, having longish leaves, and bearing a large fruit with an acid taste. M. Forskal mentions a tree by the name of baca, with leaves rather ovated, smooth, entire: its berries are poisonous and destructive to the sheep.—B.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 2. Whose name is called.—See Margin; or, as Dr. Clarke renders it, "There the name of the Lord of hosts was called upon." Shem signifies "there," as well as "name."

Ver. 5. Instruments of fir-wood.—Fir-wood, (or deal,) is chiefly used in the formation of musical instruments to the present day. [This place should doubtless be corrected from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xii. 8. where instead of de-chol atzay beroshim, which is literally, "with all trees or wood of fir," we read, dechol oz oovesheerim, "with all their might and with songs." This makes a good sense, while the former makes none: the LXX. has the same reading here.]—Bagster.

threshing-floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen <sup>b</sup> shook it.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him there for his <sup>c</sup> error; and there he died by the ark of God.

8 And David was displeased, because the LORD had <sup>d</sup> made a breach upon Uzzah: and he called the name of the place <sup>e</sup> Perez-uzzah to this day.

9 And David was afraid <sup>f</sup> of the LORD that day, and said, How shall the ark of the LORD come to me?

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David: but David carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

12 ¶ And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because <sup>g</sup> m of the ark of God. So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that when they that bare <sup>h</sup> the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed oxen and fatlings.

14 And David danced <sup>i</sup> before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded <sup>j</sup> with a linen ephod.

15 So <sup>k</sup> David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD with <sup>l</sup> shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, Michal, Saul's daughter, looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she despised him in her heart.

17 ¶ And <sup>m</sup> they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in his <sup>n</sup> place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had <sup>o</sup> pitched for it:

and David offered <sup>p</sup> burnt-offerings and peace offerings before the LORD.

18 And as soon as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, he blessed <sup>q</sup> the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 And <sup>r</sup> he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 Then David returned to bless <sup>s</sup> his household. And Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who <sup>t</sup> uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the hand-maids of his servants, as one of the vain fellows <sup>u</sup> shamelessly uncovereth himself!

21 And David said unto Michal, It was before the LORD, which <sup>v</sup> chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I play before the LORD.

22 And I will yet be more vile than thou, and will be base in mine own sight: and <sup>w</sup> of the maid-servants which thou hast spoken of, of them shall I be had in honour.

23 Therefore Michal the daughter of Saul had no child unto <sup>x</sup> the day of her death.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Nathan first approving the purpose of David to build God a house. 4 after by the word of God forbiddeth him. 12 He promiseth him benefits and blessings in his seed 18 David's prayer and thanksgiving.

AND it came to pass, when <sup>a</sup> the king sat in his house, and the LORD had <sup>b</sup> given him rest round about from all his enemies;

2 That the king said unto Nathan the prophet, See now, I dwell in a house of <sup>c</sup> cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within <sup>d</sup> curtains.

3 And Nathan said to the king, Go, do all that is in thy heart; for the LORD is with thee.

4 ¶ And it came to pass that night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, saying,

5 Go and tell <sup>e</sup> my servant David, Thus saith the LORD, Shalt thou <sup>f</sup> build me a house for me to dwell in?

say, he is never displeased with the conduct of God's providence, or the methods of his grace? This was, however, awfully presumptuous; and well might it be added, "David was afraid of the LORD that day."

The ark remained three months with Obed-edom, and he was blessed while it remained with him, as Abinadab had been before. The ark, as the symbol of the divine presence, demanded attention and respect, and was to be treated with no unholy familiarity; and while David thus treated it, he found no misfortune to attend him. At this he seems highly elated, and, accompanied with shouting and the sound of trumpet, "danced before the ark with all his might." We know that in the East—both in their lamentations and rejoicings—they are far more violent than we are, and use gesticulations that to us would appear ridiculous. So it appears they did even to Michal, Saul's daughter, who saw the procession pass her window, and was much offended. When, therefore, after he had offered sacrifices, and blessed, and refreshed the people, the king returned to bless his own house, (as every man should do;) she met him, not with friendly gratulations, but with irony and reproach. "How glorious was the king of Israel to-day!" said she, when he unrobed himself of his proper vestments, and behaved as if he were a common man! Such seems to have been the meaning of her sarcasms, in which she appears to have forgotten that her own father lay all day and night in that state among the prophets. (1 Sam.

Ver. 6. Put forth his hand.—[Even the Kohathites, who were appointed to carry the ark, after it was covered by the priests, were forbidden to touch it on pain of death; but Uzzah, who certainly was no priest, probably with some degree of irreverence, having presumed to lay his hand upon the ark, which perhaps was not covered, thus incurred the penalty due to his rashness and precipitancy.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. A cake of bread.—Rather, a loaf of bread, a joint of meat, and a gourd-skin of fermented liquor.

Ver. 20. Uncovered himself.—Rather, "divested himself of his royal robes, in order to appear humble before the LORD, by assimilating himself to the condition of one of the priests or Levites: for we find that he was "girded with a linen ephod;" and consequently, no part of his body was exposed, having

xix. 24.) David, however, answers her according to her folly; and reminds her that, much as she might despise him, the LORD had preferred him to all her father's house; and so far was he from considering his rank as debased by these expressions of joy and gratitude, he would humble himself still more to do honour to the LORD. It is a maxim of both Testaments, he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. (Isa. lvii. 15. Luke xiv. 11.) As to David's dancing before the ark, it can never be brought forward with any pretence in favour of modern dancing in a ball-room. It was the simple expression of a joyous and a pious heart. It was not intended to amuse either himself or others. And though his motions were doubtless, in some measure, regulated by the music, it should seem he danced alone, and no longer than he accompanied the ark. His was a religious joy.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—29. David proposes to build a temple; but is told to leave it to his son and successor.—David no sooner takes possession of his new house, (for which his friend King Hiram had furnished both builders and materials,) than he begins to think of the ark which dwelt in curtains, while he dwelt in a house of cedar; and he mentioned to the prophet Nathan a desire to build a house—a temple for the LORD. Nathan at first encourages the design as highly praiseworthy; but at night he receives, in a prophetic vision, an express order for David to decline the project, and leave it to his successor. The particular reason is not here given; but in only put off his outer garments. The terms uncovered or naked frequently mean no more than this in Scripture. So the ancient Germans are said by some writers to have appeared naked; but the representation of Tacitus is "refecta veste superiore," having thrown off their upper garment."—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Therefore wilt I play.—The original term is equally general and comprehensive with the English; it is applied to athletic exercises, ch. ii. 14 and above, ver. 5. to playing on instruments of music.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. When the king sat in his house.—That is, when he came to reside in it.

Ver. 5. Shalt thou build, &c.—The adverb why seems here implied.—Why shouldst thou build? &c.—The LORD had never intimated a command, or even a wish to that effect. The parallel passage in 1 Chron. xvii. 4, is in the negative, but the sense corresponds. "Thou shalt not;—Why shouldst thou?"

6 Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel, spake I a word with any of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me a house of cedar?

8 Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, from following the sheep, to be ruler over my people, over Israel:

9 And I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies out of thy sight, and have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime.

11 And as since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel, and have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the Lord telleth thee that he will make thee a house.

12 ¶ And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 He shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever.

14 I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him in the rod of men, and with the stripes of children of men:

15 But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

16 And thy house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever.

17 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

18 ¶ Then went king David in, and sat before the Lord, and he said, Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

19 And this was yet a small thing in thy sight, O Lord God; but thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. And is this the manner of man, O Lord God?

20 And what can David say more unto thee? for thou, Lord God, knowest thy servant.

21 For thy word's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know them.

22 Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God: for there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?

24 For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, Lord, art become their God.

25 And now, O Lord God, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, establish it for ever, and do as thou hast said.

26 And let thy name be magnified for ever, saying, The Lord of hosts is the God over Israel: and let the house of thy servant David be established before thee.

27 For thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee a house: therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

28 And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

29 Therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it: and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

CHAPTER VIII

1 David subdueth the Philistines and Moabites. 3 He smiteth Hadadezer, and the Syrians. 9 Toi sendeth Joram with presents to bless him. 11 The presents and the spoil David dedicateth to God. 14 He putteth garrisons in Edom. 16 David's officers.

AND after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Betheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philistines.

the parallel passage (1 Chron. xxii. 8.) it is stated to be because he had made "many wars" and shed "much blood;" which, however necessary it might be in his circumstances, was inconsistent with the character of a temple to be erected to the God of peace. His son and successor however, as yet unborn, shall have a reign eminently peaceable and prosperous, and he shall build it. In the mean time God accepts the will for the deed on the part of David, and promises to build him a house, that is, a family, that shall never be destroyed: or, although for a time, through the iniquities of Israel and of their king, the succession may meet with temporary interruption, it shall be restored in a far more glorious form in the person of the Messiah, and after covering the earth with blessings, be "transported to the skies."

The remaining part of this chapter, from ver. 18. is at once so simple and explicit, so sublime and beautiful, so pious and devotional, that to attempt to improve it by our reflections,

Var. 7. With any of the tribes.—[Instead of shvotey, "tribes," we should probably read, with Houbigant, Drs. Waterland and A. Clarke, and others, shvotey, "judges;" which is the reading in the parallel passage. Indeed there is but one letter of difference between them; and letters which might be easily mistaken for each other; the apex under the upper stroke of the pay, being the only mark to distinguish it from the baith. Compare verse 11.]

Var. 18. Sat before the Lord.—Dr. Pococke has given the figure of a person sitting and half kneeling; that is, kneeling so as to rest the most muscular part of his body on his heels. This, he observes, is the manner in which inferior persons sit at this day before great men, and is considered as a very humble posture. In this manner, probably, David sat before the Lord.

Var. 19. And is this the manner (Heb., the law) of men, O Lord God?—That is, do men in general interest themselves thus deeply in the behalf of persons would be like mixing water with the pure wine: let the reader therefore conclude this section by re-perusing those verses.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—18. David conquers his enemies, receives rich presents, and dedicates the spoils to God.—David first attacks the Philistines, from what provocation is unknown; but it is probable Achish was now dead, and David, from his residence there, might have many friends among his people; though the Israelites and Philistines seem to have considered each other as natural enemies.

David next attacks the Moabites. The Rabbins suppose that they might have slain his parents, whom he left under their protection when he was persecuted by Saul, (1 Sam. xxii. 3.) But of this there is no kind of evidence. Belligerent powers, however, never want for grounds of hostility; yet we may hope that David did not engage in this war without sufficient cause, as Moab was not one of the devoted nations. The circumstance mentioned in ver. 2. of measuring Moab, or the unworthy as I am? This will reconcile the sense with that of the parallel passage in 1 Chron. xvii. 17. "Thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree;" that is, far above my rank or merits.

Ver. 23. For you.—Here is evidently some mistake. David is addressing God: the LXX. omit these words; the Vulgate reads, "for them;" so the Arabic, which is adopted by Dr. Boothroyd. The difference here also is but a letter in the original. Compare 1 Chron. xvii. 21.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. Betheg-ammah.—No such place is known, but the parallel in 1 Chron. xvii. 1. explains it of "Gath and her towns." The Vulgate reads, "David removed the bondage of the tribute;" meaning, what the Philistines had used to exact from Israel. Our marginal reading is, "The bride of Ammah;" which is explained to be a metropolis, or mother city, as Gath was, being a royal residence, and the seat of government; which govern ed, or, in the Arabian idiom, bridled all the rest.

2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground: even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. And so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 ¶ David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: and David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for a hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 And from Bethah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much brass.

9 ¶ When Toi king of Hamath heard that David had smitten all the host of Hadadezer,

10 Then Toi sent Joram his son unto David, to salute him, and to bless him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him: for Hadadezer had wars with Toi. And Joram brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass:

11 Which also king David did dedicate unto the Lord, with the silver and gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued:

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalek, and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David gave him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians in the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men.

14 ¶ And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants. And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

15 ¶ And David reigned over all Israel; and David executed judgment and justice unto all his people.

16 And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud was recorder;

17 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests; and Seraiah was the scribe;

18 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites, and David's sons were chief rulers.

CHAPTER IX.

AND David said, Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul, that I may show him kindness for Jonathan's sake?

2 And there was of the house of Saul a servant whose name was Ziba. And when they had called him unto David, the king said unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he said, thy servant is he.

3 And the king said, Is there not yet any of the house of Saul, that I may show the kindness of God unto him? And Ziba said unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a son, which is lame on his feet.

4 And the king said unto him, Where is he? And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he is in the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.

Moabites, with a line, has been differently understood. By some these words are thought to allude to a custom among the sovereigns of the East, when they were threatened with an invasion against any nation to collect all the captives, and make them prostrate themselves upon the ground, and then to divide by a line those who were to be spared from those to be destroyed, which was sometimes determined by casting lots. So Calaneo and L. Cramer, but Bishop Pearson and Dr. Chandler can find no trace of such a custom among the Jews. This latter, observing that the original term not only means a cord or line, but any district of country thus marked out, (Deut. iii. 4; xxiii. 9. Josh. xvii. 4; xix. 9. Ps. xvi. 6.) explains the passage to mean, that after he had surveyed the country, and destroyed the fortresses, ("casting them down to the ground,") then he "measured out two lines, (or tracks of the country,) one track to put to death, and one full (i. e. populous) tract to preserve alive." This represents the far greater part of the people as spared and made tributary; whereas our version seems to imply that a third only of the people were preserved. It is remarkable that the parallel passage in Chronicles (1 Chron. xviii. 2.) says only "that David smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought him gifts." However it be understood, this was a fulfilment of Balaam's prophecy, Num. xxiv. 17, 18. (See Note on that passage.)

David next turns his attention toward Syria, and attacks Hadadezer king of Zobah, (north-east of Canaan,) as he (that is David) went to recover his border at the river Euphrates,

Ver. 2. Hadadezer.—Or, as in ch. x. and in 1 Chron. xviii. 9. "Hadazer;" the d and h in Hebrew being often hardly distinguishable, and therefore mistaken for each other.

Ver. 4. A thousand chariots.—The difference between this and 1 Chron. xviii. 4. is best seen by placing the texts in opposition.

Sauad.—David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen. Chronicles.—David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen.

The word Sauad, as will be seen, is not really enough explained from Chariots; and it is not a small matter, therefore, to suggest the meaning of Sauad as the same as Chariots.—Hence, the phrase is best—See Sauad in Josh. x. 9. The attention should be to the word Sauad, and not to the word Chariots, as in the text, and in Chronicles, supplied in Isaiah and Dr. Clarke's translation, which, however, the context seems to suggest: it is best, and best explained, and best understood.

Ver. 5. Zobah.—From 2 Ch. xii. 3. we learn that Zobah was the district in which Hadazer of Zobah was situated, and consequently lay between the to which it had been promised the dominion of Israel should extend. (Exod. xxiii. 31. Deut. x. 24.) This monarch seems to have had a very powerful army, which David dispersed or destroyed, except what he reserved to grace his triumphs; and when the Syrians of Damascus came to help Hadadezer, he defeated them also, and garrisoned all their country. This brought him an embassy from Toi, king of Hamath, with whom Hadadezer had been at war.

There is considerable apparent difference between the particulars of this victory, as related here, and in the First Book of Chronicles, (ch. xviii. 1.) for which we must refer to the notes below. We shall only remark here, that considering the many thousand copies that must have been taken in MS. by the Jewish scribes, nothing but perpetual miracle could have prevented verbal errors. It is matter of gratulation, that these errors, whatever they may be, affect neither the doctrine nor duties of our religion, which are so plainly inscribed throughout the Bible, that "he that runs may read;" and at that read may understand, if their hearts are not unhappily prejudiced against the truth.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1–13. David rewards Mephibosheth for the kindness of his father Jonathan.—This short chapter seems scarcely to require either note or comment; yet we must not omit to remark the pleasing instance it affords of David's gratitude to his royal friend Jonathan, the son of Saul; it may, indeed, be objected, that his kindness to Mephibosheth was long delayed, for though he was a child when his father died, it should seem that about this time he became land of Israel, and the Emigrants. The central was probably the same as the Sauad mentioned by Ptolemy as a city of Arabia Deserta.—Baker.

Ver. 1. Sauad.—Sauad.—Ornaments, the exact form of which is not known, but the nature of his victory, they were all indicative to the Lord.

Ver. 2. Sauad.—The parallel text in Chronicles supplies different names to the same places, which is easily accounted for by supposing that they may bear different names at the time the books were written; which, indeed, might be easily mistaken from our own history. The same remark may be extended to the names of persons.

Ver. 9. Hamath is supposed to be the famous city Emessa, situated on the Orontes.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 16. Recorder.—See Margin. Whose office it was to keep the public records from which these books were originally compiled.

Ver. 18. Cherethites and Pelethites.—The Targum translates these words "the soldiers and the soldiers."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 3. The kindness of God.—That is, the highest degree of kindness; as the Lord is very good; but, the mountain of God is a very high mountain; besides, this kindness was according to the covenant of God made between him and Jonathan.—Baker.

5 ¶ Then king David sent, and fetched him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammich, from Lo-debar.

Now when Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephibosheth. And he answered, Behold thy servant!

7 ¶ And David said unto him, Fear not: for I will surely show thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldst look upon such a dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul and to all his house.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat: but Mephibosheth thy master's son shall eat bread alway at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

11 Then said Ziba unto the king, according to all that my lord the king hath commanded thy servant, so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

12 And Mephibosheth had a young son, whose name was Micha. And all that dwelt in the house of Ziba were servants unto Mephibosheth.

So Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: for he did eat continually at the king's table; he was lame on both his feet.

CHAPTER X.

His messengers, sent to comfort Hanun the son of Nahash, are villanously treated. The Ammonites, strengthened by the Syrians, are overcome by Joab and Abishai. Shobach, making a new supply of the Syrians at Helan, is slain by David.

AND it came to pass after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun his son reigned in his stead.

himself a father. In excuse for this delay, however, it may be pleaded, that David had been fully occupied; and it was not probably till he accidentally met with Ziba, that he had the opportunity to gain any information respecting him, as he appears to have been brought up in obscurity on the other side of Jordan, and was perhaps in fear of being known as a relic of the unfortunate house of Saul.

David, however, no sooner found him out, than he appointed him a place at his table among the king's sons, restored him his family estate, of which it appears that he had been deprived, and made his father's former servant, Ziba, to be the steward and bailiff of that estate. Thus David showed that he was not insensible to the claims of gratitude, nor had forgotten his vows to Jonathan. While this is commendatory of David, it may reprove us for the neglect of our repeated vows to that "Friend who sticketh closer than a brother!"

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—19. David sends ambassadors to Hanun, whom they are shamefully treated, and David revenges insult by the sword.—David having received kindness, in a way unknown, from Nahash, king of the Ammonites, learning of his death, sends messengers to congratulate him on his succession, and probably to offer him his alliance. His wise courtiers, however, took the men for spies, and treated them as slaves, by cutting off their beards, &c. The king, though despised by Europeans, is held in high respect and greatly valued in the East: the possessor considers it as the greatest ornament; often swears by it; and, in matters of importance, pledges it; and nothing can be more secure

2 Then said David, I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, as his father showed kindness unto me. And David sent to comfort him by the hand of his servants for his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon said unto Hanun their lord, Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king Maacah a thousand men, and of Ish-tob twelve thousand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

9 When Joab saw that the front of the battle was against him before and behind, he chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians:

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

than such a pledge: for its owner will redeem it at the hazard of his life. The beard was never cut off but in mourning, or as a sign of slavery. It is customary to shave the Ottoman princes, as a mark of their subjection to the reigning emperor. (De la Motraye.) The beard is a mark of authority and liberty among the Mohammedans as well as Turks: the Persians who clip the beard, and shave above the jaw, are reputed heretics. They who serve in the seraglios, have their beards shaven as a sign of servitude; nor do they suffer it to grow till the sultan has set them at liberty. Among the Arabians, it is more infamous for any one to appear with his beard cut off, than among us to be publicly whipped or branded; and many would prefer death to such a punishment." (Niebuhr.)

David was not tardy in expressing his resentment, and when the Ammonites heard of it, well aware of the consequences, they sent to hire auxiliary forces to oppose him. David collects therefore all his valiant men, with Joab and Abishai at the head of them. The former addressed his brethren in a short speech, which has never been exceeded by the heroes of either ancient or modern times: "Be of good courage, and let us play the men for the cities of our God: and the Lord do that which seemeth him good." The Lord did so; and, on this occasion, gave David a most signal victory, though it is not easy to ascertain precisely the amount of loss suffered by the enemy. Joab, it is to be feared, was but a hypocrite in all his pretensions to religion; but his address may afford a motto to the Christian soldier—"Let us be of good courage—and the Lord do that which seemeth him good!" The issue, however,

Ver. 10. Shall eat bread, &c.—[The eating at courts was of two kinds; one public and ceremonious the other private. Sir John Chardin understands these passages which speak of a right to eat at the royal table, as denoting out a right to a seat there, when the repast was public and solemn. See MS. note on 1 Ki. ii. 7. he tells us that it was to be understood of the king's table, yet he would want the produce of his lands for food at other times, which it was necessary for Ziba to understand.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. See Harmer's Obs.]—Bagster.

CHAP. X. Ver. 4. Shaved off one half their beards.—We have mentioned above the reverence in which the Asiatics hold their beards; and D'Arvieux gives a remarkable instance of an Arab, who, having received a wound in the upper jaw, chose to hazard his life, rather than suffer the surgeon to take off his beard.—Orient. Cur. No. 104.

Ver. 5. Tarry at Jericho.—This city had probably not been rebuilt since the time of Joshua, and contained, perhaps only some poor cottages, for the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be <sup>a</sup> of good courage, and let <sup>b</sup> us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and the Lord do that <sup>c</sup> which seemeth him good.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians: and they fled <sup>d</sup> before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they gathered themselves together.

16 And Hadarezer sent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond <sup>e</sup> the river: and they came to Helam; and <sup>f</sup> Shobach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and passed over Jordan, and came to Helam. And the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians fled before Israel; and David slew the men of seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thousand <sup>g</sup> horsemen, and smote Shobach the captain of their host, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served <sup>h</sup> them. <sup>i</sup> So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAPTER XI.

1 While Joab besieged Rabbah, David committeth adultery with Bath-sheba. 6 Uriah, sent for by David to cover the adultery, would not go home neither sober nor drunken. 14 He carrieth to Joab the letter of his death. 18 Joab sendeth the news thereof to David. 28 David taketh Bath-sheba to wife.

AND it came to pass, <sup>a</sup> after the year was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that David sent <sup>b</sup> Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried still at Jerusalem.

2 ¶ And it came to pass in an evening-tide, that David arose from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the king's house: and from the roof he saw <sup>c</sup> a woman washing herself; and the woman was very beautiful to <sup>d</sup> look upon.

was, that all David's enemies were subjected, and became tributary; and thus he experienced (as already remarked) a fulfilment of the promises that had been made to Abraham and the other patriarchs. (Compare chap. viii.)

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—27. David being tempted to commit adultery with Bath-sheba, is led on to plan the murder of Uriah.—Alas! what is man! How often have we seen that men who have conquered nations, and destroyed armies, have not been able to resist a single lust. In the heathen world, we are not surprised at this; but to see the champion of Israel—"the man after God's own heart"—the sweet Psalmist of Israel"—thus drawn aside, is a matter of bitter and extreme regret. From this history, however, melancholy as it is, we lower classes. It was therefore a suitable place for the men to array in till their beards were grown. The injury to their clothes was much slighter, and sooner remedied.

Ver. 18. The men of seven hundred chariots.—As the first words of this sentence ("the men of") are an evident supplement, Dr. Chandler applies the destruction to the chariots only; but this does not seem to harmonize with the following member of the sentence, "forty thousand horsemen." Nor does it agree with the parallel passage, 1 Chron. xix. 18, which says, "David slew the Syrians seven thousand men that fought in chariots, and forty thousand footmen." Perhaps the Hebrew word for chariots should, in these and other places, be rendered chariotteers; including not only the drivers, but the men who fought in them; these war-chariots being a sort of open carriages, as represented in ancient sculptures, and in modern paintings.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. After the year was expired.—[The sacred historian seems to intimate that there was on particular time of the year to which military operations were limited; and Josephus informs us that this took place in the beginning of spring. In another part of his works, he says, that as soon as spring was begun, Adad levied and led forth his army against the Hebrews. Antiochus also prepared to invade Judea at the first appearance of spring; and Vespasian marched to Antipatris at the commencement of the same season. The kings and armies of the East, says Chardin, do not march but

4 And David sent messengers, and took her; and she came in unto him, and <sup>d</sup> he lay with her; <sup>e</sup> for she was purified <sup>f</sup> from her uncleanness: and she returned unto her house.

5 ¶ And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, I am with child.

6 And David sent to Joab, saying, Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab sent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him <sup>g</sup> how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered.

8 And David said to Uriah, Go down to thy house, and wash <sup>h</sup> thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the king's house, and there <sup>i</sup> followed him a mess of meat from the king.

9 But Uriah slept at the door of the king's house with all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his house.

10 And when they had told David, saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, Camest thou not from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thy house?

11 And Uriah said unto David, The <sup>j</sup> ark, and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and my lord <sup>k</sup> Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I <sup>l</sup> then go into my house to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David said to Uriah, Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day, and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he made him <sup>m</sup> drunk: and at even he went out <sup>n</sup> to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David wrote a letter <sup>o</sup> to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the <sup>p</sup> hottest battle, and retire ye <sup>q</sup> from him, that he may be <sup>r</sup> smitten, and die.

may draw a strong argument in favour of the truth, and impartiality of the sacred writers. Had this event been recorded by a court sycophant, circumstances would no doubt have been thrown in to excuse the king's conduct; instead of which, in fact, every circumstance is enumerated that could render it detestable before men, or criminal in the sight of God.

With respect to the conduct of Bath-sheba, in the first instance she has been severely censured for the indecent exposure of her person; but whether she was aware of being likely to be overlooked, we know not. Neither are we informed whether she was indulging in the luxuries of a bath, or washing herself in an ordinary way; the original text, which speaks only of "the beauty of her countenance," inclines us to the latter.

Ver. 9. Uriah slept at the door, &c.—This was customary, both to honour

Ver. 14. Write a letter, &c.—[This was the sum of treachery and villainy he made this most noble and gallant man the bearer of letters which prescribed the mode in which he was to be murdered. This case has been supposed to have given rise to the classical story of Bellerophon, Prætor, and Antia. But there seems to be scarcely any correspondence between them, but in the simple circumstance that both Uriah and Bellerophon carried those letters, which contained their own condemnation. The following history is a more accurate counterpart; and shows the despotic and unjust conduct of Asiatic princes, which David imitated on this occasion. "Nour Jehan, signifies the light of the world; she was also called Nour Mahl, or the light of the seraglio; she was wife to one Sher Afkan Khan, of a Turkoman family, who came from Persia to Hindostan in very indigent circumstances. As she was exquisitely beautiful, of great wit, and an elegant poetess, Jehangire, the sulthan, was resolved to take her to himself. He sent her husband, who was scarcely the bravest man in his service, with some troops, to command in Ben

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that he assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab: and there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

18 ¶ Then Joab sent and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the messenger, saying, When thou hast made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king,

20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say unto thee, Wherefore approachedst thou so nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knewest thou not that they would shoot from the wall?

21 Who smote Abimelech the son of Jerubbaesheth? did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why wentest thou so nigh unto the city when ye did fight? when say thou, Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

22 So the messenger went, and came and showed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out into us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

24 And the shooters shot from off the wall upon thy servants; and some of the king's servants be dead, and thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing displease thee, for the sword devoureth one as well as another: make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was past, David sent and fetched her to his house, and she became his wife, and bare him a son. But the thing that David had done displeased the Lord.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Nathan's parable of the ewe lamb causeth David to be his own judge. 7 David, re-proved by Nathan, confesseth his sin, and is pardoned. 15 David incarneth and prayeth for the child, while it liveth. 24 Solomon is born, and named Jedidiah: 26 David taketh Bathsheba, and tortureth the people thereof.

AND the LORD sent Nathan unto David.

And he came unto him, and said unto him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

2 The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds:

3 But the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to dress for the way-faring man that was come unto him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die:

6 And he shall restore the lamb four-fold, because he did this thing, and because he had no pity.

7 ¶ And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul;

8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and I gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

9 Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the LORD to do evil in his sight? thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

10 Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thy house; because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

latter; and her after conduct leads us to hope, that she was not more guilty than the Scriptures represent, which lay all the criminality on David. As to her going to the palace when sent for, it was not optional; and in that age and country, it is probable no woman could suppose that she had a right to refuse the king, however arbitrary or unjustifiable his demands.

As it respects David, here is no palliating circumstance. He took advantage of the casual sight of a handsome woman, to draw her into sin; and to aggravate his guilt, we are told she was a married woman, whose husband was in the king's service, and risking his life in defence of his country. One crime leads on to another; David, when he sent for Bath-sheba, to commit adultery with her, had no design, we may believe, to murder her husband; and therefore his first plan was to send for Uriah, and persuade him to go home; he even made him intoxicated, in hopes that he might be induced to cohabit with her, that he might cover his own guilt. But it soon becomes necessary to plot another and a deeper crime, to conceal the former; and to execute this, he finds it necessary to put on the mask of friendship, and to make Uriah the bearer of his own death warrant. And when the crime was perpetrated, how hypocritically does he speak of it, as a matter of mere chance! "Let not this thing displease thee, the sword devoureth one as well as another."

We must not however pass by the discovery we here have and afterwards sent another with a greater force to cut him off. When he was killed, Nour Jehan was soon prevailed upon to become an empress."—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Observed.—In our military phrase, "reconnoitred;" i. e. surveyed the town, with a view to attack, that he might place Uriah in the post of greatest danger.

Ver. 24. Some of the king's servants be dead.—It is probable that some officers of great distinction were slain, but the death of Uriah was to comfort David. [What abominable hypocrisy was here! He well knew that the death of this noble and gallant man was no chance medley; he was, by his own order, thrust on the sword.]—Bagster of Joab's character, which was that of an accomplished villain, who was ready to join in any crime that might gratify his royal master, though it might cost the life of one of his bravest soldiers. Nor can it be pretended that he was afraid of David; for David, as we have seen, (chap. iii. 39.) was rather afraid of him, whose desperate valour had made him the idol of the army and of the people.

To return to David. Having, after a very short interval of mourning for her husband, (probably a few days only,) made Bath-sheba his wife, the child is born in wedlock, and David was no doubt pleased, to think how well he had got through his difficulties, and avoided public shame: "But the thing which he had done displeased the Lord."

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—31. Nathan reproves and convicts David, and announces his punishment.—Had this narrative occurred in any other historian, we should probably have heard no more of David's complicated crimes. David had attained his object, and covered his guilt by marriage; and it would have been thought, doubtless, a great pity to expose a pious character, like David, to public reproach or shame. But this is not God's way of acting; nor is it the mode of writing adopted by the sacred writers. "There is nothing secret that shall not be revealed." Our tenderness to popular and favourite characters may lead us to endeavour to conceal their blemishes; but the moral government of God demands exposure; and nothing so fully justifies the divine character, as the public Ver. 27. Mourning.—[The whole of her conduct indicates that she observed the form of weeping and mourning for her husband.] She lost a captain, and got a king for her husband; and therefore, "She shed reluctant tears; and forced out groans from a joyful breast!"—Bagster.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. There were two men.—[The bent of this parable is evident: and it was wisely constructed, by not having too near a resemblance, to make David unwittingly pass sentence on himself. It was in David's hand what his own letter was in the hands of the brave but unfortunate Uriah.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. The sword shall never depart.—That is, during David's life time, for Solomon's was a peaceable reign.

11 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun.

12 For thou didst it secretly: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.

13 And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the LORD. And Nathan said unto David, The LORD also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die.

14 Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house. And the LORD struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

16 David therefore besought God for the child; and David fasted, and went in, and lay all night upon the earth.

17 And the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then vex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David arose from the earth, and washed, and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into the house of the LORD, and worshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then said his servants unto him, What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child, while it was alive; but when the child was dead, thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me.

24 ¶ And David comforted Bath-sheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son, and he called his name Solomon: and the LORD loved him.

25 And he sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet; and he called his name Jedidiah, because of the LORD.

26 ¶ And Joab fought against Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.

27 And Joab sent messengers to David, and said, I have fought against Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters.

28 Now therefore gather the rest of the people together, and encamp against the city, and take it: lest I take the city, and it be called after my name.

29 And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it.

30 And he took their king's crown from off his head, the weight whereof was a talent of gold with the precious stones: and it was set on David's head. And he brought forth the spoil of the city in great abundance.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brickkiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jerusalem.

detection, and exemplary punishment, of those who have disgraced the holy religion they have professed, and that sincerely.

The beautiful parable of Nathan needs no explanation, farther than what is given in the application. It may be proper to remark, however, that when God speaks of giving Saul's wives to David, or David's wives to Absalom, it does not mean a license to abuse them, but simply placing them within the power of one or the other; for the sin was wholly theirs. Of David's feelings in this case we have a full exhibition in the 51st Psalm, which is stated to be written on this occasion. In the mean time, the child of this illicit connexion is struck with death; which no doubt increased the poignancy of his feelings, and deepened his repentance. On this occasion, David uses an expression which has been very differently understood: "I shall go to him, (meaning his child,) but he shall not return to me." Supposing this to have reference only to the grave, as some contend, it seems difficult, if not impossible, to draw comfort from the thoughts of death, without the assurance of a future state of consciousness. But the hope of meeting our children and our friends in "another and a better world," is a powerful support under the loss of them, as well as "a hope full of immortality" to ourselves.

Though the LORD took away the child which would have perpetuated David's guilt and shame, he gives him another, which will transmit his name with glory to the latest generation of mortals, and a descendant in his line in whom "all nations" and all generations "shall be blessed."

As we have promised to pay particular attention to infidel objections, we must not omit to notice one derived from the close of this chapter, which is considered of great weight. David, it is alleged, not only plundered Rabbah, but tortured the unfortunate inhabitants, with saws and axes, &c. Dr. Chandler, however, (as Bishop Horne observes,) has given very good reasons why the passage should be rendered in a different manner:—"He (David) brought forth the inhabitants, and put them to the saw, (or rather, to the saw-pits,) and to the iron mines, (or manufactories,) and iron axes, (either to manufacture or work with them;) and transported them to the brick kiln, or rather to the brick frame and hod, to make and

Ver. 11. I will take thy wives.—[That is, (as intimated in the Exposition,) in the course of my providence, I will permit this to be done. Such phrases in Scripture do not mean that God either does or can do evil himself, but only that he permits such evil to be done, as he foresees would be done, and which, had he pleased, he might have prevented.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. David arose from the earth.—This illustrates the ancient custom of mourning, during which it was unusual either to wash or change their apparel.—Ortens, Christ, No. 355.

Ver. 24. Solomon.—That is, "peaceable;" for David was admonished that his successor should have a peaceful reign. (1 Chron. xxii. 9.) It is added, that "the LORD loved him," and therefore was Jedidiah added to his name, which signifies, "beloved of the LORD."

Ver. 26. Rabbah.—[Rabbah, or Rabbath-Ammon, also called Philadelphia, from Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, was situated east of Jordan, and, according to Eusebius, ten miles east from Jazer. It is sometimes mentioned as belonging to Arabia, sometimes to Coelo-Syria; and was one of the cities of the Decapolis east of Jordan. Ptolemy and Josephus extend the region of Perea as far as Philadelphia. It is now called Amman, distant about 19 miles to the S. E. by E. of Szalt, and lies along the banks of a river, called Moiet Amman, which has its source in a pond, at a few hundred paces from the south western end of the town, and empties itself into the Zerka or Jabbok, about four hours to the northward. This river runs in a valley bordered on both sides by barren hills of flint, which advance on the south side close to the edge of the stream. The edifices which still remain, though in a decaying state from being built of a calcareous stone of moderate hardness, sufficiently attest the former greatness and splendour of this metropolis of the children of Ammon. See Burckhardt's Travels in Syria.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. The city of waters.—That part of the city which contained the reservoirs, and supplied the whole with water. Houbigant renders it, "I have drawn off the waters from the city," which agrees with the assertion of Josephus, that "the waters were cut off." See Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 30. A talent of gold.—[If this talent was only seven pounds, as Whiston says, David might have carried it on his head with little difficulty; but this weight, according to common computation, would amount to nearly 114 pounds! Some, therefore, think, that mishkelah, should be taken for its value, not weight; which renders it perfectly plain, as the worth of the crown would be about £2,536 4s. The ancients mention several such large crowns, made more for sight than use.—Athenaus describes a crown of gold that was 24 feet in circumference; and mentions others that were two, some four, and others five feet deep. Ptolemy takes notice of some that were no less than 8 pounds weight. Besides the crown usually worn, it was customary for kings, in some parts, to have such large ones as described, either hung or supported over the throne, where they sat at their coronation or other solemn occasions.]—Bagster.

—But as a talent of gold is commonly reckoned a large hundred pounds weight, it is more probable that the value is here intended; i. e. the gold and jewels set in it, were equal in value to a talent of gold.—Dr. Clarke.

Ver. 31. Put them under saws, &c.—It does not appear that the particle (Beth) here used, ever signifies under, as here rendered; but all the Lexicons allow it to mean, in, with, to, unto, &c. and to put men to the saw, or the axe, naturally means, either to manufacture or to work with them, in sawing

CHAPTER XIII.

Amnon, loving Tamar, by Jonadab's counsel feigning himself sick, ravisheth her. 15 He hateth her, and shamefully turneth her away. 19 Absalom entertaineth her, and consumeth his purpose. 23 At a sheep-shearing, among all the King's sons, he killeth Amnon. 29 David, grieving at the news, is comforted by Jonadab. 37 Absalom fleeth to Geshur.

AND it came to pass after this, that Absalom the son of David had a fair sister, whose name was <sup>a</sup> Tamar; and Amnon the son of David loved her.

2 And Amnon was so vexed, that <sup>b</sup> he fell sick for his sister Tamar; for she was a virgin; and <sup>c</sup> Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

3 But Amnon had a friend, whose name was Jonadab, the son of <sup>d</sup> Shimeah, David's brother: and Jonadab was a very subtle man.

4 And he said unto him, Why art thou, being the king's son, <sup>e</sup> lean <sup>f</sup> from day to day? wilt thou not tell me? And Amnon said unto him, I love Tamar, my brother Absalom's sister.

5 And Jonadab said unto him, Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thyself sick: and when thy father cometh to see thee, say unto him, I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and give me meat, and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it at her hand.

6 ¶ So Amnon lay down, and made himself sick: and when the king was come to see him, Amnon said unto the king, I pray thee, Tamar my sister come, and make me a couple of cakes <sup>g</sup> in my sight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David sent home to Tamar, saying, Now to thy brother Amnon's house, and dress him meat.

So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house; and he was laid down. And she took flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his sight, and did bake the cakes.

And she took a pan, and poured them out before him; but he refused to eat. And Amnon said, Have out all men from me. And they went out every man from him.

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thy hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when she had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and said unto her, Come lie with me, my sister.

12 And she answered him, Nay, my brother, do not force me; for <sup>k</sup> no such thing ought to be done in <sup>l</sup> Israel: do not thou this <sup>m</sup> folly.

13 And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice: but, being stronger than she, forced <sup>n</sup> her, and lay with her.

15 ¶ Then Amnon hated her <sup>o</sup> exceedingly; so that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her. And Amnon said unto her, Arise, be gone.

16 And she said unto him, There is no cause; this evil in sending me away is greater than the other that thou didst unto me. But he would nor hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his servant that ministered unto him, and said, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And she had a garment of divers colours upon her: for <sup>p</sup> with such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his servant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

19 ¶ And Tamar put ashes <sup>q</sup> on her head, and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her, and laid her hand <sup>r</sup> on her head, and went on crying.

20 And Absalom her brother said unto her, Hath <sup>s</sup> Amnon thy brother been with thee? but hold now thy peace, my sister: he is thy brother; <sup>t</sup> regard not this thing. So Tamar remained <sup>u</sup> desolate in her brother Absalom's house.

21 ¶ But when king David heard of all these things, he was very wroth.

22 And Absalom spake unto his brother Ammon, saying, "In short, they reduced the Ammonites to the same state of slavery as they had been reduced to by the Egyptians." (See Exod. v. 18, 19. Deut. iv. 20.)

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—39. Amnon violates his sister Tamar. Absalom assassinates Amnon, and flies to Geshur.—David's sin proceeds to work its own punishment; and as that began in lust, and ended in murder, so we find both mingled in the family feuds which now follow. Amnon pretends sickness, in order to obtain the company of his sister Tamar, whom he cruelly violates; Absalom conceals his resentment, till he finds an opportunity to murder his brother Amnon. Absalom then flies, to prevent his other brothers from taking revenge for the death of Amnon, and afterwards breaks out into open rebellion against his father; and all these events arise for the punishment of David's sin. And thus his own heart, and the hearts of all his family, are torn with distress and anguish inexpressible.

This chapter brings before us some very detestable characters. Amnon was a brute, in that he had no regard to the feelings, the reputation, or the happiness of his sister. He was worse than a brute, in that after he had forced her into sin, he deserted, despised, hated her, and turned her out of doors, as if she had been the guilty party, and had seduced him. Another character, at least equally detestable, was his cousin Jonadab, "a very subtle man," the pander of Amnon's lust, and the accomplice, the planner of all his crimes.

heaving, &c. So to pass through the brick-kilns, is to work in them. The fact appears to be, that David treated the Ammonites as the Egyptians had formerly treated them; made slaves of them.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 8. She took flour.—Dr. Russell says, "The Eastern ladies often wash their own hands, prepare cakes, pastry, &c. in their apartments. And some few particular dishes are cooked by themselves, but not in their apartments; on such occasions, they go to some room near the kitchen." —Made cakes.—Rather, as Parkhurst renders, "and tossed it, wattle-baked, in his sight, and dressed the tossed cakes, halve-evepoth." This will receive illustration from the account which Jackson, gives of the Arabian manner of kneading and baking. "They have a small place built with clay, between two and three feet high, having a hole at the bottom for the convenience of drawing out the ashes, something similar to that of a brick-kiln. The

But the principal thing to be remarked in this chapter, is the powerful and affecting manner in which Tamar pleads and reasons with her wicked brother, and which is thus admirably paraphrased by Bishop Patrick:

"There is something so moving, and the arguments are so strong in Tamar's speech to Amnon, that one would almost wonder why it did not prevail with him to desist. Nay, my brother, do not force me. Here she reminds him of his relation to her, for which she hoped she would have such a reverence as not to meddle with her, much less to offer violence to her, which it was abominable to do, even to a stranger, much more to one of the same blood. For no such thing ought to be done in Israel. Whatever other nations did, who had not the knowledge of God's laws, she begs of him to consider, that they both belonged to a nation which was God's peculiar people; had been instructed better, and therefore should act otherwise. Do not thou this folly. She prays him (besides the scandal it would give) to reflect with himself on the heinousness of the crime, and how highly offensive it would be to the Divine Majesty. And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? She beseeches him (besides the sin against God) to consider the disgrace it would be to her, who, after such a foul act, must be ashamed to look any one in the face. Lastly, she puts him in mind of his own reputation, which so vile an action would tarnish for ever, and make him to be looked upon as a man void of all sense, religion, honour, and humanity: As oven . . . is usually about 15 inches wide at top, and gradually grows wider to the bottom. It is heated with wood; and when sufficiently hot, and perfectly clear from smoke, having nothing but clear embers at bottom, which continue to reflect great heat, they prepare the dough in a large bowl, and mould the cakes to the desired size on a board or stone placed near the oven. After they have kneaded the cake to a proper consistence, they pat it a little, then toss it about with great dexterity in one hand till it is as thin as they choose to make it. They then wet one side of it with water, at the same time wetting the hand and arm with which they put it into the oven." —Bagster.

Ver. 18. A garment of divers colours.—See note on Gen. xxxvii. 3.
Ver. 20. Hold now thy peace, my sister.—Instead of bringing Amnon to justice, in vindication of his sister's injured character, he sullenly meditates revenge; a temper never to be indulged. See ver. 25.

non neither "good nor bad: for Absalom hated "Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

23 ¶ And it came to pass after two full years, that Absalom had "sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim: and Absalom invited all the king's sons.

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants go with thy servant.

25 And the king said to Absalom, Nay, my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable unto thee. And he pressed him: howbeit he would not go, but blessed him.

26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

27 But "Absalom pressed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

28 ¶ Now Absalom had commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's heart is merry "with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, fear not: "have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be "valiant.

29 And the servants of Absalom "did unto Amnon as Absalom had commanded. Then all the king's sons arose, and every man "gat him up upon his "mule, and fled.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king arose, and tare "his garments, and lay "on the earth; and all his servants stood by with their clothes rent.

32 And Jonadab: the son of Shimeah, David's brother, answered and said, Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the "appointment of Absalom this hath been "determined from the day that he forced his sister Tamar.

33 Now therefore let not my lord the king take "the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Joab, snubbing a widow of Tekoah, by a parable, to incline the king's heart to fetch home Absalom; bringeth him to Jerusalem. 25 Absalom's beauty, hair, and children. 28 After two years, Absalom by Joab is brought into the king's presence.

NOW Joab the son of Zeruiah perceived that the king's heart was toward "Absalom.

2 And Joab sent to "Tekoah, and fetched thence a wise woman, and said unto her, I pray then, feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead:

3 And come to the king, and speak on this manner unto him. So Joab put the words in her mouth.

4 ¶ And when the woman of Tekoah spake to the king, she fell "on her face to the ground, and did obeisance, and said, "Help, O king.

5 And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, I "am indeed a widow woman, and my husband is dead.

6 And thy handmaid had two sons, and they for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. Now therefore, I pray thee, speak to the king: for he will not withhold me from thee." Whether she really thought this possible, or only urged it to divert him from his crime, is not clear: but "when the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil," neither argument nor entreaty can turn them from it. The events of this chapter might afford many useful observations, but we have not room to indulge them. We shall only remark the cool indifference with which the wicked Jonadab speaks of the death of Amnon, whom he had led into the sin that caused his untimely end—"Amnon only is dead!" Those who are the most prompt to lead others into ruin, have the least pity on them when they see them fall. There is "no flesh in the heart" of such men; it is all stone.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1-33. Joab employs the woman of Tekoah to persuade David to recal Absalom, and he is reconciled.—We read, in the close of the preceding chapter, that Absalom fled to Geshur, and his father David longed to follow him. Joab, perceiving that the king's heart was toward Absalom, and wishing herein to gratify him, employed the wise woman of Tekoah to plead for his return. By a well-wrought parable, she so far succeeded as to procure his recal to Jerusalem; but it was two years before the king would see him, (much as his heart was toward him,) because he had imbrued his hands in the blood of his brother Amnon. Nothing can be said to excuse the crime of Amnon; yet, as he had not been guilty of her death, Absalom had no right to slay him under the pretence of avenging her. He might, indeed, have had him punished according to the law; but it is to be feared that at this time public morals were much relaxed, and justice much neglected. The king himself must find it very difficult to administer it impartially, while Nathan's words, "Thou art the man," must be whispered in his ears whenever a criminal was brought before him.

That the Mosaic laws were not properly attended to, appears evident even from the case before us, although the story was wrought up with all the art of Joab, and well pleaded by a most ingenious advocate. If the case stated were not wilful murder, were there not cities of refuge for the manslayer? or was this benevolent provision now neglected, and the roads out of repair? But if it were a case of wilful murder, the law was peremptory, and the king himself had no right to pardon. Yet the king pledged himself to do this, merely on the partial representation of the culprit's mother; in which, as in most of his conduct, he appears to have acted more under the influence of his feelings than of his judgment. But to come to the ap-

Ver. 21. He was very wroth.—[The Septuagint and Vulgate add: "But he would not grieve the soul of Amnon his son, for he loved him because he was his first-born." The same addition is found in Josephus; and it is probable that it once formed a part of the Hebrew text.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Let my brother Amnon.—[He urged this with the more plausibility because Amnon was the first-born, and presumptive heir to the crown; and he had dissembled his resentment so long and so well, that he was not suspected.]—Bagster.

Ver. 30. All the king's sons.—Thus public report usually exaggerates! Ver. 37. Absalom fled.—[As Absalom had committed wilful murder, he could not avail himself of a city of refuge; but went to Talmai, king of Geshur, his maternal grandfather.]—Bagster.—Talmai . . . king of Geshur.—His grandfather by his mother's side, chap. iii. 3.

Ver. 38. Geshur.—[This was not the Geshur lying between Philistia and Egypt, (Jos. xiii. 13. 1 Sa. xxvii. 3.) but another in Syria, probably the same as that beyond Jordan, whose inhabitants are joined with those of Maachath.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. And (the soul of) king David longed.—Hebrew, "Was consumed;" i. e. with intense desire to see him. See Job xix. 27.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. Tekoah.—[Tekoah was a city of Judah, situated, according to Eusebius and Jerome, 12 miles south of Jerusalem. Josephus says it was not far from the castle of Herodium; and Jerome says it stood on a hill six miles south from Bethlehem. Dr. Pococke places it at the same distance; and says there are still considerable ruins on the top of a hill, which is about half a mile long and a furlong broad.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. I am indeed a widow.—[It is very possible that the principal facts mentioned here were real; and that Joab found out a person whose circumstances bore a near resemblance to that which he wished to represent. She did not make the similitude too plain and visible, lest the king should see her intention, before she had obtained a grant of pardon; and thus, her circumstances, her mournful tale, her widow's dress, her aged person, (for Josephus says she was advanced in years,) and her impressive manner, all combined to make one united irresistible impression on the heart of the aged monarch.]—Bagster.

two strove together in the field, and there was none to part them, but the one smote the other, and slew him.

7 And, behold, the whole family is risen against thy handmaid, and they said, Deliver him that smote his brother, that we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he slew; and we will destroy the heir also: and so they shall quench my coal which is left, and shall not leave to my husband neither name nor remainder upon the earth.

8 And the king said unto the woman, Go to thy house, and I will give charge concerning thee.

9 And the woman of Tekoah said unto the king, My lord, O king, the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house: and the king and his throne be guiltless.

10 And the king said, Whosoever saith aught unto thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

11 Then said she, I pray thee, let the king remember the Lord thy God, that thou wouldest not suffer the revengers of blood to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. And he said, As the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman said, Let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word unto my lord the king. And he said, Say on.

13 And the woman said, Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? for the king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king hath not fetch home again his banished.

14 For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered again; neither doth God respect any person: yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to speak this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thy handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be comfortable: for as an angel of God, so is my lord the king to discern good and bad: therefore the Lord thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, As thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can turn to the right hand or to the left from aught that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and he put all these words in the mouth of thy handmaid:

20 To fetch about this form of speech hath thy servant Joab done this thing: and my lord is wise, according to the wisdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth.

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and thanked the king: and Joab said, To-day thy servant knoweth that I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of his servant.

23 So Joab arose and went to Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and let him not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 ¶ But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him.

26 And when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it;) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

27 ¶ And unto Absalom there were born three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have lication: it is not to be wondered that David felt the force of it, since it was so much in harmony with his wishes: and at the same time mixed up with a considerable portion of flattery, to make it the more palatable. It is, however, much to be doubted, whether David's conduct was either just or prudent. He received no proof of penitence or reform in Absalom; on the other hand, he no sooner returned, than he began to plot against his father's crown. David had committed himself in promising pardon to the widow's son, while his own was under banishment for a like offence; she therefore well said, that the king himself was "faulty;" that is, inconsistent, in not recalling Absalom. She farther urged him to this on the ground of the uncertainty of human life: "for we must needs die, and are as water spilled on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again;" and from a recollection that God himself hath "devised means that his banished ones be not expelled from

Ver. 7. Quench my coal.—[A striking metaphorical expression used in Scripture to denote a man and his descendants. The heathens used the same similitude: so Plato terms those who escaped Deucalion's deluge, "the few live coals of the human race."—Bagster.
Ver. 10. Bring him to me.—This seems equitable, that the king might hear the other party; but she wanted a pledge upon oath—not to defer the matter of hearing, which would defeat her object.
Ver. 11. Remember the Lord.—The LXX. read, "Make mention of;" call his name to witness. Her object seems to be, to bind the king by an oath, (as Scott observes,) and so David himself appears to have understood it, and he there immediately gives one.
Ver. 14. Neither doth God respect, &c.—See Margin. Perhaps the meaning may be, "God spared the human race, and did not cut us off in Adam, because he had devised means for our restoration by his Son." A respite encouraged hope of pardon; as the crime had been so long unrevenged, she pleads that he might now be rescued wholly from the manslayers.
Ver. 17. Angel of God.—[This is very much like the hyperbolic language which is addressed by the Hindoos to an European when they desire to obtain something from him; "Saheb," say they, "can do every thing. No one can prevent the execution of Saheb's commands. Saheb is God." (Ward's View of the History, &c. of the Hindoos.) Though this expression may be imputed to the hyperbolic genius of these countries, yet there was, perhaps, more of real persuasion than we are apt to suppose. Sir J. Chardin states, that having found fault with the king of Persia's valuation of a rich trinket, the grand master told him that if a Persian had dared to have done such a thing, it would have been as much as his life was worth. "Know," said he, "that the kings of Persia have a general and full knowledge of matters, as sure as it is extensive; and that, equally in the greatest and the smallest things, there is nothing more just and sure than what they pronounce." See Harmer.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. When he polled his head.—That is, cut off his hair, it weighed two hundred shekels. This text has very great difficulty. First, it is not certain Absalom polled his head every year." Dr. Boothroyd renders it, "from time to time;" and it is not certain how long that period might be. Absalom's hair was doubtless very beautiful, and either on that account, or perhaps from a vow to wear it for a certain period, at the end of that period, when it had become no longer bearable, he polled it; and when he weighed it, the weight was remarkable. (If the shekel be allowed to mean the common shekel, the amount will be utterly incredible; for Josephus says, that "two hundred shekels make five mina;" and the mina, he says, "weighs two pounds and a half." But it is probable that the king's shekel was that which Epiphanius and Hesychius say was the fourth part of an ounce, half a stater, or two drachms; the whole amount, therefore, of the 200 shekels is about 50 ounces, which make 4 lb. 2 oz. Troy weight, or 3 lb. 2 oz. Avoirdupois. This need not be accounted incredible, especially as abundance of oil and ointments was used by the ancients in dressing their heads; as is evident, not only from many places in the Greek and Roman writers, but also from several places in the Sacred Writings. Josephus also informs us, that the Jews also put gold dust in their hair, that it might sparkle in the sun. See Bochart.]—Bagster. But others think he referred to the value of it, which, from its beauty, length, and thickness, might be worth two hundred shekels of silver; not that he suffered it to be sold, perhaps, but supposing it had been sold, it might have fetched such a sum. See Stackhouse.

sent him to the king; but he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is near mine, and he hath barley there; go and set it on fire. And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? it had been good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king: and the king kissed Absalom.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Absalom, by fair speeches and courtesies, stole the hearts of Israel. 7 Under pretence of a vow, he obtained leave to go to Hebron. 10 He maketh there a great conspiracy. 13 David, upon the news, fleeth from Jerusalem. 19 Ittai would not leave him. 24 Zadock and Abiathar are sent back with the ark. 30 David and his company go up mount Olivet weeping. 31 He curseth Ahithophel's counsel. 32 Husai is sent back with instructions.

AND <sup>a</sup> it came to pass after this, that Absalom prepared <sup>b</sup> him chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him.

2 And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy <sup>c</sup> came to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel.

3 And Absalom said unto <sup>d</sup> him, See, thy matters are good and right: but there is no man deputed of the king <sup>e</sup> to hear thee.

4 Absalom said moreover, Oh, <sup>f</sup> that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice!

5 And it was so, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him, and kissed him.

6 And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: so <sup>g</sup> Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after forty years, that Absalom said unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay <sup>h</sup> my <sup>i</sup> vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD, in Hebron.

8 For thy servant vowed a vow while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, If the LORD shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the LORD.

him:—considerations which at all times, and under all circumstances, should deeply impress our minds, and influence our gratitude to the divine mercy.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—37. Absalom, after being reconciled to his father, rebels against him, and raises an insurrection, which compels David to leave Jerusalem.—It is a great error in parents, to give preference to children merely for their personal accomplishments; and they generally pay dear for this piece of folly. This was the case with David, who had an evident leaning to Absalom, notwithstanding his keeping him at such a distance as he did, on account of the treacherous murder of his brother Amnon. The king had no objection in his heart to Absalom's return, provided he could find a sufficient

Ver. 7. After forty years.—If this reading be correct, it is impossible to say from whence these forty years should be dated; for to date it (with Lightfoot) from David's anointing, would include great part of the reign of Saul. But the Syriac, Arabic, the Sixtine Edition, and some MSS. of the Vulgate, read "four" only. So Josephus and Theodoret, but no Hebrew MSS. If we admit his reading, the "four years" must be reckoned from the flight of Absalom, 9 And the king said unto him, Go in peace.

So he arose, and went to Hebron.

10 But Absalom sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom reigneth <sup>k</sup> in Hebron.

11 And with Absalom went two hundred men out of Jerusalem, that were called: and they went in their <sup>l</sup> simplicity, and they knew not any thing.

12 And Absalom sent for Ahithophel the Gilonite, David's <sup>m</sup> counsellor, from his city, even from <sup>n</sup> Giloh, while he offered sacrifices. And the conspiracy was strong: for the people <sup>o</sup> increased continually with Absalom.

13 ¶ And there came a messenger to David, saying, The <sup>p</sup> hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.

14 And David said unto all his servants that were with him at Jerusalem, Arise, and let us <sup>q</sup> flee: for we shall not else escape from Absalom: make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly, and <sup>r</sup> bring evil upon us, and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

15 And the king's servants said unto the king, Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall <sup>s</sup> appoint.

16 And the king went forth, and all his household <sup>t</sup> after him. And the king left ten women, which were <sup>u</sup> concubines, to keep the house.

17 And the king went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; and all the <sup>v</sup> Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gittites, six hundred men which came after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

19 ¶ Then said the king to <sup>w</sup> Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee <sup>x</sup> go up and down with us? seeing I go <sup>y</sup> whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, <sup>z</sup> As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept <sup>a</sup> with a loud voice, and all the people passed over; the excuse for receiving him, with which he was now furnished, by the artful management of Joab, and the widow of Tekoah.

No sooner, however, is he returned, than he aspires to distinction in his equipage and servants, and studies the arts of popularity to ingratiate himself among the people, by rendering himself familiar with persons of all ranks, and boasting what great things he would do, provided he were promoted to the magistracy, and made a judge in Israel. Plato long ago observed, that when any one is ambitious to become the tyrant of a popular state, he smiles upon, and kindly salutes all sorts of people, wherever he meets them; avowing that he hates tyranny, and promising great things. So Tacitus relates of Otho, that he used to kiss and shake hands with any one, court king also himself passed over the brook <sup>b</sup> Kidron, and all the people passed over, toward the way of the wilderness.

24 ¶ And lo Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, bearing <sup>d</sup> the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up, until all the people had done passing out of the city.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he <sup>e</sup> will bring me again, and show me both it, and his habitation:

26 But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee: behold, here am I, let <sup>e</sup> him do to me as seemeth good unto him.

27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou a <sup>b</sup> seer? return into the city in peace, and your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

28 See, I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 ¶ And David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head <sup>a</sup> covered, and he went <sup>b</sup> barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up.

31 And one told David, saying, Ahithophel <sup>a</sup> is among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, O Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into <sup>a</sup> foolishness.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, that when David <sup>a</sup> came to the top of the mount, where he worshipped God, behold, Hushai the Archite came to meet him with <sup>a</sup> his coat rent, and <sup>a</sup> earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David said, If thou passest on with me, then thou shalt be a burden <sup>a</sup> unto me:

34 But if thou return to the city, and say unto Absalom, I <sup>a</sup> will be thy servant, O king; as I 37 So <sup>a</sup> Hushai, David's <sup>a</sup> friend, came into the city, and Absalom came into Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Ziba, by presents and false suggestions, obtaineth his master's inheritance. 5 At Bahurim, Shimei curseth. 9 David with patience abstaineth, and restraineth others, from revenge. 15 Hushai insinuateth himself into Absalom's counsel. 20 Ahithophel's counsel.

AND when David was a little past the top of the <sup>a</sup> hill, behold, <sup>b</sup> Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth met him, with a couple of asses saddled, and upon <sup>c</sup> them two hundred loaves of bread, and a hundred bunches of raisins and a hundred of summer fruits, and a bottle of wine.

2 And the king said unto Ziba, What meanest thou by these? And Ziba said, The asses be for the king's household to ride on; and the bread and summer fruit for the young men to eat; and the wine, that <sup>d</sup> such as be faint in the wilderness may drink.

3 And the king said, And where is thy master's son? And Ziba said <sup>a</sup> unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jerusalem: for he said, To-day shall the house of Israel restore me the kingdom of my father.

4 Then said the king to Ziba, Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephibosheth. And Ziba said, I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king.

5 ¶ And when king David came to Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, whose name was <sup>a</sup> Shimei, the son of Gera: he <sup>b</sup> came forth, and cursed <sup>a</sup> still as he came.

6 And he cast stones at David, and at all the and adore the mob, and do every little servile thing, to get possession of the government.

This description answers exactly to the previous conduct of Absalom, and had he succeeded in getting himself established on the throne, there is every reason to expect that his subsequent behaviour would have corresponded. This remark may be thought to bear a political aspect, which the writer studies to avoid; but it is of great importance, that in all countries the mass of the people should be guarded against artful demagogues. Absalom so far succeeded, that he stole away the hearts of the people, and raised such a powerful insurrection, that David himself thought it advisable to leave the city, lest it should be burnt, and the inhabitants destroyed. David had, however, a considerable number of adherents; and among the rest, Ittai, who is supposed to have been the son of Achish, king of Gath, but had been banished by the Philistines, on account of his attachment to David. He was accompanied by six hundred men with their families, (as common in ancient times,) who adhered faithfully to the cause of David; as did also Zadok the priest, and all the Levites, who brought the ark with them; but he ordered them to return with it, fearing, perhaps, lest in the hurry of their flight, some fatal accident might attend it, as in former instances. As to himself, he says, "If I find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again, and show me both it and his habitation;" that is, the tabernacle. "But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee; behold, here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good unto him." This shows how truly David had been humbled under the hand of God since the painful affair of his adultery with the wife of Uriah; and a more affecting picture of penitence on his part, and grief on the part of his attendants, was perhaps never drawn than that which follows: "And David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot; and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up."

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—23. Ahithophel's treason; Ziba's slander of Mephibosheth, and Shimei's curses against David.—We omitted to notice the incident respecting Ahithophel and Hushai, in the close of the preceding chapter, because we think it connects more suitably with this. "One told David, saying, Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, O Lord, I pray thee turn the counsel of Ahithophel to foolishness." This man, we are afterwards told, was "an oracle" of wisdom in his day; (ver. 23.) but David employed another of his old counsellors, Hushai, to act as his

Jer. 23. Kidron.—[The brook Kidron, which is but a few paces broad, runs along the valley of Jehoshaphat, east of Jerusalem, to the south-west corner of the city, and then, turning to the south-east, empties itself into the Dead Sea. Like the Litus, it is dry at least nine months in the year, being only furnished with water in the winter, and after heavy rains: its bed is narrow and deep, which indicates that it must formerly have been the channel for waters which have found some other, and probably subterraneous course.]—Bagster. Ver. 30. Olivet.—Mount Olivet, so called from its abounding with olive trees, is situated east of Jerusalem, being separated from it only by the valley of Jehoshaphat and the brook Kidron. Josephus says it is five stadia, i. e. 625 geometrical paces from Jerusalem; and St. Luke (Ac. i. 12.) says it is a Sabbath day's journey, or about eight stadia distant, i. e. to the summit. It forms part of a ridge of limestone hills, extending from north to south for about a mile; and it is described as having three, or according to others, four summits: the valley and highest of which overlooks the whole of the city, over whose streets and walls the eye roves as if in the survey of a model.—Head covered.—This custom was only practised by persons in great distress, or when convicted of great crimes. Thus Darius, when informed by Tyrites, that enuch, that his queen was dead, and that she had suffered no violence from Alexander, covered his head, and wept a long time; then throwing off the garment that covered him, he thanked the gods for Alexander's moderation and justice.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Two hundred loaves.—The Hebrew loaves were cakes, or biscuits.—Summer fruits.—[These were probably pumpkins, cucumbers, or water-melons; the two latter being extensively used in the East to refresh travellers in the burning heat of the summer; and probably, as Harmer supposes, called summer fruits on this very account.—A bottle.—That is, probably, a goat skin.]

Ver. 2. Asses for the king's.—[This is the eastern mode of speaking when presenting any thing to a great man:—This is for the slaves of the servants of your majesty;] when at the same time the presents are intended for the sovereign himself, and it is so understood.]—Bagster. Ver. 4. Behold, thine are all, &c.—This was rash, as will appear hereafter, and is only to be accounted for from the perturbed state of the king's mind.—I humbly beseech thee.—David was proof against Shimei's abuse, but not against Ziba's flattery.

servants of king David: and all the people and all the mighty men were on his right hand and on his left.

7 And thus said Shimei when he cursed, Come out, come out, thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial:

8 The Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood <sup>k</sup> of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned; and the Lord hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son: and behold, <sup>i</sup> thou art taken in thy mischief, because thou art a bloody man.

9 ¶ Then said Abishai the son of Zeruiah unto the king, Why should this dead dog <sup>m</sup> curse <sup>n</sup> my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king said, What <sup>o</sup> have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? so let him curse, because the Lord <sup>p</sup> hath said unto him, Curse David. Who <sup>q</sup> shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

11 And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants, Behold, my son, which came <sup>r</sup> forth of my bowels, seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjaminite do it? let him alone, and let him curse; for the Lord hath bidden him.

12 It <sup>s</sup> may be that the Lord will look on mine affliction, and that the Lord will requite me good <sup>t</sup> for his cursing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's side over against him, and cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and <sup>v</sup> cast dust.

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves there.

15 ¶ And Absalom, and all the people the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when <sup>w</sup> Hushai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, <sup>x</sup> God save the king, God save the king.

spy; and so to contravene and counteract the counsel of Ahithophel, whereby it was utterly defeated.

Another base character is now placed before us, namely, Ziba, Saul's servant, who by false insinuations against Mephibosheth, procures a grant of Saul's estates, which had been lately conferred upon his master. Shimei, another of Saul's servants, was not the secret, but the open enemy of David, and cursed and abused him to his face: but David had been so completely humbled, partly by the sense of his guilt, and partly by the weight of his afflictions, that he would not suffer him to be hurt; "because (said the king) the Lord hath said unto him, Curse David;" that is, "He hath in his providence permitted him to do so, in order to humble and punish me." No reasonable man can suppose that Shimei had a commission, or even a license for cursing; but this, as other moral evils, was permitted, to correct David's enormous crimes. Good Bishop Hall remarks, "The sin of Shimei's curse was his own; the smart of the curse was God's. God wills that as David's chastisement, that he hates as Shimei's wickedness; that lewd tongue moved from God; it moved lewdly from Satan. Wicked men are never the freer from guilt or punishment, from that hand that God hath in their offensive actions."

Here is a fine contrast in these two characters: Shimei goes on cursing and throwing dirt and stones: David goes on pray-

Ver. 7. Bloody man.—This was certainly a false charge, as respects Saul and his family, to whom, we have seen, David was remarkably tender and forbearing.

Ver. 13. And cast dust.—See Margin. It was an ancient custom, in those wars and arid countries, to lay the dust before a person of distinction, by sprinkling the ground with water. Dr. Pococke and the consul were treated with this respect when they entered Cairo. The same custom is alluded to in the well known fable of Phœdrus, in which a slave is represented going before Augustus, and officiously laying the dust. To throw dust in the air while a person was passing was therefore an act of great disrespect, to do so before a sovereign prince, an indecent outrage. But it is probable that Shimei meant more than disrespect and outrage to this afflicted king. Sir J. Chardin informs us, that in the East, in general, those who demand justice against a criminal throw dust upon him, signifying, that he ought to be put in the grave; and hence the common imprecation among the Turks and Persians, "Be covered with earth," or, "Earth be upon thy head."—Bagster.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, Is this thy kindness to thy friend? why wentest thou not with thy friend?

18 And Hushai said unto Absalom, Nay; but whom the Lord, and this people, and all the men of Israel, choose, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

19 And again, whom should I serve? should I not serve in the presence of his son? as I have served in thy father's presence, so will I be in thy presence.

20 ¶ Then said Absalom to Ahithophel, Give counsel among you what we shall do.

21 And Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Go in unto thy father's concubines, which he hath left to keep the house; and all Israel shall hear that thou art abhorred of thy father: then <sup>a</sup> shall the hands <sup>b</sup> of all that are with thee be strong.

22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon the top of the house; and Absalom went in <sup>c</sup> unto his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel.

23 And the counsel of Ahithophel, which he counselled in those days, was as if a man had inquired at the <sup>d</sup> oracle of God: so was all the counsel of Ahithophel both with David and with Absalom.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Ahithophel's counsel is overthrown by Hushai's, according to God's appointment. 15 Secret intelligence is sent unto David. 22 Ahithophel hangs himself. 25 Amasa is made captain. 27 David at Mahanaim is furnished with provisions.

MOREOVER Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out twelve thousand men, and I will arise and pursue after David this night:

2 And I will come upon him while he is weary <sup>a</sup> and weak-handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him shall flee; and I will smite the king <sup>b</sup> only

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee: the man whom thou seekest is as if all returned: so all the people shall be in peace.

4 And the saying <sup>c</sup> pleased Absalom well, and all the elders of Israel.

5 Then said Absalom, Call now Hushai the ing, and encouraging himself in God. "It may be (says he) that the Lord will look on my affliction, (and my tears,) and requite me good for his cursing this day." Thus, "Out of the eater cometh forth meat," as Samson observes, in his famous riddle; and it is well when we can draw blessings from our afflictions. The following verse, by the late C. Wesley perfectly paraphrases this sentiment:

"Lord, I adore thy righteous will,
Through every instrument of ill
My Father's goodness see;
Accept the complicated wrong
Of Shimei's hand and Shimei's tongue,
As kind rebukes from thee."

CHAP. XVII. ver. 1—29. Ahithophel's counsel defeated by Hushai.—The opposite counsels of Ahithophel and Hushai, are now fairly brought before us. Little did the former think, when he advised Absalom to defile his father's concubines, and as little did Absalom think, when he thus indulged his lust, that this was the express fulfilment of a prophetic threat: (chap. xii. 12.) "I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun." Our sins, as well as our charities, may be committed in secret, but they shall be rewarded openly. (Matt. vi. 4.; x. 26.)

Whatever becomes of man's counsels, "the counsel of God standeth sure." In the first instance, the counsel of Ahithophel was followed, because it agreed with the designs of providence; but in the second instance it did not so agree, and was

Ver. 15. The men of Israel.—These words are wanting in the ancient versions, and in some MSS.

Ver. 21. Go in unto thy father's concubines.—The wives of a conquered king were always the property of the conqueror.—Orient. Litt. No. 503. But for a son to take his father's wives, was an abomination, both among Jews and Gentiles. Absalom, however, was a most profligate and abandoned youth.

Ver. 23. Counsel of Ahithophel.—(The first counsel of this sagacious but wicked man to Absalom was more like an oracle of Satan, both for subtlety and atrocity. He advised the shameless measure just detailed, in order to establish Absalom in the kingdom, and to preclude the possibility of a reconciliation with David.)—Bagster.

CHAP. XVII. ver. 2. I will smite the king only.—Absalom's approval of this, shows that he was not very tender of his father's life; and that he cared not what became of him, so that he got the throne.

Ver. 3. The man whom thou seekest.—That is, David; if he be slain, then all Israel will fly to thee.

Archite also, and let us hear likewise what he saith.

6 And when Hushai was come to Absalom, Absalom spake unto him, saying, Ahithophel hath spoken after this manner: shall we do after his saying? if not; speak thou.

7 And Hushai said unto Absalom, The counsel that Ahithophel hath given is not good at this time.

8 For, said Hushai, thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be chafed in their minds, as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field: and thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

9 Behold, he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place: and it will come to pass, when some of them be overthrown at the first, that whosoever heareth it will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom.

10 And he also that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly melt: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counsel that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, as the sand that is by the sea for multitude; and that thou go to battle in thine own person.

12 So shall we come upon him in some place where he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him and of all the men that are with him there shall not be left so much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one small stone found there.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel. For the Lord had appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Absalom.

15 ¶ Then said Hushai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel; and thus and thus have I counselled.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness, but speedily pass over; lest the king be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

17 Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by En-rogel; for they might not be seen to come into the city: and a wench went and told them; and they went and told king David.

18 Nevertheless a lad saw them, and told Absalom: but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's house in Bahurim, which had a well in his court; whither they went down.

19 And the woman took and spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman said unto them, They be gone over the brook of water. And when they had sought and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass, after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, Arise, and pass quickly over the water: for thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, and they passed over Jordan by the morning light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel saw that his counsel was not followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to his city, and put his household in order, and hanged himself, and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to Mahanaim. And Absalom passed over Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him.

25 ¶ And Absalom made Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab: which Amasa was a man's son, whose name was Ithra an Israelite, that went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahash, sister to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.

26 So Israel and Absalom pitched in the land of Gilead.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the son of Nahash of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Machir the son of Ammiel of Lodebar, and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim, therefore disregarded. Ahithophel (we have seen) was usually consulted as a sacred oracle; but when any man's advice becomes inconsistent with the purpose of God, then "He turneth the wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish." (Isa. xlv. 25.) Thus it was with Ahithophel. Whether it were that his pride was mortified, that the advice of Hushai was preferred before his, or whether he had the discernment to see the cause of Absalom was now lost, we cannot say; but the event was, that he went home and hanged himself; and as this was the first instance of deliberate suicide, so far as we recollect, recorded in the Scriptures, it calls for a distinct remark on that growing crime. We say, the first instance of deliberate suicide; for this man went home, and "put his household in order," whereas Saul and others fell in the field of battle, and did not commit the fatal act till all hope of life was over.

The causes of suicide may be reduced to two principal ones pride and despair, which seem to have been united in the present instance, and perhaps in most others; for where there is a despair of getting through difficulties, there is also generally too much pride to submit patiently to bear them. Persons in desperate circumstances, when they lose the hope of surmount-

Ver. 11. As the sand.—This hyperbole of Hushai's is comparatively tame when compared with the one given by Wilkins, in a translation from the Persian, who mentions an eastern monarch "whose innumerable army, when moved, so filled the heavens with the dust of their feet, that the birds of the air could not rest upon it. His elephants moved like walking mountains, and the earth, oppressed by their weight, mouldered into dust."—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Light upon him as dew.—[This is a very beautiful and expressive figure. The dew in Palestine, and other warm climates, falls fast, sudden, and heavy; and it falls upon every spot of earth, so that not a blade of grass escapes it. It is therefore no inapt emblem of a numerous and active army; and it was, perhaps, for this reason, that the Romans called their light-armed forces torarii.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Shall bring ropes to that city.—This is highly hyperbolic, or perhaps bombastic; for such expressions please the multitude. Yet thus the king of Maturin in Java, seriously proposed pulling down a tower which the Dutch had built, by making his people and elephants pull at a number of chains and ropes, thrown over it.—Orient. Lit. No. 508.

Ver. 17. A wench.—In all other places, our translators render the original either handmaid, bondmaid, or the like.

So when Dr. Perry visited the temple of Luxor, in Egypt, he says, "We were entertained by the Caliph here with great civility and favour, he sent us in return of our presents, several sheep, a good quantity of eggs, bardacks," in return of our presents, several sheep, a good quantity of eggs, bardacks, "the bardacks, he informs us, were earthen vessels, used "to cool and refresh their water in, by means of which it drinks very cool and pleasant in the hottest seasons of the year." (p. 339, 340.) See Harmer, ch. vi. Oh. 3.—And wheat.—Jones says, "Travellers use zumeet, tumet, and imerece. Zumeet is flour mixed with honey, butter, and spice; tumet is flour, done up with organ oil; and imerece is flour mixed with water, for drink. ## CHAPTER XVIII.

1 David, viewing the armies in their march, giveth them charge of Absalom. 6 The Israelites are sore smitten in the wood of Ephraim. 9 Absalom, hanging in an oak, is slain by Joab, and cast into a pit. 18 Absalom's place. 19 Ahimaaz and Cushl bring tidings to David. 33 David mourneth for Absalom.

AND David numbered the people that were with him, and set captains of thousands and captains of hundreds over them.

2 And David sent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abishai the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite. And the king said unto the people, I will surely go forth with you myself also.

3 But the people answered, Thou shalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not care for us; neither if half of us die, will they care for us: but now thou art worth ten thousand of us: therefore now it is better that thou succour us out of the city.

4 And the king said unto them, What seemeth you best I will do. And the king stood by the gate side, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thousands.

5 And the king commanded Joab and Abishai and Ittai, saying, Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom.

6 ¶ So the people went out into the field against Israel: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim;

7 Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, and there was there a great slaughter that day of twenty thousand men.

8 For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured.

9 ¶ And Absalom met the servants of David. And Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11 And, Joab said unto the man that told him, And behold, thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle.

12 And the man said unto Joab, Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in my hand, yet would I not put forth my hand against the king's son; for in our hearing the king charged thee and Abishai and Ittai, saying, Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

13 Otherwise I should have wrought falsehood against mine own life: for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldest have set thyself against me.

14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compassed about and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him: and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18 ¶ Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in ing them, at the same time often want the temper to endure them. So when the affections are crossed by the denial of a beloved object, while they have no hope, they have also no submission. What they cannot expect to gain, they cannot bear to lose. Now Christianity has the only remedy for these evils. It teaches us to despair of nothing, for God is able to deliver us out of every trial, or to support us under it. And as to submission, we are taught to "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God;" to consider all things as working together for our good, and to remember, that whatever we may lose on earth, we have "in heaven a better and more enduring substance." These and many other considerations arising out of the Christian system, are calculated to support the mind under trials; while, on the other hand, the precepts of Christianity absolutely forbid our taking the remedy into our own hands. "Do thyself no harm," was the admonition of the apostle to the jailer, (Acts xvi. 28.) and presumptuous indeed must that man be, who, knowing himself to be a sinner, dares to rush uncalled before the judgment-seat of God.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—33. David's army is victorious, but Absalom is slain.—Notwithstanding the disaffection which Absalom had excited among the people, it is plain that David was still much beloved, from the presents which were brought to him in the wilderness, as mentioned in the close of the preceding chapter. Not only so, but the people gathered around him so rapidly, that he soon mustered a numerous army, with captains over hundreds and over thousands. This army he cools and refreshes tired and weary spirits," &c.]—Bagster.—Parched corn.—See note on Ruth ii. 14.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 4. By hundreds.—[David's small company, by this time, was greatly recruited; but with its number was we cannot tell. Josephus says it amounted only to 4000 men.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. Devoured.—See Margin. [That is, probably, many more were slain in pursuit through the wood than in the battle; by falling into swamps, pits, &c. and being entangled and cut down by David's men. Such is the relation of Josephus; but the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic state, that they were devoured by wild beasts in the wood.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. His head caught.—[Some suppose that Absalom was caught by the hair; but it seems more probable that his head and neck were caught in the forks of a strong bough, as he was nearly dead when Joab found him. ver. 14.]—B.

Ver. 11. And a girdle.—See 1 Sam. xviii. 4. and note.

Ver. 17. Heap of stones.—[This was the ancient method of burying, whether heroes or traitors; the heap of stones being designed to perpetuate the memory of the event whether good or bad. The Arabs in general make use of divided into three parts, under his most experienced generals, proposing himself to accompany them, in which design one of his motives undoubtedly was, to watch over the personal safety of his son; but the people, knowing that his own life was aimed at, persuaded him to stop behind. "Thou art worth (say they) ten thousand of us: therefore now it is better that thou stop behind, and, if need be, 'succour us' with supplies of provisions or of men, 'out of the city,' that is, Mahanaim, a town on the border of the wilderness. To this the king at length accedes; but, with the heart of a father, gives to Joab and the army, a special charge to be careful of the life of Absalom, his darling though rebellious son. We cannot but here observe the difference between this conduct and that of Absalom himself, who, when Ahithophel proposed to 'smite the king only' (chap. xvii. 2.) gave no such charge respecting David. Rebellion, we are told, is as the sin of witchcraft, (1 Sam. xv. 23.) not only as to its magnitude, but its progress, leading on from one sin to another, till it reaches the height of criminality. For, as in the latter, many who begin only with a superstitious regard to signs and omens, go on from step to step, till they hold, or pretend to hold, communion with infernal spirits; so in popular insurrections, many look no farther than to the reform of abuses, which may, indeed, need reform; but are led on insensibly into acts of sedition, treason, and murder of the deepest die.

It pleased God to give the victory to David and his servants, with the loss to Absalom of 20,000 men, and himself was no other monument than a heap of stones over a grave. Thus, in an Arabic poem, it is related, that Hatim the father, and Adi the grandfather of Kais having been murdered, at a time before Kais was capable of reflection, his mother kept it a profound secret; and in order to guard him against having any suspicion, she collected a parcel of stones on two hillocks in the neighbourhood, and told her son, that the one was the grave of his father, and the other of his grandfather. The ancient cairns in Ireland and Scotland, and the tumuli in England, are of this kind.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. A pillar.—See 1 Sam. xv. 12. and note. A pillar is shown to this day under the name of Absalom, which is evidently an imposition. But see Fragments to Calmet, No. 218.—I have no son.—Yet by chap. xiv. 27. he had three sons; it is very possible they might have all died in infancy. His daughter only is mentioned as a woman grown up, and "of a fair countenance."—Absalom's place.—[Josephus says, there was in his time, about two furlongs from Jerusalem, a marble pillar called Absalom's hand, as it is in the Hebrew, (see note on 1 Sa. xv. 12.) and there is one shown to the present day, in the valley of Jehoshaphat, which though comparatively a modern structure, prothe king's<sup>a</sup> dale: for he said, I have no son<sup>a</sup> to keep my name in remembrance: and he called<sup>a</sup> the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day, Absalom's place.

19 ¶ Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the Lord hath<sup>a</sup> avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

21 Then said Joab to Cush, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cush bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But<sup>a</sup> howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cush. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings<sup>a</sup> ready?

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran<sup>a</sup> Cush.

24 And David sat between the two gates: and the<sup>a</sup> watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there<sup>a</sup> tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman said, Methinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, He<sup>a</sup> is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

and hanging in an oak tree. Whether, as painters represent<sup>a</sup> he was caught in the boughs by the tresses of his hair, is not said, though it is most probable, (see note, ver. 9.) but it is very certain, that many men have been brought to ruin by things in which they have taken most pride and pleasure, as did this unhappy youth in his beautiful head of hair. One of the soldiers seeing him, probably would not take him down for fear of Joab, and dared not smite him from regard to the charge of David; but went and told Joab, who immediately wasted and thrust three arrows into the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive;<sup>a</sup> then his ten armour-bearers, following the example of their master, all struck at him, though dead; and when they had taken him down, buried him in the wood, the wood of Ephraim, which, it is said, "devoured more people that day than the sword." The Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic say, that they were devoured by wild beasts; and others that they perished in pits and swamps: but we have no need to be wise above what is written. The victory was, however, complete. Two messengers ran eagerly to bring the tidings to the king, who was waiting anxiously the event. They thought themselves the bearers of good news, but, alas! all our triumphs here are liable to be damped with adversity. The king was delivered from all danger; but when he heard that his darling Absalom was slain, instead of rejoicing in the victory, he lamented for him in this pathetic language: "O my son, Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!"

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—43. David, being roused from his melancholy, is restored unanimously to his kingdom.—We here find David still mourning over the loss of his darling, though a natural son. "O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, 28 And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, Blessed be the Lord thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

29 And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cush came; and Cush said, Tidings, my lord the king: for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cush, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cush answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

33 And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Joab caused the king to cease his mourning. 9 The Israelites are earnest to bring the king back. 11 David sendeth to the priests to incite them of Judah. 18 Shimei is pardoned. 24 Mephibosheth excused. 32 Barzillai dismissed, Chibham his son is taken into the king's family. 41 The Israelites exhortate with Judah for bringing home the king without them.

AND it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth<sup>a</sup> for Absalom.

2 And the<sup>a</sup> victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day how the king was grieved for his son.

3 And the people gat them by stealth that day into the city, as people being ashamed steal away when they flee in battle.

my son!" Thus it is the bereaved heart loves to reiterate the name of the lost object of affection, as every one knows who has been thus bereaved. Grief, however, for an earthly misfortune, may be inordinate. God himself is the only object whose loss is absolute and irreparable. Blessings are mingled up with all our trials while we retain a hope in him. David, therefore, as a believer, ought, as in other cases, to have encouraged himself in the Lord his God. As a king also, his excessive grief was calculated to make his people discontented and unhappy. Joab, therefore, might be right in remonstrating with him on the impropriety of his conduct, though certainly he discovered much want of feeling in the manner of his address, and the intemperance of his language; as if David was disposed to take pleasure in the sufferings of his faithful subjects. The king, however, perceived the impropriety of his conduct, and assuming the seat of judgment, became the rallying point to all the tribes of Israel.

It being soon noised that David had sufficiently recovered himself to transact public business, the tribes begin to consider how they should restore him to the metropolis. He is particularly desirous that his own tribe, that of Judah, should take the lead in this business, and therefore suggests the idea to his faithful friend Zadok, and the other priests, who immediately so manage matters, that "the heart of the people of Judah is bowed as one man" to meet the king, and conduct him over Jordan. At the head of these comes Shimei, the Benjamite, who, but a little before, when David was in trouble, came out to curse and to pelt him; (chap. xvi. 13.) but now the tide of his affairs is turned, comes with 1000 men, to hail and welcome him to Jerusalem. Abishai is for executing him for treason, and he, no doubt, well deserved it; but David de-should not be related in a direct and hasty manner, but unfolded gradually, so as to keep the reader in suspense, and cause him to sympathize with us. Thus Ctesias introduces the relation of the death of Cyrus. For the messenger of these sad tidings, to Parysatis, the mother of Artaxerxes and Cyrus, does not say bluntly to her, Cyrus is dead, which would be what we call the speech of a Scythian; but first tells her that Cyrus had conquered, which gives her pleasure mixed with anxiety. She then asks him, How fares (Artaxerxes) the king? The king, replies he, is dead. She interrupting him, says, Tisapprehives him by slow steps, he at last, with reluctance, comes to the point; representing the messenger as unwilling to perform the disagreeable office; and so describing the distress of the mother, as to make us partake of it.]—Bagester

4 But the king <sup>c</sup> covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, <sup>d</sup> O my son Absalom, O Absalom, my son, my son!

5 And Joab came into the house to the king, and said, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants, which this day have saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

6 In <sup>e</sup> that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends. For thou hast declared this day, <sup>f</sup> that thou regardest neither princes nor servants: for this day I perceive, that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased thee well.

7 Now therefore arise, go forth, and speak <sup>g</sup> comfortably unto thy servants: for I swear by the Lord, if thou go not forth, <sup>h</sup> there will not tarry one with thee this night: and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king: for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at strife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; and now he is fled <sup>i</sup> out of the land for Absalom.

10 And Absalom, whom we anointed over us, is dead in battle. Now therefore why <sup>k</sup> speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 ¶ And king David sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are <sup>l</sup> my bones and my flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

13 And say ye to <sup>m</sup> Amasa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my flesh? God do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even <sup>n</sup> as the heart of one man; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to <sup>o</sup> Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 ¶ And Shimei <sup>p</sup> the son of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, hasted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and Ziba <sup>q</sup> the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry boat to carry over the king's household, and to do <sup>r</sup> what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

19 And said unto the king, Let <sup>s</sup> not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember <sup>t</sup> that which thy servant did <sup>u</sup> per- versely the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, that the king should take <sup>v</sup> it to his heart.

20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned: therefore, behold, I am come the first this day of all the house of Joseph to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he cursed <sup>w</sup> the Lord's anointed?

22 And David said, What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? <sup>x</sup> shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? for do not I know that I <sup>y</sup> am this day king over Israel?

23 Therefore the king said unto Shimei, Thou <sup>z</sup> shalt not die. And the king swore unto him.

24 ¶ And Mephibosheth <sup>a</sup> the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came <sup>b</sup> again in peace.

25 And it came to pass, when he was come to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, Wherefore <sup>c</sup> wentest thou not with me, Mephibosheth?

26 And he answered, My lord, O king, my servant deceived me: for thy servant said, I will saddle me an ass, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king; because thy servant <sup>d</sup> is lame.

27 And he <sup>e</sup> hath slandered thy servant unto my lord the king; but my lord the king <sup>f</sup> is as an angel <sup>g</sup> of God: do therefore <sup>h</sup> what is good in thine eyes.

28 For all of my father's house were but precates the idea of any man being put to death on this occasion. Mephibosheth next follows, in a state of the deepest mourning, and vindicates himself from the base and unjust aspersions of his servant Ziba, who had cruelly deceived him. As, however, David had before given the land of Saul, first to Mephibosheth, and afterwards to Ziba, he now finally decrees, to conciliate both parties, that it shall be divided equally between them. Next comes Barzillai, "a very great man," but aged and infirm, who could neither enjoy the charms of music, nor the delicacies of a royal table, and therefore declines going with the king to Jerusalem, but recommends Chimham, who was probably his son, and he was accepted in his stead, with the promise of promotion.

We must not conclude this chapter, without remarking the CHAP. XIX. Ver. 4. O my son Absalom.—[It is allowed by competent critics that the lamentation of David over his son, of which this forms a part, is exceedingly pathetic; and Calmest properly remarks, that the frequent repetition of the name of the deceased is common in the language of lamentation. Thus Virgil, "I will exalt your Daphnis to the stars; Daphnis I will raise to the stars; for me too Daphnis loved."—Bagster.]

Ver. 5. Thou hast shamed.—[Every one must admit that David's immoderate grief for his rebellious son was imprudent; and that Joab's firm and sensible reproof was necessary to arouse him to a sense of his duty to his people; but, in his manner, Joab far exceeded the bounds of that reverence which a servant owes to his master, or is subject to his prince.—Bagster.]

Ver. 8. Sat in the gate.—[This ancient custom still obtains in the East; for when Dr. Pococke returned from viewing the town of ancient Byblus, he says "the sheik and the elders were sitting in the gate of the city, after the ancient manner, and I sat awhile with them."—Bagster.]

Ver. 13. Art thou not of my bone, &c.—Amasa was David's nephew, chap. xvii. 25.

Ver. 14. Bowed the heart.—[The measures that he pursued were the best calculated that could be adopted for accomplishing this salutary end. David appears to take no notice of their infidelity; but rather to place confidence in them, that their confidence in him might be naturally excited; and, to oblige them yet farther, purposes to make Amasa general of the army instead of Joab.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Went over a ferry boat.—[The LXX. connecting this with the preceding verse, render, "and they made ready Jordan before the king, and did the necessary service to bring over the king;" and the Vulgate has, "and breaking into Jordan, they passed the fords before the king, to bring over the king's household." Josephus says they prepared a bridge over the Jordan, to facilitate his passage.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Of all the house of Joseph.—Shimei was of the house of Saul, ch. xvi. 5. and therefore, consequently, a Benjamite; though he seems to wish to conceal this. But the LXX. read, "Before any of the house of Joseph."

Ver. 24. Neither dressed his feet.—[Literally, made his feet, which seems to mean washing the feet, paring the nails, and perhaps anointing or otherwise perfuming them; as if not tinging the nails with henna; see note on Deut. xxi. 12. Sir J. Chardin, in his MS. note on this place, informs us, that it is customary in the East to have as much care of the feet as the hands; and that their barbers cut and adjust the nails with a proper instrument, because they often go barefoot. The nails of the toes of the mummies inspected in London in 1763, of which an account is given in the Philosophical Transactions for 1764, seem to have been tinged with some reddish colour.—Nor trimmed his beard.—Literally, made his beard, which may mean combing, curling, and dead men before my lord the king: yet dost thou set thy servant among them that eat at thine own table. What right therefore have I yet to cry any more unto the king?

29 And the king said unto him, Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, thou and Ziba divide the land.

30 And Mephibosheth said unto the king, O, let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house.

31 ¶ And Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even fourscore years old: and he had provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; for he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai, Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem.

34 And Barzillai said unto the king, How long have I to live, that I should go up with the king unto Jerusalem?

35 I am this day fourscore years old: and can I discern between good and evil? can thy servant taste what I eat or what I drink? can I hear any more the voice of singing men and singing women? wherefore then should thy servant be yet a burden unto my lord the king?

36 Thy servant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why should the king recompense it me with such a reward?

37 Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and of my mother. But behold thy servant Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what shall seem good unto the king.

38 And the king answered, Chimham shall go over with me, and I will do to him that which shall seem good unto thee: and whatsoever thou shalt require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king kissed Barzillai, and blessed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and also all the people of Israel.

41 ¶ And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said unto the king, Why have our brethren the men of Judah stolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over Jordan?

42 And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, Because the king is near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, We have ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye despise us, that our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.

CHAPTER XX.

1 By occasion of the quarrel, Sheba maketh a party in Israel. 2 David's ten concubines are shut up in perpetual prison. 3 Amasa, made captain over Judah, is slain by Joab. 4 Joab pursueth Sheba unto Abel. 5 A wise woman saveth the city by Sheba's head. 23 David's officers.

AND there happened to be there a man of Belial, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjaminite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to his tents, O Israel.

2 So every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And David came to his house at Jerusalem; and the king took the ten women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were shut up unto the day of their death, living in widowhood.

4 ¶ Then said the king to Amasa, Assemble me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here present.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he tarried longer than the set time which he had appointed him.

6 And David said to Abishai, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou thy lord's servants, and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities, and escape us.

7 And there went out after him Joab's men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

careful attachment of Mephibosheth to his benefactor David, who divided Saul's estate between him and Ziba, to prevent fresh disputes; for the former, a perfect picture of grief and misery, exclaims, "Let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house!" All the moral virtues, gratitude is one of the most amiable. CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—28. The insurrection of Sheba, which is suppressed by Joab and Abishai; and Joab's treacherous murder of Amasa.—A jealousy now arises between Judah and

Israel, on the ground that the other tribes had not been formally consulted; and one Sheba, a Benjaminite, and a man of Belial, takes advantage of this to raise an insurrection. David, in consequence, sends Amasa (to whom he had promised the chief command) to collect together the men of Judah within three days, in order to subdue the rebel. Some unknown circumstance, however, detaining Amasa beyond his time, and the rebels rapidly increasing, the king commissions Abishai and Joab to take his faithful body guards, and go in pursuit of him. But Morier says, that they almost universally die the death by successive layers of a paste made of henna, and another made of the indigo: the first tinging it with an orange colour, and the next with dark bottle green, which becomes jet black when exposed to the air for 24 hours.—Bagster. Ver. 33. I will feed thee.—This was but gratitude on the part of David, for the king, while he lay at Mahanaim chap. xvii. 27.

Ver. 35. Can I hear? &c.—Juvenal has the same idea: "What music or enchanting voice can cheer

A stupid, old, impenetrable ear?"—Dryden. Young men and women appear to have been attached to all courts.

Ver. 37. Let thy servant.—The whole of this little episode is extremely interesting; and contains an affecting description of the infirmities of old age. The venerable and kind Barzillai was fourscore years old; his ear was become deaf of hearing, and his relish for even royal dainties was gone; the evil days arrived in which he was constrained to say, "I have no pleasure in it" (Ec. xii. 1.) "Nor wine, nor food, his torpid palate please." Juvenal. He was too old either to enjoy the pleasures of a court, or to be of any further service to the king, he finishes his affecting address to the aged monarch, with the request that he would suffer him to enjoy what old men naturally desire, to die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and my mother; at the same time commending his son Chimham to his kind offices.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. Kissed.—[The kiss was the token of friendship and farewell; the blessing was a prayer to God for his prosperity; probably a prophetic benediction.]—Bagster.

Ver. 43. The words of the men of Judah were fiercer.—Rather stiffer, tougher, firmer.—Parkhurst.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1. Every man to his tents.—That is, to the tent of his own tribe, not to the camp of David. Sheba, being a Benjaminite, it is probable was also of Saul's family, which gave some colour to his attempt.

Ver. 2. Every man of Israel.—This is a remarkable instance of the vague manner in which the terms all and every are sometimes used in Scripture; it is very evident by the sequel, that here it can only mean many, for the insurrection appears far less formidable than that of Absalom.

Ver. 3. So they were shut up, &c.—[The confinement and retired maintenance of these women was the only measure which, in justice and prudence, could be adopted. In China, when an emperor dies, all his women are removed to an edifice called the palace of chastity, situated within the palace in which they are shut up for the remainder of their lives. Macartney.]—B

8 When they were at the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab said to Amasa, Art thou in health, my brother? And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand to kiss him.

10 But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was in Joab's hand: so he smote him therewith in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels to the ground, and struck him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abishai his brother pursued after Sheba the son of Bichri.

11 And one of Joab's men stood by him, and said, He that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him go after Joab.

12 And Amasa wallowed in blood in the midst of the highway. And when the man saw that all the people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him, when he saw that every one that came by him stood still.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

14 ¶ And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto Abél, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Berites: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they cast up a bank against the city, and it stood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall, to throw it down.

16 ¶ Then cried a wise woman out of the city, Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, Art thou Joab? And he answered, I am he. Then she said unto him, Hear the words of thy handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then she spake, saying, They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter.

Sheba. Amasa, notwithstanding, by some means got before them, and meeting Joab, that treacherous man, being actuated by jealousy, in the very act of salutation, stabs him, as he had done others, in the groin, so that his bowels fell out; and he left him dead on the road, while, with his brother Abishai, he went after Sheba. This man's head being given up by the people of the town in which he had taken refuge, Joab sounded a retreat, and the insurrection was at an end.

This event was effected through the advice and influence of another wise woman, (like the widow of Tekoah,) who, by her judicious policy, at the expense of one life only, put an end to the insurrection, and restored peace to Israel. Indeed, that policy may generally be pronounced wise and judicious, that

Ver. 8. It (his sword) fell out.—So Herodotus mentions of Cambyases that his sword fell out of his girdle, and wounded him in the thigh. But, considering Joab's treacherous character, it is certainly very possible that this was not merely accidental.

Ver. 9. By the beard.—Thenenot says, that among the Turks it is a great affront to take one by the beard, unless it be to kiss him, in which case they often do it. D'Arvieux, describing an assembly of Arab emirs at an entertainment, says, "After the usual civilities, caresses, kissings of the beard, and of the hand, which every one gave and received according to his rank and dignity, they sat down upon mats." The doing this by the Arab emirs corresponds with the conduct of Joab, and illustrates this horrid assassination.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. In the fifth rib.—See note on chap. ii. 23. The LXX. here render it "the groin."

Ver. 12. Every one . . . stood still.—The army themselves were so shocked at this instance of treachery, that they could not be got on till the melancholy spectacle was removed.

Ver. 14. Unto Abel.—Or rather, probably, Abel of Beth-Maachah, as in the next verse. It appears, from Joab having marched "through all the tribes of Israel," to have been situated in the northern confines of the land of Israel: and in the half tribe of Manasseh, east of Jordan, as that was the situation of Maachah, to which it belonged. This agrees with the situation of the Abels, which Eusebius and Jerome place between Paneas, or Cæsarea Philippi, and Damascus. Josephus says it was a fortified city, and a metropolis of the Israelites; and also that it belonged to the ten tribes, having been taken from the king of Damascus.]—Bagster.

20 And Joab answered and said, Far be it, far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so: but a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri by name, hath lifted up his hand against the king, even against David: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people in her wisdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab. And he blew a trumpet, and they retired from the city, every man to his tent. And Joab returned to Jerusalem unto the king.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 The three years' famine for the Gibeonites ceaseth, by hanging seven of Saul's sons 10 Rizpah's kindness unto the dead. 12 David burieth the bones of Saul and Jonathan in his father's sepulchre. 15 Four battles against the Philistines, wherein four valiants of David slay four giants.

THEN there was a famine in the days of David three years, year after year; and David inquired of the Lord. And the Lord answered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites.

2 And the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them; (now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel, but of the remnant of the Amorites; and the children of Israel had sworn unto them: and Saul sought to slay them in his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah.)

3 Wherefore David said unto the Gibeonites, What shall I do for you? and wherewith shall I make the atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord?

either preserves peace, or puts an end to war, which is one of the three great scourges of mankind, the others being pestilence and famine.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—22. Three years' famine, and its termination. War with the Philistines, and David's success. The Scriptures teach us to attribute all public calamities, as well as blessings, to the providence of God; and it was upon this principle that David inquired of the Lord, (by Urim probably,) what might be the cause of a famine for three successive years in Israel. The reply is, "for (on account of) Saul and his bloody house," which is afterwards explained as referring to his attempt to extirpate the Gibeonites, with whom Joshua and the Israelites had made a covenant by oath. (See Josh

Ver. 15. Cast up a bank.—It was customary to raise such embankments to support their battering engines, in the ancient art of war.—It stood in the trench.—Perhaps it was surrounded by it; or, as the margin reads, These banks were raised to a sufficient height to batter the wall.

Ver. 18. Ask counsel at Abel.—That is, this place was formerly so famous for the wisdom and prudence of its inhabitants, that all Israel used to consult them in difficult cases; and therefore Joab need not disdain to listen to them. But the margin reads, "They plainly spake in the beginning, (i. e. in former times), saying, Surely they will ask of Abel:" i. e. ask them whether they are willing to make peace, according to Deut. xx. 11, before any attack. So much attempt to explain it; but this appears to us forced and unnatural. See Stackhouse.

Ver. 19. A mother in Israel.—That is, the metropolis of a district. See note on ver. 14. above.

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. It was for Saul, &c.—The first fourteen verses of this chapter contain circumstances so extraordinary and which have been so much objected against, that Dr. Clarke seems to doubt their authenticity; at least he suspects that some Gibeonite must have corrupted them. To this we can not listen, as we are not authorized to reject the facts of Scripture or other history, merely because we cannot account for them. The information respecting the Gibeonites is here too scanty to enable us to judge of either Saul's crime or the equity of their demands; but it is not unlikely that the former was a continued series of cruel oppression, calculated to wear out their existence; and that the victims here demanded, were some of the most guilty instruments of that oppression.

Ver. 2. Remnant of the Amorites.—[The Gibeonites were Hittites, not Amo

4 And the Gibeonites said unto him, "We will have no silver nor gold of Saul, nor of his house; neither for us shalt thou kill any man in Israel. And he said, What ye shall say, that will I do for you.

5 And they answered the king, The man that assumed us, and that devised against us, he and his house should be destroyed from remaining on any of the coasts of Israel,

6 Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us, and we will hang them up unto the Lord in Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did choose. And the king said, I will give them.

7 But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul, because of the Lord's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the son of Saul.

8 But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up for Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholahite:

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill before the Lord: and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, in the beginning of barley harvest.

10 And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

11 And it was told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 And David went and took the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son from the men of Jabesh-gilead, which had stolen them from the street of Beth-shan, where the Philistines had hanged them, when the Philistines had slain Saul in Gilboa:

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

(ix.) But Saul, who was a great enthusiast, in a fit of religious zeal, attempted, notwithstanding, to destroy them, and probably did destroy many of them. An example this but too generally followed: for many there have been, and still are, who think they render God service by destroying their fellow-creatures, either because they are not of the same colour, or of the same religion with themselves. Saul, however, in thus doing, violated a national covenant and oath; and therefore the justice of God require a sacrifice, the choice of which was referred to the injured Gibeonites, who demanded seven of Saul's family, by way of atonement for this crime. When these or the following transactions took place, we know not. They appear to have been insulated facts, which being omitted in the general history, are here subjoined as a sort of appendix. A beautiful incident occurs among them, with respect to Rizpah, one of Saul's concubines, which seems to have affected David, as it must every feeling mind, as an example, as appears from Josh. vi. 19; but Amorites is a name often given to the Canaanites generally.—Bagster.

Ver. 4. We will have no silver, &c.—See Margin. That is, they neither desired to extort money from Saul's family, nor would they take upon themselves to revenge his death; their demand was public justice.

Ver. 5. Devised against us.—The Hebrew, Dimah, seems more literally to imply, oppression in the extreme; as we might say, "Jewelled to the dust."—Clarke. [As God accepted the expiation here demanded, we must suppose that both the inquiry of David and the answer of the Gibeonites, were dictated by some open or secret intimation from him.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Seven men of his sons.—That is, his family, including grandsons, and other descendants.

Ver. 8. The two sons of Rizpah.—She was Saul's concubine, whom Abner took, and for which he was reproved by Ish-bosheth, ch. iii. 7. The Mephibosheth here named must be distinguished from the son of Jonathan, mentioned in the verse preceding.—The five sons of Michal.—[This Adriel did not marry Michal, Saul's younger daughter, but Merab. 1 Sam. xviii. 19: Michal being married to David, and afterwards to Phaltiel; though it is here said, she bore, yea, she did not brought up, as falsely rendered, five sons to Adriel. Two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. however, have Merab, instead of Michal: the Syriac and Arabic have Nadab; and the Chaldee renders the passage thus: "And 15 Moreover the Philistines had yet war again with Israel; and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines: and David waxed faint.

16 And Ishbi-benob, which was of the sons of the giant, the weight of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels of brass in weight, he being girded with a new sword, thought to have slain David.

17 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah succoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David sware unto him, saying, Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Israel.

18 And it came to pass after this, that there was again a battle with the Philistines at Gob: then Sibbechai the Hushathite slew Saph, which was of the sons of the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where Elhanan the son of Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, slew the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

20 And there was yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great stature, that had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number; and he also was born to the giant.

21 And when he defied Israel, Jonathan the son of Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

22 These four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAPTER XXII.

A psalm of thanksgiving for God's powerful deliverance and manifold blessings.

AND David spake unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul:

2 And he said, the Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer;

3 The God of my rock; in him will I trust:

instance of extraordinary parental affection; and induced him to collect all the bones of Saul's family, and honour them with sepulchral rites. The close of the chapter mentions several rencounters between the Israelites and certain Philistine giants. In one of these, it seems David, whose strength was now declining, and who was probably faint with marching, was in imminent danger, had he not been rescued by the assistance of Abishai. In another instance, the brother of Goliath, of Gath, came forward, and was slain by Elhanan; and his son, having on either hand six fingers, and on either foot six toes, by another of David's heroes.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—51. David's thanksgiving.—It is probable that this song of praise was composed early in the reign of David, and soon after he was finally delivered from the persecuting rage of Saul. Perhaps it stands in this place, as it was found among those compositions, which David used in his private devotions: and in the book of Psalms, as it was the five sons of Merab which Michal the daughter of Saul brought up, which she brought forth to Adriel the son of Barzillai."—Bagster.

Ver. 9. In the beginning of barley harvest.—That is, about the vernal equinox.

Ver. 10. Until water dropped.—That is, until it rained. Dr. Clarke explains this of the autumnal rains, five months after; but it seems more probable that this shower of rain was given from heaven, as an indication that this sacrifice was accepted, and that their famine was at an end.

Ver. 12. The bones of Saul, &c. stolen.—That is, taken secretly. See 1 Sam. xxxi. 8—13.

Ver. 14. At Gob.—Forty MSS. and several editions have Nob; but Gezer is the name in the parallel text, 1 Chron. xx. 4.

Ver. 19. The brother of Goliath.—The present Hebrew text reads "Goliath" only: the words "the brother of" are supplied from one Chron. xx. 5. and were probably dropped here by the oversight of a transcriber. See Kennicott.

Ver. 20. On every hand six fingers, &c.—Tavernier informs us that the eldest son of the emperor of Java (1648) had the same. There are families in Prussia where this anomaly is said to be hereditary. And Pliny gives instances of a like nature. See Dr. Clarke, or Orient. Lit. No. 459.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1. And David spake, &c.—This chapter contains wholly and only the 18th Psalm. See note of that Psalm.

he is my <sup>a</sup> shield, and the <sup>t</sup> horn of my salvation, my high <sup>s</sup> tower, and my <sup>h</sup> refuge, my saviour; thou savest me from violence.

4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

5 When the <sup>t</sup> waves of death compassed me, the floods of <sup>i</sup> ungodly men made me afraid;

6 The <sup>s</sup> sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me;

7 In my distress <sup>i</sup> I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God: and he did hear <sup>m</sup> my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then the earth <sup>n</sup> shook and trembled; the foundations of heaven <sup>o</sup> moved and shook, because he was wroth.

9 There went up a smoke <sup>p</sup> out of his nostrils, and <sup>q</sup> fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed <sup>r</sup> the heavens also, and came down; and darkness <sup>s</sup> was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a <sup>t</sup> cherub, and did fly: and he was seen upon the <sup>u</sup> wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkness pavilions round about him, <sup>v</sup> dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies.

13 Through the brightness before him were coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD thundered <sup>w</sup> from heaven, and the most high uttered his voice.

15 And he sent out <sup>x</sup> arrows, and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them.

16 And the channels of the sea <sup>y</sup> appeared, the foundations of the world were discovered, at the rebuking of the LORD, at the blast of the breath of his <sup>z</sup> nostrils.

17 He sent from above, he took me; he drew me out of <sup>a</sup> many <sup>b</sup> waters;

18 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

19 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

20 He brought me forth also into a large place: he delivered me, because he delighted <sup>c</sup> in me.

21 The LORD rewarded me according <sup>d</sup> to my righteousness: according to the <sup>e</sup> cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

22 For I have kept <sup>f</sup> the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For <sup>g</sup> all his judgments were before me: and as for his statutes, I did not depart from them

24 I was also upright <sup>h</sup> before him, and have kept myself from mine iniquity.

25 Therefore the LORD hath recompensed me according to my righteousness; according to my cleanness <sup>i</sup> in his eye sight.

26 With the merciful <sup>j</sup> thou wilt show thyself merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt show thyself upright.

27 With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure; and with the froward <sup>k</sup> thou wilt <sup>l</sup> show thyself unsavoury.

28 And the afflicted people thou wilt save: but thine eyes are upon the <sup>m</sup> haughty, that thou mayest bring them down.

29 For thou art my <sup>n</sup> lamp, O LORD: and the LORD will lighten my darkness.

30 For by thee I have <sup>o</sup> run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall.

31 As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the LORD is <sup>p</sup> tried: he is a buckler to all them that trust in him.

32 For who is God, save the LORD? and who is a rock, save our God?

33 God is my strength and power: and he <sup>q</sup> maketh my way perfect.

34 He <sup>r</sup> maketh my feet <sup>s</sup> like hinds' feet: and setteth me upon my high places.

35 He teacheth my hands <sup>t</sup> to war; so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

36 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy gentleness hath <sup>u</sup> made me great.

37 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me; so that my <sup>v</sup> feet did not slip.

38 I have pursued mine enemies, and destroyed them; and turned not again until I had consumed them.

39 And I have consumed them, and wounded them, that they could not arise: yea, they are fallen <sup>w</sup> under my feet.

40 For thou hast girded me with strength to battle; them <sup>x</sup> that rose up against me hast thou <sup>y</sup> subdued under me.

41 Thou hast also given me the <sup>z</sup> necks of mine enemies, that I might destroy them that hate me.

42 They looked, but there was none to save; even unto the LORD, but <sup>a</sup> he answered them not.

43 Then did I beat them as small as the dust <sup>b</sup> of the earth, I did stamp them as the mire <sup>c</sup> of the street, and did spread them abroad.

44 Thou also hast delivered me from the strivings <sup>d</sup> of my people, thou hast kept me to be head of the <sup>e</sup> heathen: a people which I knew not shall serve me.

45 <sup>f</sup> Strangers shall <sup>g</sup> submit themselves unto me: as soon as they hear, they shall be obedient unto me.

46 Strangers shall fade away, and they shall be afraid out of their close <sup>h</sup> places.

47 The LORD liveth: and blessed <sup>i</sup> be my rock; and exalted be the God of the rock of my salvation.

48 It is God that <sup>j</sup> avengeth me, and that bringeth down the people under me, 49 And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: thou also hast lifted me up on high above them that rose up against me: thou hast delivered <sup>k</sup> me from the violent man.

50 Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and I will sing praises unto thy name.

corrected and delivered to the chief singer, to be sung in the public service of the sanctuary, from time to time, on occasions of recent deliverances, as well as in remembrance of former mercies. The variations are immaterial; though the Jewish writers enumerate no less than seventy-four. Few of them, however, need be here particularly noted.—The first verse of this chapter forms the title of the eighteenth psalm, with some alterations; the most remarkable of which is, the insertion of the words, "The servant of the Lord," in which, it seems, the Psalmist deemed himself more honoured than in being a renowned conqueror, and a very prosperous king.—He had had many enemies, both among his own people and the surrounding nations: but Saul especially is mentioned, as having been more formidable, malicious, and unwearied, than any of them.—In the whole of this sacred hymn, David seems immediately to celebrate providential deliverances; yet he uses language which may fairly be accommodated to spiritual blessings. He appears also primarily to speak of the Lord's dealings with himself; yet he was led by the prophetic Spirit to utter many things, which may with great propriety be applied to the Redeemer's sufferings and victories, of whom David was an evident and remarkable type.—T. Scott.

CHAPTER XXIII.

David in his last words professeth his faith in God's promises to be beyond sense or experience. 6 The different state of the wicked. 8 A catalogue of David's mighty men.

NOW these be the last words of David.

David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised <sup>a</sup> up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said,

The Spirit <sup>a</sup> of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue.

The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, <sup>a</sup> He that ruleth over men must be <sup>a</sup> just, ruling in the fear <sup>a</sup> of God.

And he shall be as the light <sup>a</sup> of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after <sup>a</sup> rain.

Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an <sup>a</sup> everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for his is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow.

But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands:

But the man that shall touch them must be pierced with iron and the staff of a spear; and they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.

¶ These be the names of the mighty men whom David had: <sup>a</sup> The Tachmonite that sat in the seat, chief among the captains; the one was Adino the Eznite: he lift up his spear against eight hundred, whom <sup>a</sup> he slew at one time.

And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodo Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away:

He arose, and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto sword: and the Lord wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil.

¶ And after him was Shammah the son of Zeeb the Hararite. And the Philistines were 12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines: and the Lord wrought a great victory.

13 And <sup>a</sup> three of the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harvest time unto <sup>a</sup> the cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philistines pitched in the valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in a hold, and the garison of the Philistines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

16 And the three mighty men brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the Lord.

17 And he said, Be it far from me, O Lord, that I should do this: is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

18 And Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his spear against three hundred, <sup>a</sup> and slew them, and had the name among three.

19 Was he not most honourable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit he attained not unto the first three.

20 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man, of Kabzeel, <sup>a</sup> who had done many acts, he slew two lion-like men of Moab: he went down also and slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow:

21 And he slew an Egyptian, <sup>a</sup> a goodly man: and the Egyptian had a spear in his hand; but he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

22 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was <sup>a</sup> more honourable than the thirty,

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—23. The last words of David.—By the last words of David, we are certainly not to understand the last words he uttered; for he lived some time after this, and gave orders for the coronation of Solomon; (1 Kings i. 34), but his last prophetic words; his last sacred ode, in which he predicts the future glory of the Messiah. In speaking of himself as “the man raised up on high,” he evidently refers to being taken from the sheepfold, and elevated to a throne, (ch. vii. 8), as the Lord’s anointed, instead of Saul. He also styles himself “The sweet Psalmist of Israel,” a term which only occurs in this passage; but which is understood to comprehend both the composition and performance of these sacred odes; in each of which departments, David is universally considered to have excelled, under the influence of divine inspiration:

“The Spirit of the Lord spake by me,” saith he, and this is the subject of the sacred oracle, “He that ruleth over men, must be just.” In this way we have an example of the double sense of prophecy, whereof we shall find many instances in the book of Psalms, which refer first to king David, as the type and then to the Messiah, as the antitype. The figure here applied to a good king, as “ruling in the fear of God,” is very beautiful. “He shall be as the light of the morning when the sun ariseth;” an image that could only be applied partially to David, because he was only partially a good king, for in many things it cannot be denied that he disgraced his character and profession: his morning was not without clouds. But it applies fully and absolutely to king Messiah, who is expressly called “the Sun of Righteousness,” whose rising was

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1. The last words of David.—The Targum says, “The words which he predicted concerning the end of the age.”
Ver. 4. And (he shall be).—The verb seems here unnecessarily supplied. We should prefer reading, “Even as the light of the morning when the sun riseth;” meaning without clouds, (when), from the splendour (and) from the rain, the sun brings forth vegetation.” The adverb when, which is here supplied, is meant to point to that morning when the sun arises after the periodical rains, so the earth immediately teems with herbage, which is the natural effect of the coming of the dawn after rain.
Ver. 5. For this is all, &c.—The latter part of this verse is of very difficult interpretation. Bp. Chandler reads, “But he (or it) is all my salvation, and my desire, though he (or it) doth not shoot forth speedily.” See Psalm cxviii. 17. Isa. xlv. 3. We have followed the learned Bishop in sense, though not in words. Instead of supplying the word “speedily,” for which we have no authority, we have ventured to translate the particle Kî, “though yet.” The learned critics are, however, suggested with much diffidence, on a passage which has perplexed the most experienced scholars.
Ver. 6. But the sons (some supply “the men”) of Belial.—Neither sons nor men are in the text. —The Belial.—That is, the wicked.
Ver. 7. Pierced with iron.—Probably an iron glove, as worn by soldiers.
Ver. 8. Staff of a spear.—A kind of scythe, probably, to cut them down.
Ver. 8. Adino the Eznite.—A corruption of the Hebrew words for he lift up his spear.—Against might hundred.—Read, “against three hundred,” as 1 Chron. xi. 11.—Whom he slew.—The LXX. reads, “He withstood three hundred soldiers.” Dr. Boothroyd reads, “He penetrated through three hundred men.”

Ver. 9. Eleazar . . . one of the three mighty men with David.—This is supposed by some to refer to David’s conflict with Goliath; but see 1 Chron. xi. 12.
Ver. 11. Full of lentiles.—A species of leguminous plants—pulse; but the parallel passage in 1 Chron. xi. 13. says “barlev.” The Hebrew words are not very dissimilar, but there might be fields of both.
Ver. 13. And three of the thirty chief.—See Margin. The word Shalashim, which we translate thirty, probably signifies an office, or particular description of men. The captains over Pharaoh’s chariots, are so termed, Ex. xiv. 7.—Dr. Clarke.—Valley of Rephaim.—See ch. v. 18, &c.
Ver. 16. Poured it out, &c.—An account somewhat similar to this occurs in Arrian’s Life of Alexander. When his army was greatly oppressed with heat and thirst, a soldier brought him a cup of water; he ordered it to be carried back, saying, “I cannot bear to drink alone, while so many are in want; and this cup is too small to be divided among the whole.” The example was noble in both cases, but David added piety to bravery; he poured it out unto the Lord.—Dr. Clarke.
Ver. 21. Went down to him with a staff.—This reminds us of the duel between Diogenes, the Athenian, and Horatus, the Macedonian, in presence of Alexander. The latter was armed cap-a-pie, with shield and sword, spear and javelin; the former was naked, but his body well smeared with oil, with a strong knotty club. Horatus threw a javelin, which Diogenes avoided, and the Macedonian then attempted to draw his sword, but the Athenian tripped up his heels, and setting his foot on his neck, would have dashed out his brains, if the king had not prevented.

but he attained not to the first three. And David set him over his guard.

24 Asahel the brother of Joab was one of the thirty; Elhanan the son of Dodo of Bethlehem,

25 Shammah the Harodite, Elikah the Harodite,

26 Helez the Palitite, Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, 27 Abiezer the Anethothite, Mebunnai the Hushathite,

CHAPTER XXIV.

David, tempted by Satan, forceth Joab to number the people. 5 The captains, in nine months and twenty days, bring the muster of thirteen hundred thousand fighting men. 10 David, having three plagues propounded by Gad, repenteth, and chooseth the three days' pestilence. 15 After the death of threescore and ten thousand, David, by repentance, preventeth the destruction of Jerusalem. 18 David, by Gad's direction, purchaseth Araunah's threshing-floor: where having sacrificed, the plague stayeth.

AND again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, "Go, number Israel and Judah.

2 For the king said to Joab the captain of the host, which was with him, "Go now through with health, or "healing in his wings," as his beams are beautifully designated. (Mal. iv. 2.) And this corresponds fully to the description, "a morning without clouds," or storms; "a clear shining after the rain," which produceth "the tender grass from the earth." By this we would not understand Messiah himself, as compared to the tender grass; but his beams as the Sun of Righteousness, produce a young progeny; a numerous race of converts; "an offspring like the grass of the earth." (Job v. 25.) So it is said of him in the 72d Psalm, (ver. 7.) "In his days shall the righteous flourish; so long as the moon endureth."

It is added, "Although my house be not so with God." Be not how? it may be asked. The answer seems to us easy and natural; "Although my house," that is, my sons, be not so;—not princes "ruling in the fear of God,"—not like a "morning without clouds;" yet hath Jehovah made with me "an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure," wherein he hath promised me another Son, the Prince Messiah, who "shall judge the people in righteousness, and all nations shall call him blessed;" (Psalm lxxii. 17,) "for this (or he) is all my salvation, and all my desire, although yet it appear not to grow." But the sons of Belial, that is, wicked men, they grow up like weeds, rapidly and abundantly, but to what avail? they shall be thrust away as thorns, or burnt with fire where they grow.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—25. David numbers the people; is punished, and makes atonement.—"The anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go number Israel." According to this text, Israel had previously offended the LORD, and he moved David to CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. He moved.—Many learned men think that the name of Jehovah should not be considered as the nominative to this verb. Bishop Horne (among others) reads, "The anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and ours (namely, the adversary mentioned in Chronicles) moved David," &c.; or, to the same effect, "David was excited by some one, saying," (See ch. xv. 31.) Dr. Boothroyd renders the text, "The anger of the LORD was excited against Israel, BECAUSE an adversary stood up and moved David," &c.

Joab and his assistants began by numbering the inhabitants of the country, to the east of Jordan; thence they proceeded to the northern part of the country, to the borders of Zidon and Tyre; and passing through the regions to the west of Jordan, they numbered all the men capable of bearing arms, (except the all the tribes of Israel, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, and number ye the people, that I may know the number of the people.

3 And Joab said unto the king, Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many soever they be, a hundred-fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

4 Notwithstanding the king's word prevailed against Joab, and against the captains of the host. And Joab and the captains of the host went out from the presence of the king, to number the people of Israel.

5 ¶ And they passed over Jordan, and pitched in Aroer, on the right side of the city that lieth in the midst of the river of Gad, and toward Jazer:

6 Then they came to Gilead, and to the land of Tahtim-hodshi; and they came to Dan-jaan, and about to Zidon,

7 And came to the strong hold of Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites: and they went out to the south of Judah, even to Beer-sheba.

8 So when they had gone through all the land, they came to Jerusalem at the end of nine months and twenty days.

9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Israel eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

10 ¶ And David's heart smote him after that he had numbered the people. And David said unto the LORD, I have sinned greatly in that I have done: and now, I beseech thee, O LORD, take away the iniquity of thy servant: for I have done very foolishly.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet Gad, David's seer, saying, number them, in order to bring upon them the judgment here recorded; and most certain it is, that when the Almighty is incensed against a people, he doth in his providence raise up enemies, to bring them under punishment. But God was not here the exciting cause, "he tempteth no man" to sin against him; yet his providence may be so arranged as to permit men to sin. In this case, we are told, in the parallel text of Chronicles, that Satan, not perhaps the prince of infernal spirits, but some adversary of Israel's peace and of David's comfort, stood up to give this evil counsel, and prevailed.

12 Go and say unto David, Thus saith the LORD, I offer thee three things; choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

In this, David was certainly and highly to blame; yet it has been much debated wherein his sin consisted. Surely not the simple act of numbering his army, for he had done this without blame but a few years before, when he went against Absalom. Indeed the law had provided for this, by ordering a certain tax to be paid on such occasions. Some therefore think it was the neglect of paying this duty, which was half a shekel (about twenty-nine cents) for each person; and this is expressly said to be "to prevent any plague among them." (Exod. xxx. 12.) Now, as a plague of a dreadful nature did appear among the people, it may fairly be inferred, that this price of redemption had been neglected. But this probably was not all; actions are weighed by their motives, and Joab himself suspected something wrong in this design, by his inquiry, "Why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?" And David himself had no sooner accomplished his object (which, indeed, was not wholly accomplished,) than he said "I have sinned—I have done foolishly."

This was a public act, however, and must be publicly cor-

Judah	500,000	Judah	470,000

Total 1,570,000

Some attribute these differences to the errors of transcribers, we think it far more probable that two accounts were delivered in; that in Samuel, at the end of nine months and twenty days; the other some time subsequent when 13 So Gad came to David, and told him, and said unto him, Shall seven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they pursue thee? or that there be three days pestilence in thy land? now advise, and see what answer I shall return to him that sent me.

14 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD; for his mercies are great: and let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 ¶ So the LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people from Dan even to Beer-sheba seventy thousand men.

16 And when the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, the LORD repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed the people, It is enough: stay now thy hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the threshing-place of Araunah the Jebusite.

17 And David spake unto the LORD when he saw the angel that smote the people, and said, Go, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? let thy hand, I pray thee, be against me, and against my father's house.

LORD in the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite.

19 And David, according to the saying of Gad, went up as the LORD commanded.

20 And Araunah looked, and saw the king and his servants coming on toward him: and Araunah went out, and bowed himself before the king on his face upon the ground.

21 And Araunah said, Wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? And David said, To buy the threshing-floor of thee, to build an altar unto the LORD, that the plague may be stayed from the people.

22 And Araunah said unto David, Let my lord the king take and offer up what seemeth good unto him: behold, here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments and other instruments of the oxen for wood.

23 All these things did Araunah, as a king give unto the king. And Araunah said unto the king, The LORD thy God accept thee.

24 And the king said unto Araunah, Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD my God of that which doth cost me nothing. So David bought the threshing-floor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver.

25 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. So the LORD was entreated for the land, and the plague was stayed from Israel.

ated; and David is therefore left to make his choice of three years more famine, three months defeat, or three days' pestilence. David, in this instance, acted wisely. He said, "Let us fall now into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hand of man." He judged rightly; heavy as the judgment was, the victims were less than 20,000 of the people: the plague did not reach the metropolises, and probably lasted little more than two whole days. An angel was employed to inflict this judgment, and it is undoubtedly the doctrine of Scripture, that angels are employed as the messengers of divine judgments, as well as messengers, as we shall see more particularly in the opening of the book of Job. This angel was rendered visible to David, but others only saw the effect; their friends sickened, drooped, and died.

David, desirous to offer an atonement on this occasion, on the threshing-floor of Araunah, where the angel appeared, and directed by Gad the prophet, buys the ground of Araunah, who had proceeded with the numbering a little farther; though after all, the tribes of Levi and Benjamin were never counted; "for the king's word was inominable to Joab," 1 Chron. xxi. 6. (In the parallel place in Chronicles, the number of Israel are said to be 1,100,000, and the men of Judah 470,000: to reconcile which, it has been observed, that the embodied troops of the Israelites were not reckoned here; and that there being twelve companies of 24,000 each, and allowing to each 1000 officers, the deficiency is exactly supplied. So to account for the deficiency in Judah, some are of opinion that the legionary soldiers are included in the one account, and not in the other.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. When David was up in the morning.—Literally, "And David rose in the morning; and the word of the LORD was unto the prophet Gad." It is probable, that David had become in some measure sensible of his sin, and had offered his humble confession and supplication to God over night, or in the night, before Gad delivered his message to him in the morning.—T. Scott.

Ver. 13. Seven years of famine.—In 1 Chron. xxi. 12, we read only "three years." So the LXX. read here; but to make out the seven years, some learned men consider this but the fourth year from the famine inflicted on account of Saul, to which three more years added, would have made seven.—Sp. Horne.

who seems to have possessed it by ancient right, as the descendant of the kings of Jebus, (or Jerusalem,) though now evidently, from his language, a proselyte to the worship of Jehovah. These things—the ground, the cattle, and the wood—did Araunah (formerly a king) give unto the king; that is, David, and said, "The Lord thy God accept thee." David, however, unwilling to offer unto God what cost him nothing, insisted upon buying the ground, which having purchased, he sacrificed, and the plague was wholly stayed; and upon this spot, which evidently belonged to mount Moriah, was the temple afterwards erected by Solomon, by divine command. Upon these important facts, many are the practical inferences which we might raise. We shall only name one. All national judgments, as well as personal afflictions, should lead us to a throne of grace, where we should seek mercy alone through the divinely-constituted atonement: this is a fundamental truth of both Testaments, whereon both the Jewish and Christian church are built.

Ver. 15. To the time appointed.—"The time appointed" may mean either the close of the third day: or, as it is more probable, the appointed hour of the evening sacrifice on the first day. For "the LORD repented him of the evil," which implies, that he did not proceed to the extent of the judgment denounced. Yet on this supposition seventy thousand died in the different parts of the land, in about as few hours as Joab had employed months in numbering the people; and this apparently by the ministration of a single angel. "If it" (the pestilence) "had raged three days, and in every nine hours had killed so many, above a third part of those who had been numbered would have died by this plague; but as Kimchi here observes, by the great mercy of God, the time was contracted."—Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 18. Threshing-floor of Araunah.—Or, Ornan, 1 Chron. xxi. 15. These threshing-floors were all in the open air.

Ver. 22. Threshing instruments and instruments of the oxen.—Goads, yokes, &c. Wood for burning was in some parts scarce, and this man's stock appears to have been exhausted.

Ver. 23. Did Araunah (as) a king.—More literally, "King Araunah;" but the word "king" is wanting in the LXX., Syriac, Arabic, and in some Hebrew MSS.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL.

THE vicissitude of important events which this book describes—the establishment and prosperity of David's reign; the extinction of Saul's family, and David's grateful kindness to the surviving son of Jonathan; the lamentable fall of David, with his submissive repentance, pardon, and restoration; the melancholy effects of his errors, in the crime of Amnon, and the rebellion of Absalom; and his re-establishment on the throne; are represented in the most interesting manner, and furnish the most valuable lessons to mankind. The various sins and sincere repentance of David are expounded, says Augustine, in order that, at the falls of such great men, others may tremble, and know how to avoid; and that, at their rising again, those who have fallen may know what to follow and imitate; though many will fall with David who will not rise with David. The author, in the concise style of Sacred History, selects only the most important incidents of those revolutions which he records; and, among the conspicuous beauties of this book, we can never sufficiently admire David's feeling lamentation over Saul and Jonathan, the expressive words of Nathan, and the triumphant hymn of thanksgiving and praise composed by the "sweet psalmist of Israel." We see throughout this book the effects of that enmity against idolatrous nations which had been implanted in the minds of the Israelites by the Mosaic law, and which gradually tended to the extinction of that idolatry. This book, as well as the former, contains many intrinsic proofs of its verity. By describing, without disguise, the misconduct of those characters that were highly revered among the people, the sacred writer demonstrates his impartial sincerity; and by appealing to monuments that attest the truth of his relations when he wrote, he brought forward indisputable evidence of his faithful adherence to truth. The relation of the fall of David is an illustrious proof of the truth of the Sacred Writings. Who, that intended to deceive by trumping up a religion which he intended to father on the purity of God, would have inserted such an account of one of its most zealous advocates and once its brightest ornament? God alone, whose character is truth and impartiality, has done it to show that His religion, liberata ponderibus suis, will ever stand independently of the conduct of its professors. The Books of Samuel connect the chain of Sacred History, by describing the circumstances of an interesting period. They describe the reformation and improvements of the Jewish church established by David; and as they delineate minutely the life of that monarch, they point out his typical relation to Christ; and also remarkably illustrate his inspired productions, which are contained in the book of Psalms: to which they may be considered as a key.

The remark made on the former book, that many heathen authors have borrowed, or collected from other sources, many particulars of the accounts recorded by the inspired writer, may justly be extended to this book; and indeed is equally applicable to all the books of Sacred History. Eusebius has indeed as quoted by Eusebius, mention many remarkable circumstances and Acts, as quoted by Eusebius, mention many remarkable circumstances of David and Solomon, agreeing with those detailed in these Sacred Books; and furnishing additional external evidence, if such were needed, of the truth of these inspired records.]—Bagster.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED,

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

The Second Book of Samuel, as we have seen, ends abruptly: to complete the narrative, it would require the last seven chapters of the First Book of Chronicles; but those we must notice in their proper place. All the transactions there mentioned, except the death of David, evidently intervene before this First Book of Kings.

The two following Books, which were originally but one, contain the history of the kings, both of Judah and Israel, from the reign of David to the Babylonish captivity. Many ascribe them to Ezra; among whom is Dr. Clarke, from whom we give the following remarks:

"1. That it is the work of one person, is sufficiently evident from the uniformity of the style, and the connexion of events.

"2. That this person had ancient documents, from which he compiled, and which he often only abridged, is evident from his own words: 'The rest of the acts of (such and such a prince) are they not written in the Chronicles of the kings of Judah, or of Israel?' which occur frequently.

"3. These books were written during, or after, the Babylonish captivity; as, at the end of the Second Book, that event is particularly described. The author states also, 2 Kings xvii. 23, that Israel was, in his time, in captivity in Assyria; according to the declaration of God by his prophets.

"4. That the writer was not contemporary with the facts which he relates, is evident from the reflections he makes on the facts which he found in the memoirs which he consulted. See 2 Kings xvii. from ver. 8 to ver. 24.

"5. There is every reason to believe that the author was a priest or a prophet: he studies less to describe acts of heroism, successful battles, conquests, political address, &c. than what regards the temple, religion, religious ceremonies, festivals, the worship of God, the piety of princes, the fidelity of the prophets, the punishment of crimes, the manifestations of God's anger against the wicked, and his kindness to the righteous. He appears every where strongly attached to the house of David; he treats of the kings of Israel only accidentally; his principal object seems to be the kingdom of Judah, and the matters which concern it.

Now all this agrees well with the supposition that Ezra was the compiler of these books. He was not only a priest, a zealous servant of God, and reformer of the corruptions which had crept into the Divine worship, but is universally allowed by the Jews to have been the collector and compiler of the whole Sacred Code, and of the arrangement of the different books which constitute the Old Testament."

But a difficulty here arises. If Ezra wrote the Books of Kings, who wrote the Books of Chronicles? Those, as they relate to the same events, must evidently be written by a different hand, and prior to these books. Scott and many others therefore attribute these books of Kings to the prophet Jeremiah, especially as they close with the same events as his prophecies. The question is, however, of little consequence, as we have no reason to question either their authority or authenticity.

This book comprises a period of 126 years, from A.M. 2989 to 3115; and records many important events in connexion with the different kings.

energy he was able to exert in the behalf of his son Solomon. As to Adonijah, he was unquestionably Solomon's elder brother; but this alone did not entitle him to be David's successor, since the Lord himself (whose the kingdom was) had chosen Solomon to that honour; and this David had publicly announced (1 Chron. xxii. 9, &c.)

Ver. 9. CHAP. I. Ver. 1—27. David's old age and infirmities; and Adonijah's usurpation.—The life of David had been made up of labours and sufferings; and there is reason to fear, that when he attained prosperity and ease, he gave way to indulgences still more injurious to his constitution; so that he became extremely weak and feeble before he attained to the usual boundary of human life. As to the remedy in this case, recommended by his servants the physicians, it seems but ill adapted for a prophet. To prevent scandal, however, Abishag appears to have acted in the double capacity of nurse and concubine; and his strength appears to have been partly restored, from the CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Stricken in years.—[David was probably now about sixty-nine years of age. He was thirty years old when he began to reign, reigned forty, and died in his seventieth year; and the transactions mentioned here are supposed to have taken place about a year before his death. Sixty-nine was not an advanced age; but he had been exhausted with various fatigues, and especially family afflictions, so that he was much older in constitution than in years.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. A young virgin.—Hebrew, "A damsel, a virgin." Josephus says, that the king's servants who prescribed this, were his physicians; and it is a remedy often since prescribed, and strongly extolled by Friar Bacon, as "the cure of old age." It is to be remembered, however, that in the same degree as this benefits the aged, it is injurious to the young. There is no doubt but she was considered as his concubine; (see chap. ii. 22.) as such, she was entitled to "lie in his bosom," as well as to be "a cherisher," or nurse, "unto him."

Ver. 4. She cherished.—Perhaps "nursed." Boothroyd following Geddes, renders it, "She became nurse to the king." In Isa. xxii. 15. the masculine noun is used for a house steward.

swarest by the LORD thy God unto thy handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne.

18 And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my lord the king, thou knowest it not:

19 And he hath slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the sons of the king, and Abiathar the priest, and Joab the captain of the host: but Solomon thy servant hath he not called.

20 And thou, my lord, O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldest tell them who shall sit on the throne of my lord the king after him.

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king shall sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders.

22 ¶ And, lo, while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in.

23 And they told the king, saying, Behold Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan said, My lord, O king, hast thou said, Adonijah shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?

25 For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, God save king Adonijah.

26 But me, even me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou hast not showed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 ¶ Then king David answered and said, I call me Bath-sheba. And she came into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

29 And the king sware, and said, As the LORD liveth, that hath redeemed my soul out of all distress, 30 Even as I sware unto thee by the LORD God of Israel, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead; even so will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and said, Let my lord king David live for ever.

32 ¶ And king David said, Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to Gihon:

34 And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there king over Israel: and blow ye with the trumpet, and say, God save king Solomon.

35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, Amen: the LORD God of my lord the king say so too.

37 As the LORD hath been with my lord the king, even so be he with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

38 ¶ So Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took a horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and anointed Solomon: And they blew the trumpets; and all the people said, God save king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him, and the people piped with pipes, and rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

41 ¶ And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, Wherefore is this noise of the city being in an uproar?

42 And while he yet spake, behold, Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came: and Adonijah said unto him, Come in; for thou art a valiant man, and bringest good tidings.

43 And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

royal feast, and had himself proclaimed, by the style and title of King Adonijah. Nathan the prophet, who had watched all his proceedings, gave the information to Bath-sheba, and advised her to go to the king and inform him, at the same time urging his promise on the behalf of Solomon; and promised immediately to second her application, which he did, as we are informed, with complete success.

It may be worthy of remark, that Adonijah had omitted to invite Nathan and other of the king's known friends; and the omission seems to intimate, that he was not only aware that Nathan had given his decided sanction to the succession of Solomon; but that also he considered him, and those who acted with him, as faithful in his cause. It is well when public men have that decided character for integrity, that no man dares attempt to corrupt them.

Ver. 28—53. David orders Solomon to be proclaimed king.—This unexpected news appears to have roused the energies of David; and renewing his promise and his oath to Bath-sheba, he proceeds directly to fulfil them.

Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, now commander-in-chief, are therefore ordered immediately to take Solomon, to place him upon the king's own mule, and, attended by his officers and body guards, to proclaim him king; a measure so popular and acceptable to the people, that (hyperbolically speaking) the earth was rent (we should have said the air) with the rejoicings and acclamations of the people. This, however, was no music to the ears of Adonijah and his party, whose mirth was suddenly at an end, and who himself fled to the horns of the altar, to save his life. This was readily and justly granted, but upon condition that he staid at home, and attempted to raise no insurrection against his brother Solomon, now proclaimed.

It seems to have been a custom, as ancient as the days of David, to address the throne on all changes in the government; and both the address and answer here recorded, well merit our attention. "The king's servants"—whether we say David's or Solomon's, it is all the same—"The king's servants said to David, May God make the name of Solomon better known, with some degree of probability, that it took place after Absalom's rebellion; and as God himself had settled the succession, he might very properly give her this assurance.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Thou shouldest tell.—[At this time the monarchy of Israel was unsettled: no man knew who was to succeed to the crown; and the minds of the people were as unsettled as the succession. It was neither hereditary nor elective: the king, as was anciently the case in most countries, named his successor; but in this instance, God had already assigned the throne to Solomon.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Counted offenders.—[The history of the world demonstrates, that the lust of dominion has tempted men to commit the most enormous crimes. A father has destroyed his son, a son deposed a father, and a brother murdered a brother, in order to obtain a crown.]—Bagster.

Ver. 33. Mine own mule.—[Maimonides informs us, that it was a capital offence for any one to ride on the king's mule, to sit on his throne, or to handle his sceptre, without permission; and as David ordered Solomon to ride on his own mule, &c. it was ample evidence that he had appointed him his successor.]—Bagster.

44 And the king hath sent with him Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule:

45 And Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again. This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon sitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover the king's servants came to bless our lord king David, saying, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. And the king bowed himself upon the bed.

48 And also thus said the king, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes even seeing it.

49 And all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, and rose up, and went every man his way.

50 ¶ And Adonijah feared because of Solomon, and arose, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

51 And it was told Solomon, saying, Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon: for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying, Let king Solomon swear unto me to-day that he will not slay his servant with the sword.

52 And Solomon said, If he will show himself a worthy man, there shall not a hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedness shall be found in him, he shall die.

53 So king Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and bowed himself to king Solomon: and Solomon said unto him, Go to thy house.

CHAPTER II.

1 David, having given a charge to Solomon, 3 of righteousness, 5 of Joab, 7 of Barzillai, 8 of Shimei, 10 death. 12 Solomon succeedeth. 13 Adonijah, moving Bath-sheba to see unto Solomon for Abishag, is put to death. 25 Abiathar, having his life given him, is deprived of the priesthood. 26 Joab, fleeing to the horns of the altar, is there slain. 35 Benaiah is put in Joab's room, and Zadok in Abiathar's. 36 Shimei, confined to Jerusalem, by occasion of going thence to Gath, is put to death.

NOW the days of David drew nigh that he should die; and he charged Solomon his son, saying, than thy name; and make his throne greater than thy throne! And the king (David) bowed himself on his bed," evidently in an act of worship, saying, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which hath given one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes even seeing it."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—12. David gives his dying charge to Solomon.—The first part of David's charge is unquestionably excellent. He adopts the language of Joshua in like circumstances; "Behold I am going this day the way of all the earth," (Josh. xxiii. 14.) and exhorts his son to be strong, that is, in mind—firm, decided, and resolved to walk in the ways of God, and to keep his statutes, as the way to prosper in all his undertakings. But in the latter part of the charge, as it respects Joab and Shimei, two state criminals, there are some things that at least require explanation. The former had, in several instances, been guilty of deliberate murder; but had escaped

Ver. 45. Gihon.—[This was a fountain on the west of Jerusalem, (consequently, in an opposite direction to En-rogel on the east, where Adonijah was proclaimed king,) of which there were two pools, an upper and a lower. 12 Ch. xxxii. 30.] There is a large square cistern in the ravine west of the city, mentioned by Dr. Richardson as a little to the south of the Jaffa gate, which Dr. Pococke describes as a basin about 250 paces long, and 100 broad. It is commonly called the pool of Bath-sheba, but seems to be the lower pool of Gihon. "Nearly a mile to the N. N. W. is the pool of Gihon, which I suppose to be the upper pool. It is a very large basin, and, if I mistake not, is cut down about ten feet into the rock, there being a way down to it by steps. It was almost dry at that time, and seems destined to receive the rain waters which come from the hills about it. There is a canal from the pool to the city, which is uncovered part of the way, and it is said, goes to the pool in the streets near the holy sepulchre. The fountain of Gihon arose either in the upper pool, or out of the high ground above it."—Bagster.

Ver. 50. The horns of the altar.—For these horns, see Exod. xxxviii. 2. The altar was in many places an asylum, but not in all; see note on ch. ii. 30.

2 I go the way of all the earth: be thou strong therefore, and show thyself a man;

3 And keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself:

4 That the Lord may continue his word which he spake concerning me, saying, If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth with all their heart and with all their soul, there shall not fail thee (said he) a man on the throne of Israel.

5 Moreover thou knowest also what Joab the son of Zeruiah did to me, and what he did to the two captains of the hosts of Israel, unto Abner the son of Ner, and unto Amasa the son of Jether, whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war upon his girdle that was about his loins, and in his shoes that were on his feet.

6 Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

7 But show kindness unto the sons of Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of those that eat at thy table: for so they came to me when I fled because of Absalom thy brother.

8 And, behold, thou hast with thee Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a grievous curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I swore to him by the Lord, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

9 Now therefore hold him not guiltless: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood.

10 ¶ So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David.

11 And the days that David reigned over Israel were forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

12 ¶ Then sat Solomon upon the throne of justice through his influence with the army. And though he had continued faithful to David under the rebellion of Absalom, he slew him, expressly in opposition to the king's injunction; and now he had been dismissed from office, he scrupled not to set up Adonijah in opposition to Solomon, to whom he must have known that the throne was promised, both by David and by Jehovah. David therefore enjoins upon Solomon not to let his hoar hairs go down to the grave in peace; but to call him to account for these murders whenever he should find a proper occasion.

As to Shimei, he had been many years the avowed enemy of David, and had cursed him with a great and strong curse, (as the Hebrew phrase is,) and even pelted him and his followers with stones; and though afterwards he submitted to save his life, and his life had in consequence been spared, it does not appear that he had ever shown an altered disposition; as, the act of embracing him. This he did in two instances; those of Abner and Amasa, already noticed, 2 Sam. iii. 27; xx. 10.

Ver. 6. Let not his hoar, &c.—[This ought by no means to be imputed to personal resentment, but to David's regard for justice. Joab, for two most atrocious murders, according to the law of God should die; and it would have been a flagrant breach of that law, and an insult to justice, not to have taken his life. David was culpable in delaying it so long; and without giving this order to Solomon, could not have died in the approbation of his Maker.]—B.

Ver. 9. But his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood.—[In the Hebrew language," says Dr. Kennicott, "it is not unusual to omit the negative in a second part of the sentence, and to consider it as repeated, when it has been once expressed and followed by the connecting particle," (vau.) Here the Doctor refers to the Hebrew of Psalm i. 5; ix. 18; xxxviii. 1. lxxv. 5. Prov. xxiv. 12; xxx. 3. Upon this principle, the Doctor thus translates the verse in question; "Now therefore, hold him not guiltless, (for thou art a wise man, &c.) but (or yet) bring not down his hoar head to the grave with blood." Now, how did Solomon understand this charge? Did he kill Shimei in consequence of it? Certainly he did not; for, after he had immediately commanded Joab to be slain in obedience to his father, he sends for Shimei, and knowing that he required to be watched, confines him to Jerusa-

David his father; and his kingdom was established greatly.

13 ¶ And Adonijah the son of Haggith came to Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon. And she said, Comest thou peaceably? and he said, Peaceably.

14 He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And she said, Say on.

15 And he said, Thou knowest that the kingdom was mine, and that all Israel set their faces on me, that I should reign: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brother's: for it was his from the LORD.

16 And now I ask one petition of thee, & deny me not. And she said unto him, Say on.

17 And he said, Speak, I pray thee, unto Solomon the king, (for he will not say thee nay,) that he give me Abishag the Shunammite to wife.

18 And Bath-sheba said, Well; I will speak for thee unto the king.

19 Bath-sheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king rose up to meet her, and bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; and she sat on his right hand.

20 Then she said, I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, Ask on, my mother: for I will not say thee nay.

21 And she said, Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, And why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon swore by the LORD, saying, God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life.

24 Now therefore, as the LORD liveth, which hath established me, and set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath made me a house, as he promised, Adonijah shall be put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; and he fell upon him that he died.

26 ¶ And unto Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, because thou barest the ark of the LORD God before David my father, and because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the LORD; that he might fulfil the word of the LORD, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in Shiloh.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab: for Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

29 And it was told king Solomon that, Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD; and, behold, he is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying, Go, fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and said unto him, Thus saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

31 And the king said unto him, Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and from the house of my father.

32 And the LORD shall return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon two men more righteous and better than he, and slew them with the sword, my father David not knowing thereof, to wit, Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and Amasa the son of Jether, captain of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever: but upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

34 So Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness.

35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and Zadok the priest did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

however, his hands were not absolutely stained with murder, it seems hard that David should charge it upon Solomon to bring down "his hoar head to the grave with blood." Some very learned men have therefore given a different rendering of this verse, as implying that Shimei was neither to be held innocent, nor punished for what was passed. (See note on ver. 9.) In all this narrative, two things must be distinctly borne in mind; first, that David, in this history, is not to be considered as a private man, giving advice to his children; but as a sovereign, giving charge to his successor on the throne, as to his public conduct; and, secondly, that this was under the Mosaic, and not the Christian dispensation. Under the former, the law was, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;" under the latter, it is, "Bless them that curse you, and love them that hate you." As to the death of David, we have nothing here but his public charge to Solomon, while attended by many of the great officers of state; if we wish to know his feelings as a believer, we must advert to his language in another place, (1 Chron. xxix. 10—19,) or turn back to his last words in the close of the preceding book, where we shall find him piously adverting to "the everlasting covenant," and to that great Messiah, in whom was "all his salvation, and all his desire."

Ver. 13—46. Solomon's conduct towards Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei.—In the close of the first chapter of this book, Adonijah had the promise of his life, upon condition of his good behaviour: "If he will show himself a worthy man, (a son of virtue, as the Hebrew phrase is,) there shall not a hair of him fall to the earth: "but if wickedness should be found in him, he shall die." So while he was content to live a private life, he suffered no molestation; but when he unadvisedly applied to Bath-sheba to ask for him his father's virgin concubine, Abishag, for his wife, Solomon was incensed. Viewing this as a deliberate step toward re-ascending the throne, he considered him as having forfeited his life; and it is strange that Adonijah should not be aware of this. It was by his taking one of the concubines of Saul, that Ish-bosheth was offended with Abner; and it was by lying with the concubines of his father David, that Absalom openly renounced him for life. Such also is the interpretation of Dr. Chandler; and Dr. Clarke thinks it "the best mode of interpreting this text." Ver. 23. God do so to me, &c.—[We have already seen, that the whole notion of an eastern monarch was a part of the regal succession; and it was the reason for a subject to claim any wife or virgin who had once formed a part of it. Solomon evidently considered the request of Adonijah in this light; and was convinced that he was still aiming to seize the crown, to which he considered this as one step. But it is very doubtful, how far the plea either of policy or state necessity can justify Solomon in thus imbruing his hands in his brother's blood; whatever might have been his treasonable intentions or conduct.]

Ver. 27. So Solomon thrust out Abiathar.—[This was for having taken part with Adonijah; but by it a remarkable prophecy was fulfilled. God had told Eli, (1 Sam. 30—32) that the priesthood should depart from his house; Abiathar was the last of the priests of Ithamar, of which family was Eli the high priest. Zadok, who succeeded, was of the family of Eleazar; and by this change the priesthood reverted to its ancient channel.]—Bagster.—That he might fulfil, &c.—This phrase, which often occurs, in both the Old and New Testaments, certainly does not mean that the action was done to fulfil the prophecy, or verified it. Dr. Boothroyd renders it to the same effect, "So that was fulfilled." See Dr. Campbell on Matt. i. 22.

Ver. 30. Come forth, &c.—God had ordained that murderers should be dragged from his altar, and put to death. Exod. xxi. 14. This was doubtless 36 ¶ And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Build thee a house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passeth over the brook <sup>m</sup> Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: thy <sup>a</sup> blood shall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto Achish <sup>e</sup> son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.

40 And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants: and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou <sup>p</sup> saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and the commandment <sup>a</sup> that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, Thou knowest all the wickedness <sup>r</sup> which thy heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore <sup>a</sup> the LORD shall return thy wickedness upon thine own head;

45 And king Solomon shall be <sup>c</sup> blessed, and <sup>a</sup> the throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died. And <sup>v</sup> the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

CHAPTER III.

Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter. 2 High places being in use, Solomon sacrificed at Gibeon. 5 Solomon at Gibeon, in the choice which God gave him, preferring wisdom, obtained wisdom, riches, and honour. 16 Solomon's judgment between the two harlots maketh him renowned.

AND Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and <sup>a</sup> took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city <sup>b</sup> of David, until he had made an end of <sup>c</sup> building his own house, and <sup>d</sup> the house of the LORD, and the wall <sup>e</sup> of Jerusalem round about.

2 ¶ Only <sup>f</sup> the people sacrificed in high places, because there was no house built unto the name of the LORD, until those days.

his allegiance to him; it was not unnatural for Solomon, therefore, to construe this into an act of treason; though we cannot but think a milder punishment would better have become Solomon, as a prince of peace.

These tidings were told to Joab, who could not expect a gentler fate; he therefore fled to the horns of the altar, flattering himself that the sacredness of the place might be his protection; but there was an express law to exempt murderers from this privilege; he was therefore slain.

Solomon next sent for Shimei, directed him to build a house at Jerusalem, and there to live, promising him safety so long as he there continued, but denouncing death if he ever left the city. Shimei remained there three years, but two of his slaves having absconded, he rashly went to Gath in pursuit of them, construed as a tacit concession that less offenders should be protected. The protection afforded by heathen altars is well known; yet the heathen would drag notorious criminals from their altars.

Ver. 37. Thy blood shall be upon thine own head.—The LXX. add, "The king made him swear that day;" which is confirmed by the words of Solomon, ver. 42; "Did I not make thee swear?" "Did I not adjure thee?"—Dr. Boothroyd.

3 And Solomon loved <sup>a</sup> the LORD, walking in the statutes <sup>b</sup> of David his father: only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places.

4 And the king went to Gibeon <sup>i</sup> to sacrifice there; for that <sup>i</sup> was the great high place: a thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

5 ¶ In Gibeon the LORD appeared <sup>k</sup> to Solomon in a dream <sup>i</sup> by night: and God said, Ask <sup>m</sup> what I shall give thee.

6 And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father great <sup>a</sup> mercy, according as he walked <sup>e</sup> before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness <sup>p</sup> of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son <sup>q</sup> to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O LORD my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little <sup>r</sup> child: I know not how to go <sup>a</sup> out or come in.

8 And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast <sup>c</sup> chosen, a great people, that cannot be <sup>a</sup> numbered nor counted for multitude.

9 Give therefore thy servant an <sup>v</sup> understanding <sup>w</sup> heart to judge <sup>x</sup> thy people, that I may discern <sup>y</sup> between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

10 And the speech pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, <sup>a</sup> Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself <sup>a</sup> long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but has asked for thyself understanding to <sup>b</sup> discern judgment;

12 Behold, I have done <sup>c</sup> according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so <sup>d</sup> that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And I have also given thee <sup>e</sup> that which thou hast not asked, both <sup>f</sup> riches, and honour: so that <sup>g</sup> there <sup>h</sup> shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen <sup>i</sup> thy days.

15 And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered peace-offerings, and made a feast <sup>j</sup> to all his servants.

16 Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and stood before <sup>k</sup> him.

and on his return, suffered the penalty of all his crimes; and so by the death of his rival brother and his powerful enemies, Joab and Shimei, "the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon." It is painful, doubtless, to a feeling mind, to read of such tragical events; but these executions might not only be acts of justice, but necessary sacrifices to the peace and stability of Solomon's throne, which could hardly be pronounced safe, had Joab or Shimei been left at liberty to plot against him. "Take away the wicked from before the king, that his throne may be established in righteousness." Prov. xxv. 5.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—28. Solomon's marriage to Pharaoh's daughter: his early piety, and extraordinary wisdom.—The Hebrews, we know, were not permitted to take wives of the that Moses married an Ethiopian; Abraham had an Egyptian concubine, (Hagar;) and Solomon an Egyptian wife. This has been thought contrary to the divine law; but it is clear from Exod. xxiv. 12—16, that a Hebrew might marry a woman of any nation, except a Canaanite, upon one condition only, that of her giving up idolatry; Deut. xxi. 10—14. This condition, it is probable, Solomon insisted upon with his first wives, if not afterwards. See Michaelis' Comm. on the Laws of Moses, by Dr. Smith.

Ver. 16. Harlots.—[The word zanath, rendered harlots, is here translated 17 And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

18 And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two and the house.
19 And this woman's child died in the night; because she overlaid it.
20 And she arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thy handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.
21 And when I rose in the morning to give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear.
22 And the other woman said, Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And the first said, No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.
23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living.
24 And the king said, Bring me a sword.
25 And they brought a sword before the king.
26 And the king said, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.
27 Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for her bowels were pained upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither thine nor thine, but divide it.
28 Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: for it is the mother thereof.
29 And all Israel heard of the judgment

CHAPTER IV.
1 Solomon's princes. 7 His twelve officers for provision. 20, 24 The peace and largeness of his kingdom. 22 His daily provision. 26 His stables. 29 His wisdom.
SO king Solomon was king over all Israel.
2 And these were the princes which he had; Azariah the son of Zadok the priest, 3 Elihoreph and Ahiah, the sons of Shisha, 4 scribes; Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, the recorder.
4 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the host: and Zadok and Abiathar were the priests:
5 And Azariah the son of Nathan was over the officers: and Zabud the son of Nathan was principal officer, and the king's friend:
6 And Ahishar was over the household: and Adoniram the son of Abda was over the tribute.
7 ¶ And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, which provided victuals for the king and his household: each man his month in a year made provision.
8 And these are their names: <sup>a</sup> The son of Hur, in mount Ephraim:
9 <sup>b</sup> The son of Dekar, in Makaz, and in Shalalim, and Beth-shemesh, and Elon-beth-hanan:
10 <sup>c</sup> The son of Heseb, in Aruboth; to him pertained Sochoh, and all the land of Hepher:
11 <sup>d</sup> The son of Abinadab, in all the region of Dor; which had Taphath the daughter of Solomon to wife:
12 Baana the son of Ahilud; to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, and all Beth-shean, which is by Zartanah beneath Jezreel, from Beth-shean to Abel-meholah, even unto the place that is beyond Jokneam:
13 <sup>e</sup> The son of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead; to him pertained the towns of <sup>f</sup> Jair the son of Manasseh, which are in Gilead; to him also of the nations of Canaan; but they were allowed to marry women from other Pagan nations, upon condition of their giving up idolatry. So Abraham had an Egyptian concubine, and Moses married a Cushite, or Ethiopian; but both gave up the profession of idolatry, as we may reasonably believe was the case with Pharaoh's daughter, who is not in Scripture charged with that offence.
